PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, October 2nd, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Robert Fenesey deceased:

On reading and filing the petition of J. O. Buhn administrator of said estate, setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead, of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof; the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to him granted to sell all of the real estate of which said deceased died seized.

And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate, appear before this Court, on Monday the 30th day of October, 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in the City of Crookston in said County, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said administrator to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies and expenses.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said County.

Dated at Crookston the 2nd day of October A. D. 1893.

By the Court,

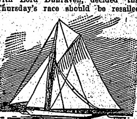
THE VIGILANT WINS

TWO OF THE INTERNATIONAL YACHT RACES SAILED.

The American Craft Easily Defeats Her British Opponent—First Race Captured by Seven Minutes and Second by Thirteen—Another Heat May Settle the Contest.

HIGHLANDS OF NAVESINK, N. J., Oct. 7.—The fact that the race Thursday between the Vigilant and the Valkyrie ended in a fluke was a matter of congratulation to the many observers who watched the race from this point. It was the general opinion that the start should not have been made under the weather conditions prevailing on Thursday, and it must be acknowledged that the seafaring men in this vicinity accurately predicted that there would not be wind enough during the day to make a race.

Saturday was the date fixed for the second of the series of five races, but the cup committee, after conference with Lord Dunraven, decided that Thursday's race should be resailed.



VIGILANT.

Therefore the course of Saturday's race was the same as that sailed Thursday, that is, 15 miles to windward or leeward, and return. This will, with a wind holding from the same direction, make the distance to be covered about 40 miles, the extra 10 miles being added through the yachts being compelled to beat to windward.

Fully as large a fleet of excursion and other boats as was out Thursday followed the racers Saturday, and the early morning indications were that those aboard them would see a race worth looking at. Though the wind was not very strong there were indications that it would breeze up before the hour of the start.

The Start Made.

The start was made at 11:25 with the wind about 17 miles an hour, the Valkyrie having about a length the lead. This position remained unchanged until about noon when the Vigilant made up her lost ground and passed the English yacht. She continued to gain rapidly on the Valkyrie and at 12:30 had a lead of nearly and eighth of a mile. At 12:45 she had increased her lead to a mile and was so far ahead of the Valkyrie that it was impossible to see them both at the same time in the focus of the glass.

At 12:50 the Vigilant set her spinnaker, continuing to increase her lead all the time. At 1:10 the lifesaving station at Long Branch estimated the Vigilant's lead at between two and two and a half miles.

The Valkyrie soon after got into a stronger wind than her opponent and at 1:25 the Vigilant's lead was about a mile. The Vigilant passed the turning boat at 1:50 and was followed nine minutes late by the Valkyrie.

At 3:20 both yachts were making fast time with wind and tide in their favor. The Vigilant was then two and a half miles from the lightship and nearly two miles before the Britisher. The Vigilant held her lead to the end, crossing the line at 3:31 1-2. The Valkyrie finished at 3:39, 7 1-2 minutes behind her American opponent.

Won the Second, Also.

HIGHLANDS OF NAVESINK, Oct. 9.—The second of the international yacht races for America's cup was sailed Monday on a trianglar course and won by the Vigilant by 13 minutes. Each leg of the course was 10 miles long. The first leg was a beat to windward, the second a reach, and the third a run home before the wind.

Supreme Court Meets.

WASHINGTON, Oct 10.—The supreme court of the United States met in October term, all the justices being present. Chief Justice Fuller announced the death of Associate Justice Blatchford in July last, and stated that all orders for the day would stand over. After receiving a number of applicants for admission to practice the court adjourned and repaired in a body to the Wite House to pay their respects to the president.

A Plucky Woman.

PIERRE, S. D. Oct. 9.—Mrs. G. W. Barnes, a lady living 10 miles from Pierre, was waylaid Saturday. A fellow had watched her draw a large sum from the bank and expected to make a good haul. She picked up a board and knocked him senseless from his horse and then proceeded deliberately on her way. The fellow was seriously injured.

Montgomery Went Ashore.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Oct. 8.—While coming into this harbor at 11 p. m., the new United States cruiser Montgomery went ashore on the east edge of Black Ledge, where she remained until 4 o'clock a. m., when she floated at high tide. A diver is now examining her bottom to determine the extent of her injury.

Effect of Paris Life on American Students.

An American artist of considerable reputation, while speaking the other day with reference to the easy going Bohemian habits so common among men in his profession, said: "It is not a pleasant thing to say, but I believe it is true, that a period of two or three years of student life in Paris practically ruins about as many young artists as it benefits. Student life in Europe, and especially in Paris, is full of allurements and temptations which only those capable of great self control are able to resist. It is in its social aspects a delightfully free and easy sort of life, which appeals almost irresistibly to the average young man. It develops the habit of indolence with frightful rapidity, and from indolence it is but a short step to indifference, dissipation and reckless self neglect. Convivial associations and the gay company of a colony made of kindred spirits as bright and magnetic as himself too often put his ambitions to sleep, and he drifts on and on until he becomes a spendthrift and a lounger, if nothing worse. At the end of two or three years he returns to America, his money spent, his health frequently shattered and himself so thoroughly bohemianized that he finds it difficult if not impossible ever to regain anything of the orderly, methodical habit of industry upon which his professional success depends."—New York Herald.

Mr. Labouchere's Fish Story.

If Mr. Henry Labouchere has a habit of getting into trouble, he has also a happy knack of getting out of it. For instance, the other day, after he had printed an important piece of news about the proper way to cook crawfish and a humane reader of Truth expostulated with him about his advice to the cook to cut the live fish in halves, he retorted merrily by expressing the opinion that it is ridiculous sentiment to treat creatures of low or rudimentary organizations as if they had the same susceptibility to pain as a human being, and settled the question finally by telling an anecdote about an angling friend of his who once "caught a perch foul."

The hook pierced the fish's eye. My friend felt that he had not caught the perch according to the rules of the game, so, to compensate him for losing his eye, he put him back into the water. He then baited his hook with the eye and went to work again. Within three minutes he caught that same perch again with his own eye.

This is a capital fish story. We have not heard a better tale in a long while. It is a lie of course, but all fish stories are, and it has the merits of originality and humor. We like Mr. Labouchere the better for such harmless fibs.—New York Times.

Like the Belt of the Summer Girl.

The ancient girdle was used for other material or actual purposes besides that of a receptacle for money. At it were hung the thousand and one odds and ends needed and utilized in every day affairs. The scrivener had his inkhorn and pen attached to it, the scholar his book or books, the monk his crucifix and rosary, the innkeeper his tallies, and everybody his knife. So many and so various were the articles attached to it that the flippant began to poke fun. In an old play there is mention of a merchant who had hanging at his girdle a pouch, a spectacle case, a "punniard," a pen and inkhorn and "a handkercher, with many other trinkets besides, which a merry companion seeing said it was like a haberdasher's shop of small wares." In another early play a lady says to her maid: "Give me my girdle and see that all the furniture be at it. Look that cizars, pincers, the penknife, the knife to close letters with, the bodkin, the earpicker, and the scale be in the case."—Chambers' Journal.

A Handle to His Name.

"I understand," said a pompous employer to one of his clerks, "that you are in the habit of speaking of me by my Christian name?"

"It is possible that I have done so, sir," answered the clerk humbly.

"In future you will use the prefix 'Mr.' when alluding to me. I am 'George' only to my friends. Do not forget hereafter that I have a handle to my name."

"I will try to remember," said the clerk. "I know we always say George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and Tom Palmer, but these are distinguished men, not everyday people, George—excuse me—Mr. Smythe," and the clerk retired to write out his resignation.—Detroit Free Press.

Pigeons Do Not Fly by Sight.

The numerous experiments made by balloonists have proved that pigeons are incapable of flying at any great height. Birds thrown out at 6,000 meters fell like dead, and even at the moderate height of 800 meters pigeons liberated by the balloonist Gaston Tissandier approached the earth in a spiral course. It is evident, hence, that they are not guided wholly by sight. To bring a point 800 miles distant within the range of vision it would be necessary to ascend nearly 20,000 meters. The carrier pigeon, starting on such a journey, must consequently start with faith in the unseen.—Philadelphia Press.

The Fickle and Raging Missouri.

The current of the Mississippi river averages from 3½ to 4 miles an hour in velocity, but a steamboatman on the Missouri would be pretty apt to call this still water, as that stream bowls along under ordinary circumstances at the rate of 8 and 10 miles an hour, and on state occasions it develops the speed of an avalanche. Engineers consider bridging the Missouri a difficult accomplishment, as the swift current is so versatile in its course and ruinous in its velocity that it is impossible to predict where the channel is liable to drift.—Alton Sentinel.

THE BOY IN THE MOW.

There glides through the barn's mammoth door
A sweet scented hilltop of hay;
An athlete, with strength bubbling o'er,
Now flings it in forkfuls away.
Another is stowing it back,
With white pearls of toil on his brow,
And, treading the hay in his track,
Looms faintly the boy in the mow.

Through crevices often can he View, past the old barn wall of brown,
A river that leads to the sea,
A railway that drives to the town.
"Oh, when shall my fortune make hay
In yon fields of splendor, and how?
'Twill wait for full many a day;
I'm only a boy in a mow."

A cloud like a flag from the sky
Is splendidly spread and unrolled;
The sun reaches down from on high
To fringe it with silver and gold.
"Oh, when will heaven's mercy my name
As bright as those colors allow?
But earth has no glory or fame
To waste on a boy in the mow."

A cloud in the west, like a pall,
Creeps upward and hangs in the light;
It carries a gloom over all;
It looks like a part of the night.
With clamor the thunderbolts swarm,
And trees bend in agony now;
"'Tis thus, too, that poverty's storm
Would conquer the boy in the mow!"

The clouds have flown into a dream;
The birds are discoursing in glee.
The smile of the sun is agleam
On river and hilltop and tree.
Look up to the heavens, little lad,
And then to your earth duties bow,
And some day both worlds may be glad
To honor the boy from the mow!
—Will Carleton in Youth's Companion.

A Newsdealer Pays For a Libel.

A libel case somewhat similar to that which Messrs. W. H. Smith successfully defended the other day has just come before one of the correctional courts in Paris. M. de Sesmaisons, a former minister plenipotentiary of the French republic at Hayti, at present residing in Paris, was annoyed at some comments upon his conduct while in America that appeared in the New York Tribune. The article spoke vaguely of his having acquired a certain notoriety and of his being irresponsible for his actions in the eye of the law.

As the New York Tribune has no property in France, M. de Sesmaisons judged it was useless to proceed against that paper, but he decided to indict M. Brontano, the proprietor of the Anglo-American library in the Avenue de l'Opera, where copies of the offending number were sold. The plaintiff asked for 50,000 francs damages.

Without admitting so extravagant a claim, the court condemned the unfortunate news agent, who quite possibly cannot read English, to pay 5,000 francs to the plaintiff, as well as a fine of 100 francs, and to insert the terms of the judgment in any 10 newspapers M. de Sesmaisons may select.—London News.

An Aluminium Bicycle.

In a window on Fulton street there is hung up for the inspection of the passerby a bicycle. It is suspended from a set of scales and the indicator registers the weight of the wheal as 18¼ pounds. This is by far the lightest bicycle which has been put on the market, and it marks another step in the evolution of the old velocipede toward the perfect bicycle. It is made of aluminium, the metal which has so lately become quite general in its use. The cost of the wheel is considerably more than that of the steel ones now in use, but after the novelty has worn off the price will probably be reduced to that of the high grade wheels of today.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Blue Monday.

A great many people have what they call blue Monday—that is, they do not fell so well then as on other days of the week. The cause is found in overeating on Sunday. A good dinner is provided and eaten, and then, instead of taking the customary exercise, the man sits about the house and reads or sleeps. Of course he feels badly the next day. If the same amount of exercise and kind of diet were taken on Sunday as all other days, there would be no such thing as a blue Monday.—Philadelphia Record.

More Than Money.

"Mister," he said to a restaurant man on Randolph street, "I've lost me wallet through your front grating. Kin I go down after it?"

"Boy, don't bother me."

"But I want me wallet."

"I'll bet you didn't have 10 cents in it."

"I know I didn't, but it's de private papers—of no use to any one but the owner—dat I want to recover!"

He was permitted to recover.—Detroit Free Press.

A Greek peasant, living on the island of Egina, recently discovered a magnificent statue buried in the ground, upon which had been a small plantation and which he had cleared. The statue was sold to a bric-a-brac dealer, who sent it to London, where it has just been bought by the British government for the sum of £6,500.

MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

HEART DISEASE 20 YEARS.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

DEAR SIRS: For 20 years I was troubled with heart disease. Would frequently have falling spells and smothering at night. Had to sit up or get out of bed to breathe. Had pain in my left side and back most of the time; at last I became dropsical. I was very nervous and nearly worn out. The least excitement would cause me to faint. I was also much troubled with fluttering. For the last fifteen years I could not sleep on my left side or back until I began taking your New Heart Cure. I had not taken it very long until I felt much better, and I can now sleep on either side or back without the least discomfort. I have no pain, smothering, dropsy, no wind on stomach or other disagreeable symptoms. I am able to do all my own housework without any trouble and consider myself cured.

Elkhart, Ind., 1888. MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

It is now four years since I have taken any medicine. Am in better health than I have been in 40 years. I honestly believe that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure saved my life and made me a well woman. I am now 62 years of age, and am able to do a good day's work.

LOWER FREIGHT RATES.

The action of Elias Steenrrson in making a complaint to the state railroad commission about the exorbitant freight rates charged by the Great Northern railway from points in northern Minnesota to Minneapolis, has raised a storm of applause from one end of the Red River valley to the other. The railroad commission will be certain of one thing, and that is, that the people of this section are getting thoroughly aroused on this question, and that forbearance has ceased to be a virtue.

The complainant in this case, through his attorney, Halvor Steenerson, asks that the rate on wheat be reduced about one-third. The present rate between Crookston and Minneapolis is 16½ cents per hundred pounds, or about 10 cents per bushel. To reduce the rate one-third would still leave the company about 11 cents per hundred. The complainant further alleges that the defendant company has reduced the wages of its employes not less than 20 per cent. and in some cases as much as 40 per cent., and that the price of wheat has fallen about one-third in the last three years, but the freight rate remains the same.

It seems to us the only question to be determined in fixing a freight rate is to establish the lowest tariff that can be charged by the railroad in order to allow its stockholders a fair rate of interest on their money invested. Capital must be considered as well as labor, and we do not want to legislate our railroads into bankruptcy. In order to get at the aforesaid rate we can only take the rate charged by other roads for similar work and make a comparison.

For instance, the rate between Minneapolis and Chicago, some 420 miles, is 10 cents per hundred. So it will be seen that the rate between Crookston and Minneapolis—16½ cents for 300 miles—could be reduced one-third and still be one-third higher than the St. Paul-Chicago rate, in proportion to the difference in distance.

There is no good reason why there should be such a difference in these rates, and the only reason why there is such a difference is simply because of the sharp competition from St. Paul to Chicago.

In 1885 President Hill stated to the Minnesota legislature then in session that he intended to reduce the freight rates each year until he would haul wheat from any part of the Red River valley for 6 or 7 cents per bushel. That was when the legislature was considering railroad legislation. But Mr. Hill has failed to keep his word, although it costs less to transport freight now than then, owing to the increased tonnage which can be drawn by the locomotives now used.

The matter will be thoroughly agitated, and if Mr. Steenerson gets the reduction asked for, it will be a saving of thousands of dollars every year to the farmers of the Red River valley.

THE rumor is that Judge Lochren will be the democratic candidate for governor next campaign. The democrats might do a great deal worse than that, though the judge is not much of a politician. He makes a better judge than he would governor, or than pension commissioner. The bench is his proper sphere.

THE governor has ordered a vote on the question of quartering Polk county at the next election. The scheme is to provide Red Lake Falls, East Grand Forks and McIntosh with a county seat. It strikes us that the schemers have over-shot the mark by asking too much. If they had been content with less they would have been liable to get more.

FRIDAY October 13th, is to be Minnesota day at the World's Fair, and the Minnesota World's Fair Board especially invite every Minnesotian to be present on that day. Governor Nelson, Hon. S. M. Owen, Cyrus Northrup, O. V. Tousley, H. F. Stevens, C. A. Towne and D. A. Monfort are down on the program for addresses, which will be delivered at Festival Hall commencing at 11 o'clock a. m. With Chicago day on the 9th, North Dakota day on the 10th, and Minnesota day on the 13th, this week will be one of unusual interest at the White City.

PRO AND CON.

S. M. Owen Replies to the Caustic Criticism of the Press on the Action of the Board of Regents.

In a letter to Judge McDonald Mr. Owen says: "In answer to your letter, asking for certain facts regarding the attack upon the regents of the state university for going out of the state for stone of which to build the library and chapel on the University campus I will say, with all possible brevity.

The last legislature appropriated $175,000 for a university building to contain a library, reading-room, assembly hall, etc. The building must necessarily be very large, is to be, in fact, 210x135 feet in size. It is to be fire-pool, and so substantial in every way that it ought to last, if built of the right material, 2,000 years. Its front is patterned after and will possess the proportions of the Parthenon, and its walls will all be of stone cut and rubbed down smooth.

By reason of its style of architecture, and the fact that other building on the campus are very dark, it was decided at the outset to build it of light-colored stone. There is no light-colored stone in the state except limestone or granite. The first was rejected for reasons good and sufficient in the case of a building of the character of this one; reasons that might not obtain, however, in buildings not designed to endure so long, and reasons that I do not care to discuss in detail unless compelled to. Besides, not a single instance could be found where the light-colored limestones of the state smoothed and carved as is to be done for this building, nor any evidence that they could be so used. The granite, of which Minnesota has very fine qualities, is too expensive; the building could not be built of it for less than $325,000; some architects say $250,000.

The stone that it was decided to use was a light-colored sandstone. Sandstone, the Kettle River quarries, owned by the Great Northern railroad, was submitted to the regents and strongly urged upon them. It was the only Minnesota stone that was urged, and it was because of the rejection of that particular stone that the regents were viciously attacked by Minneapolis dailies, that were probably compelled in that way to serve their master. The Kettle River stone is very hard and strong; is used largely and acceptably for foundations, for bridge abutments, street curbing, etc., but is rarely used in buildings. In Minneapolis two buildings have been built of it, one a plain, cheap warehouse, the other Holy Rosary church, and both buildings are built of the rough stone. The stone was used in the latter building, I am informed, against the protest of the architect, and because a leasse of the quarry at that time offered to contribute $2,500 to the building if this stone was adopted.

If the taxpayers of the state could see that church 999 per cent of them would vote against its use in the library building, and not one of them would ever forgive the regents if they used it in erecting that building. It was the and very poor mud at that, except in spots, where it is black and other variations of color that makes it look like a crazy quilt. It is a stone that private enterprise, taste or capital would never employ in building a fine building, yet the regents are denounced for not imposing it upon the taxpayers of the state. For themselves the regents would not have used it, nor would a single one of their assailants invested their own money in it. The regents wisely thought that as much consideration was due the state and the university as private parties would give to their own tastes and interests under similar circumstances.

Much talk has been indulged in about the employment of labor in the state. It is provided that all the work, except quarrying stone, will be done in the state, and for the quarrying laborers will get 3½ to 4½ cents a cubic foot, which, in this case, will amount, at the outside figure, to $1,485. The balance of the cost of stone at the quarry will go to the quarry owner. The stone and stone cutting for the building will cost over $62,000; state labor is deprived of only $1,485 of that sum, yet the regents' critics pretend that their attacks are inspired wholly by consideration for un-employed labor. They would have that sum expended in the state even if it resulted in a building that would disgrace the state, dishonor the regents, and make each citizen blush with shame every time he looked upon it.

The stone selected for this building is the Ohio 'cream-puff' sandstone, beautiful and uniform of color, extraordinarily durable, and will make a building that for hundreds of years will be the PRIDE OF THE STATE'S CITIZENS.

It will, too, be a marvelous building for the money it will cost and when erected will so eloquently answer the brutal assailants upon the regents that they will heartily wish they had kept silent.

It may be well to add that a recent careful investigation reveals the startling fact that of the stone used in construction of the buildings in the business portion of Minneapolis 94 per cent is foreign and 6 per cent state stone. There must be good reasons for this, and will suggest to the thoughtful that the regents were justified in being influenced by the same considerations in selecting stone for an important public work that influenced such a large majority of our most prominent citizens in making their private investments. In answer to the last question, I will answer that, so far as I can learn, the stonecutters union, and all other labor interests in the city, endorse the action of the regents."

Per contra, the Architect, Builder and Decorator, says: "The questions at issue between the regents (of the state university) and their critics are two in number, involving, first, the architecture of the building, and, second, the patronage of Minnesota industries. Without at all criticising the design of the architect, which seems good enough to escape all serious criticism, the architect, builder and decorator is of the opinion that in the consideration of plans the board of regents should have provided, in its large expenditure of state money, for the use of Minnesota material and the employment of Minnesota men. The comparative merits of building stone to be found in various parts of this state and the stone found in Ohio are not sufficiently diverse to justify the rejection of either on this ground, and it would certainly not have been a matter of much difficulty to conform the architecture of the structure which it was intended to erect to the adaptability of local building materials. We do not agree with the prominent St. Paul architect who said that the regents were justified in rejecting Minnesota stone for purely artistic reasons. Several varities of the Minnesota stone are of splendid quality and increasing popularity, and compete successfully with the product of the Eastern states which has come into general use."

An Ordinance.

An ordinance prohibiting the riding of bicycles, tricycles, or other wheeled vehicle along or upon any sidewalk within the corporate limits of the City of Crookston.

The City Council of the City of Crookston do ordain:

Sec. 1. No person shall ride any bicycle, tricycle or other wheeled vehicle along or upon any sidewalk or sidewalks within the corporate limits of the City of Crookston.

Provided, that nothing in this ordinance shall apply to the use of any invalid chair or other wheeled vehicle designed for the use of cripples or invalids, by any person who on account of bodily infirmity or disease is obliged to use such invalid chair or other wheeled vehicle as a means of locomotion.

Sec. 2. That any person convicted of a violation of this ordinance shall be punished by a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $25 and costs of prosecution, and may be imprisoned until such fine and costs are paid, not exceeding thirty days.

Sec. 3. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage, approval, publication and recording.

Amended by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Watts, that the sidewalks in the Fifth ward be excepted from the ordinance.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA

Says HENRY HUDSON, of the James Smith Woolen Machinery Co., Philadelphia, Pa., who certifies as follows:

"Among the many testimonials which I see in regard to certain medicines performing cures, cleansing the blood, etc., none impress me more than my own case. Twenty years ago, at the age of 18 years, I had swellings come on my legs, which broke and became running sores. Our family physician could do me no good, and it was feared that the bones would be affected. At last, my good old to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I took three bottles, the sores healed, and I have not been troubled since. Only the scars remain, and the memory of the past, to remind me of the good Ayer's Sarsaparilla has done me. I now weigh two hundred and twenty pounds, and am in the best of health. I have been on the road for the past twelve years, have noticed Ayer's Sarsaparilla advertised in all parts of the United States, and always take pleasure in telling what good it did for me."

Mother Urged Me

How to See the World's Fair

Assuming that many of our readers will be able to spend only a week at the Fair, the following program is offered by a sight-seer of much experience: Devote the first day to a view of the grounds, approaching if possible, by boat from Chicago, and landing at the great pier. Start for the Manufactures Building, passing the Statue of the Republic, around the foot of the Basin, to the noble Agricultural Building, then Machinery Hall, the Administration Building, State Buildings, Transportation and Horticultural Buildings. The second day can be wholly spent in the Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building, and even then, only a general impression can be carried away. The third day can be given to a tour of Machinery Hall, the Mines, Electricity and Transportation Buildings. The fourth day spend in the Building of Agriculture, where are eighteen acres of exhibits, the fifth day one should visit the Women's and Children's Buildings, where a few hours may be pleasantly spent. The greater part of this day should be devoted to the magnificent displays of painting, engraving and sculpture in the Fine Arts Building. The sixth day we will spend in a tour of the Midway Plaisance, where are many curious attractions. In the afternoon one may take a farewell walk through the main grounds, and we have seen something of the Columbian Exposition. To arrive in Chicago in good trim for such a week, buy your ticket over the Burlington Route. Your home ticket agent can supply you or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, St. Paul, Minn.

BIMETALLISTS MEET.

Pan-American Convention In Session at St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 4.—The Pan-American bimetallic convention met here at 10 a. m. Governor Lewelling of Kansas was chosen permanent chairman, and committees appointed. At the afternoon session the committee on resolutions handed in their report. After reciting in the preamble that the business of the country was paralyzed for the lack of money and the condition of the country was due to vicious financial legislation, it was resolved that free and unlimited coinage of silver was a necessity paramount. The repeal of the Sherman law was opposed and congress was called upon to urge the president to call an international convention to deal with bi-metallism. The further issue of govenment bonds was denounced as the aim and end sought in the present calamity by Wall street. The general government was urged to improve the great natural highways of trade and a closer relation and an equitable plane of carrier rates between states was advocated. The congressmen who have stood by their ante-election pledges to silver were extended hearty greetings.

In the evening the leaders of the convention held an executive session at the Lindell hotel, at which there was a free exchange of opinion and politics were discussed from every standpoint.

FEELS CONFIDENT.

Voorhees Says the Silver Repeal Bill Will Pass.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—Senator Voorhees maintains the utmost confidence in the ultimate passage of unconditional repeal, but declines to fix a date. To Secretary Gresham, who solicited the senator's views, Mr. Voorhees said he had full confidence in the passage of the bill. Next Friday the senator will try to enforce continuous sessions. This will be done by voting down motions for adjournment. Senators Palmer and Cullom say also that unconditional repeal will pass.

There seems to be very little change in the silver situation. The repealers insist that their programme will be carried out. The silver men drew considerable consolation from the story given out by The World that Gorman was playing false to the administration, and that there had been a split between Carlisle and himself.

Senator Washburn had a talk with Gorman, and the latter evidenced no disposition to go back on his original position, though he was vexed at the newspaper report. Democratic senators favoring repeal say there is nothing new.

Bismarck Better.

LONDON, Oct. 5.—The Berlin correspondent of The Morning Post denies the rumors that Prince Bismarck's condition is alarming. He declares that Dr. Schweininger is hopeful that the prince will be able to start for Friedrichsruhe soon.

His Condition Dangerous.

PARIS, Oct. 10.—The condition of Marshal McMahon, ex-president of France, who has been ill for some time, has suddenly become worse, and is now believed to be dangerous.

Heavy Liabilities.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—Canda & Kane, dealers in builders' materials, have made an assignment. It is believed that the liabilities will amount to $450,000; assets, about $500,000.

Argentine Is Quiet.

BUENOS AYRES, Oct. 5.—The news of the capture of General Roca of Rosario is received with general satisfaction. The country is now quiet.

DREAMS THAT COME.

STRANGE FANTASIES OF THE DAY TROUBLE US IN SLEEP.

A Few Examples of Disturbed Slumber That Illustrate a Bright Remark Made by an Illustrious Poet—Remarkable Experiences In Sleep.

A lawyer who had been overworked rose in his sleep, went into the hall of his house and discharged a pistol. The household hurried to the place and found him at the head of the stairway, awake, but much bewildered. He had dreamed of burglars and had gone to attack them. One member of the family slept through the noise. When he came into the dining room—before he had heard of the events of the night—he complained that his sleep had been much disturbed. He had dreamed that he had been condemned to be shot, that he had been led to the place of execution and had fallen senseless when the guns were fired.

A lady dreamed that a man came into her room, poured some water into a basin, carried the splashing water to her bedside and began to sprinkle it over her. She awoke and heard a loud splashing. At first she was motionless with fear, but presently she lighted a candle and went to the basin, where she found a mouse making frantic efforts to get out of the water.

Another dreamed that she had a severe earache, that she rose, unlocked a door that separated her room from one in which two children slept and went to a shelf where was a lotion which she applied to her ear. When she awoke, she found herself in her own bed and without pain. The door was still locked, but in a few minutes one of the children began to cry that his ear ached, and she rose and went to the shelf for the lotion.

A young man dreamed that he was in his office, busy with a troublesome estimate, when a woman came in with a screaming baby and began to walk rapidly up and down the room, so that it was impossible for the calculator to remember his figures. Presently the woman thrust the child into his arms, and he was so startled by this that he awoke, but the screams still troubled his ears, for a mother in a neighboring room was walking about vainly trying to quiet a crying child.

Another incident appears to be a case of thought transference. Several years after the death of her husband, a widow, lying awake one night, recalled vividly some scenes of her husband's last illness. Presently her daughter, who was beside her, awoke and said, "Oh, mamma, I have been going over in my dreams all the scenes of papa's illness." She then told her dream, in which the scenes were almost the counterpart of those that had been recalled by her mother.

Dreamers sometimes answer questions and carry on more or less coherent conversations.

A lady had a summer cottage on an island in Muskoka. One night her sons were stormstaid on the mainland, and a young English visitor went to sleep full of apprehension that Indians might visit the house while their protectors were absent.

In the night the hostess was suddenly roused by some one clutching her arm, and when she opened her eyes she saw her guest standing by the bedside.

"Oh, Mrs. Laughton, Mrs. Laughton," exclaimed the girl in a hoarse whisper, "there's a man at the window—an Indian. He's gone to get something to climb in by."

The next moment Eva was fumbling about on the floor.

"What are you doing?" asked Mrs. Laughton.

"I have some liniment in my valise," was the answer. "I'm going to get it out, and when he puts his head through the window again I'll throw it in his eyes."

Mrs. Laughton, who was not nervous, began to laugh, but Eva paid no attention and presently asked, "Where's the button hook?"

"What do you want it for?"

"Why, Mrs. Laughton," said Eva aloud, and in a very indignant tone, "do you think I would allow myself to be seen anywhere with my shoes unbuttoned? No man would respect that kind of girl."

In the morning when Mrs. Laughton awoke and looked across the room to Eva's bed she saw the girl sitting up, gazing with dismay at her crookedly buttoned shoes in which she had slept. She had no recollection of the remarks she had made in the night, and it was evident that she had been asleep all the time.

One night in camp I heard a peculiar sound near the middle of the tent, and by the dim light I saw one of the campers apparently trying to climb up the tentpole.

"What are you doing?" I asked.

"There's a snake in my bed," she answered, "so I'm going to sleep up there."

"Up there?"

"Yes, why not? It will be more comfortable."

Then, with a sudden change of tone, she exclaimed, "I forgot to say my prayers." But instead of kneeling she picked her way through the tent to the foot of one of the beds and lay there till morning. She did not remember the conversation of the night, but told us that she had a habit of talking in her sleep, and that she had often conversed with her sisters while she was sleeping soundly.—M. Bourchier Sanford in Kate Field's Washington.

Summary Treatment.

Old Uncle Gabe's young masters love to mystify him with long words, which he will never own that he does not understand.

One day one of them said to him: "Uncle Gabe, if you and your wife were walking down the street, and a [illegible] should come up and recognize you, what would you do?"

"I'd knock him down promptly," returned Uncle Gabe.—Harper's Bazar.

PHOTOGRAPHS IN MULTIPLE.

Tiny Portraits Turned Out by Thousands to Satisfy a Fad.

Hidden under the staircase of a frame building on Pennsylvania avenue is an oddity in the shape of a photographer's shop. Nobody ever goes there to have his picture taken, and yet the business is a profitable one. For one thing, the proprietor has a long lease of the premises at a rental of only $2 a month. His establishment amounts to nothing more than a large closet, which is utilized as a darkroom for work. There is nothing to be seen of screens, skylights, shabby furniture, which looks as good as new when taken by the camera, or the instruments for holding the head steady, which are so suggestive of torture to children. The words, "Look pleasant, please," are never uttered in this secluded studio.

In fact, the photographer himself is very rarely to be found on the premises. People send in pictures of themselves to be reproduced by an extraordinary process of multiplication. They must be cabinet sized photographs. He has an instrument which looks very much like a stereoscope of the sort that one looks through at photographs, only about three times as big. In place of the part for the eyes there is a small camera, and a few inches in front of the latter is a kind of frame in which the cabinet portrait to be reproduced is put. The camera, though such a little one, has 88 lenses. One might compare it to the eye of a bee, which is multiple in like fashion.

It is a snap camera and makes 88 miniature copies of the cabinet portrait at one shot on a single negative. From the negative the pictures are printed off in sheets of 88 distinct photographs each. It does not take long to produce them in large quantities at this rate, and so the operator finds a profit in selling them at the price of $1 for 50. He sells 100 for $2, 500 for $7, or 1,000 for $14. It is a very cheap way to procure a lot of counterfeit presentments of one's self. A good many people order 500 or 1,000. At the time of the inauguration such photographs of Mr. Cleveland were worn as badges by some of the visiting political clubs, with a ribbon fastening each one to the buttonhole of the wearer.

The back of these little photographs, which are a novelty, are spread with dextrine. It serves as a sort of mucilage, so that the pictures can be licked like postage stamps and stuck upon anything. Commercial travelers affix them to the corners of their "advance cards" sometimes, which they mail a week or two ahead to firms in towns which they expect to visit shortly. Thus the recipients get a notion of the appearance of the agent before he comes along if they were not previously acquainted with him or are agreeably reminded of his physiognomy. In the same manner theatrical people stick them on their letters, and various other professional persons adopt similar practices. In fact, it is quite a fad.—San Francisco Examiner.

One of Ralph Waldo Emerson's Stories.

Mr. Emerson himself had a story—I forget whether I heard it in a lecture or in conversation—about a New England come outer who went into a hatshop and selected for himself a costly hat. The hat was put up and the dealer supposed he was to be paid, but the man whom he had thought to be a purchaser said simply: "Oh, I pay nothing for anything. I am the man who does not believe in money." The poor dealer had a note to meet at the bank that day and hardly knew how to do it. He looked with dumb delight upon his customer and said: "I wish to God, sir, that nobody else believed in money! Take the hat, with my thanks to you for coming for it."

Mr. Emerson would say this was all spontaneous—it was natural on the part of the customer and on the part of the trader. But when, the next day, another man who had heard the story came into the shop and selected for himself his hat and said that he did not believe in money, the dealer refused the imitator where he had accepted so readily the inventor. And Emerson drew the moral from the story which I want to draw now. A prophet who speaks the word that comes to him from the living God speaks, I may say, with the living God's power. But he who imitates the prophet has no spell.—Edward E. Hale's Address.

Engagements and Marriages.

The following figures have been compiled from the combined recollections of 82 maiden ladies and 45 military officers, all resident in the county town of one of the home counties. Out of the 1,540 engagements to marry which their joint reminiscences present, 46, or about 3 per cent, ended in lunacy, incarceration or decease of one of the parties; 385, or 25 per cent, were broken off at the instance of the girl, and 262, or about 17 per cent, by the man; 169, as near as possible 11 per cent, were interfered with by friends; 154, exactly 10 per cent, came to an end for reasons not made public; 185, or about 12 per cent, faded away without incident in the lapse of years; 108, say 7 per cent (not included in any previous category), led to actions for breach of promise. The remainder, a pettifogging 15 per cent, resulted in marriage.—London Letter.

A Young Woman's Reasoning.

"I am told, dear, that Jack Rattlepate spent most of his vacation in your back parlor. Aren't you giving him rather a dangerous amount of encouragement?"

"Why, no, dearest; he is merely a boy. To be sure, he is a year older than I, but I shall be out next winter, while Jack has two years more in college, and it will be six years after that before he can earn much of anything. So practically he is six years younger than I, and that makes him 12. It is absurd to talk of encouraging a boy so young as that."—Harper's Bazar.

MEN WHO HAD LUCK.

STORIES CIRCULATED IN A GROUP OF TACOMA SPORTS.

Most of Them Were Told by Professional Gamblers and May or May Not Be True, but an Affidavit Is Required For the Yarn About the Gold Seeker.

"Well, that was luck."

The speaker was one of a group of half a dozen men who were standing on Pacific avenue puffing away at Havanas and talking just to pass time away and to clear their throats. The conversation had been about the livery stable man, Martin, of this city, who had fallen heir to $350,000 three years ago and didn't find it out until a few days ago.

"Talk about luck," said one of the group, who was a gambler, "we see plenty of it. Do you know that one day last week a man entered one of our gambling houses with a nickel and won out $400 in three hours? He had gone clean busted the night before and found the nickel in an out of the way corner in his room the next morning.

"That blokie went to the gambling house with the intention of placing his 5 cent piece on the number 5. He got into the room when the roulette ball was whizzing around on its tour of numbers. He rushed to the table and got down his nickel on the five just as the game runner shouted 'All down!' In a few seconds the ball started on its 'rear end' bouncing, and in a few seconds more the man shouted 'Five!' That gave the man with the nickel $1.75 for his 5 cents. Then he put $1 on No. 17, and that number came up, giving him $35 more. He continued to play with varying luck until in three hours he had won $400. And the next day he was broke again. He borrowed a nickel and tried the game again, but it didn't go."

"I can tell a story of a man who was lucky," said a business man. "In the early days of the gold excitement in California, there came into San Diego a man who was ragged and sick almost to death. He was taken in hand and fed and fixed up. Then he told a story of a wonderful find of gold he had made. It was only a few days off, he said, and he would take a party to the place if they would outfit.

"Several men who heard the story of the great gold in the mountains that was theirs to go after got up a party of 50. The start was made with that man as leader. After a few days' travel it became evident that the man had forgotten the way. They traveled on, trusting to luck, however. Indians were hostile at the time, and they started in to mow the gold hunters. They picked off one after another with their bullets. A score were thus taken off. Then a fever struck the party, and 11 more went the way of death.

"By this time the 19 survivors were crazy with rage. They had been 14 days out and were traveling in the most arid country. Food was growing less and less, and death faced everybody. On the afternoon of the fourteenth day the leader, who had caused so much misery, was given three days more to find his gold 'find.' If he was not successful by that time, he was to hang.

"Well, the three days had almost passed, and still there was no sign of the find. The last hour was almost up. It seemed that the man must hang. There were only five minutes more, now two minutes, now one minute, now a half minute—then came his luck. Just as the time was up for the hanging that man dropped dead."

"I don't see how he was lucky," put in the gambler who had told the first story.

"Why," said the business man, "he was lucky because if he hadn't died he would have been hanged."

Another gambler told how a few days ago a green Swede who knew nothing about the game, but determined to try his luck, had won nearly $1,000. He had been an onlooker once or twice and seen big winnings. He went to the roulette wheel with $20, and in a few hours he had won out $800. It seemed that no matter what number he put chips on—and he played recklessly, as all new players do—it came up every time. That was pure luck. The man played no combinations or "arrangements," because he was as green as grass and knew nothing about the game.

"I have a friend," spoke up one of the group, who is connected with the city government, "who by the merest luck made a discovery that is netting him millions. His name is Perkins, and a few years ago back in Minnesota he made his discovery. He was a traveling man for a grocery firm, and while walking to a train to go from one country town to another one day he whittled a stick.

"He had whittled the stick in a triangular shape. On the train the idea struck him that the shape would be just what was wanted for railroad spikes. The square spikes in vogue were not the right thing because they split the grain of the green ties when driven into them, and when dry the wood shrank away from them. The triangle shaped spike would not split the grain, and subsequent shrinkage would be done away with. Perkins submitted his discovery to Pullman, and now the spikes are being made by millions at Pullman, Ills., making millions for Perkins and Pullman."

Another gambler here chimed in with the statement that during the past week a gambler from Seattle had won $2,800 at faro in Tacoma rooms in two sittings. Both sittings occupied 18 hours, and the first sitting resulted in the winning of $1,800 and the second $1,000. During the latter game the man was out nearly the whole $1,800 he had won at sitting No. 1, but he picked up and won big money. "I suppose he has gone back to Seattle with his dough," said the gambler, "as I have not seen him for some days."—Tacoma News.

A "HOW" FOR MEN'S CLOTHES.

Pointers For Brushing and Folding Coats and Trousers.

He always looked neat and tidy, although an active business man. The ubiquitous reporter ventured to ask him how he did it.

"I brush them every night," said he, "but whisk brooms simply ruin clothes."

"You should have a good bristle brush, not too stiff. Then brush as often and as much as you like, and your clothes will look the better and wear the better for it.

"I have passed through the period of limited means with which to purchase clothing, and therefore know what economy in this sense means. Yet I always managed to dress well. I brushed my clothes every night, hung up the coat on two pegs instead of one, folded the trousers in three, the vest in two, and laid the trousers on the chair and the vest on the trousers.

"I do pretty much the same at present. When I take off a pair of trousers, I stretch them a bit with my hands after folding them once with the crease in front, and then lay them out full length on the shelf, or perhaps I fold them in three and lay them on the chair. I turn the coats inside out when I lay them away—not the sleeves, of course. I let them hang straight inside and fold the coat once.

"Coats that I wear frequently I keep hanging on a wire frame. I do the same with the dress suit coat, though the trousers of the dress suit I lay out full length, with the crease in front.

"A man can, by taking a little care of his clothes, dress well, though he is not in independent circumstances financially. But, after all, the great thing is in wearing clean linen and having the shoes polished. The finest clothing in the world won't make a man look well if his collar or cuffs are soiled.

"On the other hand, if the linen is clean and fresh, if the clothes are well brushed and if there is a flower in the buttonhole one always looks presentable. I don't have my clothes pressed by the tailor, not often at least. I think it is the dude that does that most, or perhaps the man who only has two suits and wants to appear something that he is not. Such a man will be found sending his clothes to the pressers every other day.

"Whenever a garment gets spotted I have it cleaned. Then of course it gets a good pressing, but that is often enough for the iron."

How to Wash Lace.

Cover a bottle with fine white flannel and tack the lace smoothly and evenly upon it, fastening down every little point. Shake the bottle in lukewarm water and suds until the lace is clean, and rinse in the same way in clear water. Put it in the sun to dry and dip it in starch. Then wrap cambric about it and put it again in the open air to dry. When quite dry, untack the lace. It will need no ironing.

How to Cure Sunstroke.

Remove the patient to a cool and shady place where there is plenty of fresh, pure air. Strip the clothing to the waist and place the sufferer in a recumbent position. Pour cold water (ice water) upon the head and chest and wrists until consciousness returns. Apply ice to the head and rub the body with it, but if the skin is cold no ice should be applied. When practicable, the patient should be put into a bath at 70 degrees to reduce the temperature. In heat exhaustion stimulants should be given freely, and if the temperature is below normal, as shown by the skin being cold and clammy, the hot bath should be used. Ammonia and water may be given if necessary. The subject of sunstroke is liable to a second attack and should do no mental work for months and keep from all excitement.

One Australian Society.

From the very tasteful little leaflet containing the "Second Annual Review" of the Dawson Street Baptist society of Ballarat, Victoria, we glean the following notes of interest: Of the membership all but six are church members, 16 having been baptized this year. The contributions have nearly doubled this year. Three regular cottage meetings and a weekly service at the reformatory have been carried on by the lookout committee, help also having been rendered a gospel mission and a Chinese mission. The tract and visiting committee has 36 members engaged in the work who visit 490 homes weekly. Twenty-six parcels of clothing and large quantities of provisions have been distributed by this committee.

The missionary committee provides for the entire support of a missionary in India. The Sunday school missionary of the society has brought 80 children into the Sunday school, and much other more or less unreportable work has been faithfully done by these model Endeavorers. This "review" also contains warm commendation of the society by both the pastor, Rev. Thomas Porter, and the Sunday school superintendent.

Pleasant Words For Endeavorers.

Such a tour of the world as Dr. Clark has made is a memorable and cheering sign of the times. It is one of a thousand proofs that there are now no foreign lands and that there can be no more hermit nations. The world hereafter must be healed or poisoned very much as a whole. Let us rejoice in the assured conviction that Dr. Clark's work in the Y. P. S. C. E. is helping in a priceless way to heal the world. He has nowhere taught any erratic or perversive doctrine, but has borne faithful witness to the organizing and redemptive truths and institutions of a scholarly and evangelical faith and life. After their prolonged fatigues and perils of travel let us welcome home Dr. and Mrs. Clark not merely as Americans, but as crowned cosmopolitans of Christian Endeavor. God grant that the hands of the young Christians of all nations may be so locked together around the planet as to draw the whole world into His bosom and make the sound of His heart beats the marching song of all the ages.—Rev. Joseph Cook.

ONE CURE FOR INSOMNIA.

A Man From New York State Took a Little Active Exercise on Horseback.

"I once was a sufferer from insomnia," said a dentist who lives in one of the small villages of the state, as he sat talking with other men in the sitting room of an up town hotel, "but I got rid of the trouble."

"What did you take for it?"

"Bucking pony."

"Tell us about that, please."

"Well, you see, there was nothing the matter with me only I couldn't sleep. The doctor looked me over and said I wasn't suffering from any disease that he could detect, but all the same I could get only a few catnaps every night, and I felt that I would go crazy if such a condition of affairs continued much longer. A wise friend of mine advised me to try horseback exercise. Just at that time a man had brought to the village a string of ponies from the west. As the ponies were wild they were offered for sale cheap. I bought one. He was such a sleepy looking animal that we called him Rip Van Winkle. After we knew him better we dropped part of the name and called him plain Rip. The first ride I took on him furnished excitement for the whole village. Two men helped me to saddle and mount him in the stable. When the door was opened he shot out into the street like a streak of lightning.

"He ran full against the fence opposite the stable and broke several pickets. Then he reared up on his hind legs and came near throwing me over backward. Next he tried to stand on his head, but I yanked him back on his feet and drove the spurs into him. He started to run then, and I let him go as fast as he could leg it until we got to the Methodist church at the end of the street. A temperance meeting was being held in the church and the door was open. Before I could stop the pony we were in the church and half way up the aisle. Women screamed and fainted.

"Some of the men led Rip back into the street. I didn't dare to get off his back. When the men let go of the bridle he began to buck, and for a few minutes I thought my neck would be broken. He would go at a gallop when he went at all, but he would stop now and then to indulge in some bucking. Presently he changed his tactics and went from one street to another, across lots, jumping fences, turning up flower beds, damaging gardens and keeping me busy dodging the branches of fruit trees. The next street led to a turnpike, along which I spurred him for miles until he was covered with foam and nearly tired out.

"He seemed to be docile when I got him back to the stable. Next day, however, he was nearly as bad as when I first rode him, and every day for a fortnight I was obliged to race him along the turnpike several miles. My! my! How he did buck! I was so lame at the end of two weeks that I could scarcely walk to my office, but I could sleep. A few minutes after I got into bed at night I was sleeping soundly, and I awoke every morning thoroughly refreshed."

"Do you still ride the pony?"

"No. By the time I was cured of sleeplessness I had broken Rip to ride, and I sold him for double the sum I had paid for him. My advice to anybody who is suffering from insomnia is to get a bucking pony and ride as fast as he can. If no necks are broken, both man and pony will be benefited by the treatment."—New York Tribune.

A Big Livery Bill.

A Bangor man who sent his office boy to return a hired team to a stable received several days after a bill for the board of the horse and another bill for the hire of the team for the time intervening. The stupid boy took the team to the wrong stable. The man said he wouldn't mind so much, but there seemed to be no limit to the number of cigars he is compelled to pay for at the instance of jeering friends.—Exchange.

Will Keep on Endeavoring.

Some apprehension is expressed in England lest the Endeavor society should become identified with the Boys' Brigade and similar movements which are denounced in many quarters in England as fostering the military spirit and as tending purely to secularism. While the Endeavor movement sympathizes with every good cause our friends in England and America need have no fear that it will not keep strictly to the legitimate religious and spiritual purposes for which it was organized and in keeping to which it has been so blessed.

IN THE METROPOLIS.

CITIZENS OF NEW YORK MAKING PLANS FOR THE FUTURE.

Improvements on a Gigantic Scale Projected—Hundreds of Millions of Dollars to Be Spent In Beautifying the Chief City of the Continent.

Much has been said from time to time of the absence of public spirit, of local pride and of neighborhood feeling in New York. Even the men who have made great fortunes here do not seem to have any regard for the city that has given them their opportunities for achieving wealth. "Men do not understand the causes of their success," said a speaker of the board of trade recently in commenting upon the difficulty in arousing public interest here in the movement for the improvement of the Erie canal, on which so much of the prosperity of the city depends. The lack of public spirit was signally illustrated in the half hearted way in which the business men entered into the movement to secure the World's fair for New York. Chicago was a blaze of enthusiasm on the subject, but New York entered into the competition in a listless, don't care sort of way, which naturally resulted in Chicago carrying off the prize.

The fact is that New York is a city of markets, of ships, of shops, of hotels and of tenement houses, but not of homes. The rich men may have mansions here, but their homes are in their country houses. The people who live in flats and tenement houses are engaged in a struggle for a bare existence, and have not the time or disposition to give much thought or care for the city. The diversity of races and languages represented in the population serves only to separate the people more and make them regard the city with utter indifference.

But there is reason for believing that this state of things is gradually growing better. There are evidences of increased public spirit, of a greater pride in the city and of a larger interest in her development and improvement. Great schemes of public improvement have been projected or begun. Millions have recently been expended in the acquisition of new parks, and twice lately when it was proposed to do something that would injure Central park there was an exhibition of aroused public opinion that prevented the outrages and would have done credit to a much smaller but more enthusiastic city.

Rich men are now contributing a liberal portion of their wealth to enterprises that will increase the glory of the metropolis. Columbia college is being rapidly developed into a great university. A magnificent cathedral has been started. A spacious botanical garden is to be established. A fine aquarium is to take the place of Castle Garden on the Battery. A splendid speedway for horses is to be built. The city is to erect an immense municipal building, which it is proposed shall be a notable architectural addition to the metropolis. The present city hall is to be given to the trustees of the Tilden trust and made the home of a $3,000,000 library.

The art and natural history museums are being rapidly developed and will soon take rank among the best in the world. Monuments and statues are being multiplied, and eight years after his death the $500,000 tomb of General Grant is approaching completion.

But in other and perhaps more interesting ways is the revival of public spirit in New York being manifested. Business men are showing an increased interest in the good government of the city and in its improvement in little things as well as great. Other cities might indeed copy with advantage some of the methods of the organizations that have been formed here for the public weal.

The City Improvement society has been formed and has started out to investigate the various complaints of citizens and to secure, if possible, better pavements, better street cleaning and similar improvements in parks, bridges and streets of the city. Lately a municipal art society has been organized by leading artists, architects and others with a view of making the city more beautiful. They seek to improve the architecture of the public buildings, to secure artistic decoration within them and to prevent the erection of inferior statues and other inartistic structures. Another society is engaged in marking with bronze tablets the places of historical interest. Others of a more philanthropical nature are endeavoring to better the lives and condition of the tenement house population.

The women have organized a health protective association, and are endeavoring to institute reforms that shall decrease the death rate and make New York a better city to live in. The latest reform which they have taken up is that of securing a health regulation requiring the removal of the refuse of the 60,000 horses in the city of New York. The physicians comprising the Academy of Medicine have lately been acting with vigor and courage to secure improved quarantine protection and a purified water supply. The chamber of commerce and the board of trade—the mouthpieces of the merchants and bankers—have lately exhibited increased activity and exercised a wider influence. All these things certainly indicate that New Yorkers are beginning to wake up and to show a livelier interest in the welfare of the city.

Perhaps the fact that other cities are getting closer to her in the competition for business has something to do with this. It is beginning to dawn upon her citizens that unless she can unite with Brooklyn, bridge and tunnel the North river, throw more bridges over the East river, get rapid transit from city hall to Westchester county and institute other measures of public improvement she is liable to lose her commercial supremacy.—New York Cor. Baltimore Sun.

FOR STUBBORN NEURALGIA.

A New and Successful Treatment Devised by Two Belgian Doctors.

Neuralgia usually yields to the ordinary means of treatment, and the administration of quinine, if the disorder has a malarial origin, has cured many cases. Electricity also gives good results. There are, nevertheless, special cases that cannot be relieved by any of these remedies, and such sufferers will be interested in a method of treatment reported in the New York Herald's European edition as having been remarkably efficacious in the hands of two Belgian physicians, more particularly in treating neuralgia of the face.

In a very stubborn case of facial neuralgia M. Glorieux of Brussels, after having tried in vain all the forms of treatment usually given under such circumstances, conceived the idea of trying hypodermic injections of phosphate of soda and obtained a most favorable result, as the patient, who had been tortured with neuralgia for two years, was radically cured.

M. Crocq, Jr., of Brussels, who is the first to have used hypodermic injections of phosphate of soda for neuralgia, has had also excellent results from this treatment in cases that had resisted every form of medication, including electricity. For these injections M. Crocq no longer uses the solution of phosphate of soda in cherry laurel water recommended by M. Glorieux, which occasions a burning pain that is not to be left out of consideration, but a solution of the salt in slightly alcoholized, sterilized water, of which the following is the formula: Phosphate of soda, 2 grams; alcohol, 5 grams; sterilized water, 100 grams. He injects each day one cubic centimeter and rises to three, at which point he remains until recovery.

MM. Crocq and Glorieux are the first to admit that this treatment is no more infallible than any other and may fail completely. Nevertheless the cases of recovery seem to show that it is a most valuable resource in stubborn cases of facial neuralgia.

An Unnecessary Disfigurement.

As women grow toward middle age they are apt to allow the stomach to assume undue prominence and thus destroy the grace of their appearance. This is quite unnecessary, according to a writer in The Farm Journal, and may be avoided by the daily practice of lifting the chest and holding it well upward, drawing in the abdomen so that a line dropped from the chin to the ground would hang exactly straight and not be pushed outward. This will be troublesome and awkward at first, but will soon give a feeling of strength to the chest and stomach and improve the health and appearance. A decided improvement in carriage and walk might be made by walking some each day with a weight poised on the head, so that only the correct carriage of the body keeps it from falling off.

A Preventive For Pimples.

From a well known actress comes the following, which will be hailed with gratitude by any woman who is the victim of that unsightly affliction, a pimple: "I can truthfully say that this is a preventive as well a remedy, and I speak from experience as to its efficacy. As we all know, pimples make their appearance usually on the face and neck—just where their presence is the most conspicuous. Now, any one troubled with these unsightly blemishes should avoid bathing in cold water. Take plenty of hot baths and give the eruptions a chance to come out on the body if they must come out at all. Wash the face but once a day, and then in hot water, wiping it very gently."

Art Instruction.

An artist had sold a picture for an exorbitant price and the purchaser sued to recover. The attorney for the purchaser was making the artist uncomfortable by his questions.

"Now, sir," he said in that pleasant, ingratiating manner of lawyers with a witness, "do you think anybody could see beauty in that picture?"

"Some persons certainly could," replied the artist.

"You think the initiated in technical matters might have no difficulty in understanding your work?"

"I am sure they would not."

"Do you think you could make me see any beauty in that picture?" this most superciliously.

"Probably not now, sir"—and the artist was most humble—"but once I could have done so easily."

"Now, sir, how is that? I don't understand you. Explain, if you please."

"That's quite easy, sir. I could have done it simply by employing you as my counsel in this case."

Courtesy Among the Swedes.

The Swedes are a quiet, taciturn people. There is no jostling even among the lowest classes. When a train leaves a platform or a steamboat a pier, the lookers on lift their hats to the departing passengers and bow to them, a compliment which is returned by the passengers. You are expected to lift your hat to the shabbiest person you meet in the street, and to enter a shop, office or bank with the hat on is considered a bad breach of good manners. In retiring from a restaurant you are expected to bow to the occupants. Bowing and hat lifting is so common that the people seem to move around more slowly than elsewhere, in order to observe the courtesy.

The Guest Chamber.

A pretty little trifle for the guest chamber seen at the woman's exchanges carries with it a hint that should not be overlooked.

It is a card about the size of a page of note paper, usually rough surfaced and ragged edged, with a border or headpiece of delicately painted flowers or leaves, and following a suitable illuminated quotation is written in graceful text down the card the three words "Breakfast," "Luncheon" and "Dinner." Space is left after each to fill in the time of serving each meal, and the loitering or careless guest is thus prettily reminded that system must prevail even when veiled and adorned with hospitality. A further bit of useful information is conveyed from the bottom of the card where the mail hours are duly recorded.

It is really the exceptional guest chamber that considers all but the toilet necessities of its occupants. To find one with books, bed candle and writing materials is a boon, and when, as was the case recently in a suburban residence, to these comforts were added a suitably stocked workbasket for the taking of the stitch in time, and a time table conspicuously posted of the train service to and from town, [illegible]

GULF COAST STORM WORST EVER KNOWN THERE.

Loss of Life Estimated at Over 2,000 and Property Damage Placed at about $5,000,000—Survivors Left In Destitute Condition Without Food or Clothing.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 4.—Over 2,000 killed and nearly $5,000,000 of property annihilated, is the record of the great gulf storm in Louisiana. There has never been anything approximating it since the country was settled. More than half the population in the region over which the hurricane swept is dead. Everything is wrecked and not a house in 10 is left standing, while the survivors are left in the most destitute condition, without even food or clothing, for most of them were sleeping in their beds when their houses were crushed

By the Wind or the Waves.

There have been several similar disasters on the coast. At Lost island, where 286 people lost their lives, and at Johnstons bayou, the loss numbered 220 six years ago. Monday's disaster far surpassed these in horror. The weak and injured were all killed, and in the settlements where the storm was worst not a child survived, and very few women. The survivors are the young men in the vigor of manhood. Not one of them but has a not one but is badly bruised and injured. They escaped mainly on rafts or logs, floating for 20 to 90 hours in the water with the wind at 115 miles an hour. The deaths so far as reported and which are confirmed aggregate over 2,000, as follows:

Chemeie Canunada, 820; fishermen at sea, 240; Bayou Cleallon, 40; Oyster Bayou, 28; Bayou Cook, 87; fishing settlements at Bayou Cook, 48; Bird Island, 47; Simon Island, 16; Rosario Island, 20; Razor Island, 50; St. Malo, 25; Adams bay, 200; fishing camps at Daisy P. O., 20; Grand Bayou, 26; Grand Prairie, 5; Tropical Bend, 10; Pass A. Loutre, 40; Pointe a la Hache, 4; Barthely, 6; Fort St. Philip, 6; Hospital Bay, 8; Shell Beach, 212; Grand Bank, 8; Grand Isle, 100; Buras Point, 6; Pleasant Point, 10; Sixty Mile Point, 8; Devils Flat, 1; Bolivar Point, 3; Happy Jack, 2; Nichols, 3; Faitulings, 8; Cosses, 5; Stock Fleths, 1; Quarantine, 2; Eads Point, 1; Pearl River, 1; near Point Pleasant, 2; Bay St. Louis, 2; Back Bay, 1; lost on Weber, 20; lost in the bogs, 45; Bayou La Fond, 110; Bayou Andre, 40; Bayou Dufon, 10; Cabbinage, 20; on lugger General Vixie, 4.

Many Fishing Vessels Lost.

At the time the storm visited Chemeie 120 fishing vessels were in the gulf fishing. Not a word has since been heard from them or their occupants. Along the Mississippi the loss of life was to some extent due to falling buildings. In the bay it was caused wholly by drowning.

The pecuniary damage, while heavy, is not as large as might have been expected, as the sugar plantations and the richer portions of Plaquemine parish were not worsted by the storm, and it was the smaller farms and fishing settlements which suffered most. The total damage in this vicinity to shipping, crops, etc., is estimated at $3,620,000.

At Other Points.

Between here and Mobile the amount of damage done is placed at $500,000, and in and around Mobile, $300,000. Total damage, $4,420,000. The total loss on oranges is 75 per cent, while about 20 per cent of the orange trees were killed or blown down. Of the railroads the Louisville and Nashville is the heaviest sufferer, and the damage inflicted on it will run from $500,000 to $600,000. The greater portion of the line between here and Mobile, 142 miles, is damaged. Nine thousand feet of the Bay street bridge is swept away and 3,000 feet of the Biloxi bridge is gone, while the Scranton and Jackson bridges are all so badly injured they cannot be used. Five miles of embankment and trestle work and 16 miles of track are washed away.

A WATERY GRAVE.

Eight Lives Lost In a Disaster on Lake Superior.

DE-PARK, Mich., Oct. 9.—A disaster on Lake Superior in which not less than eight lives were lost, came to light during the day, when a drifting fishing boat was picked up by the crew of the Muskalonge lifesaving station. The craft was found to be a fishing boat that had left White Fish Point Oct. 6 for Au Train, 100 mile west. There were on board a crew of at least five men and W. H. Carpenter, his wife and one child. It is reported that Carpenter had two children on board, but this rumor cannot be verified. No one was found on the wrecked boat, and there is not the slightest foundation to believe that any escaped drowning.

Twenty-four New Cases.

BRUNSWICK, Ga., Oct. 6.—Twenty-four new cases of yellow fever were reported during the day and one death, that of Mrs. E. K. Talkerson of Jekyll island. No cases of yellow fever are reported at Jesup and one death, that of Mrs. Ogden.

Stealing Ideas.

It must be surprising to the uninitiated to see how soon fashions become generalized in Paris. A creation, a new fashion, is hardly out of an exclusive house of the Rue de la Paix—hardly out of the workrooms, it might be said—when you see it copied in the show windows of the Louvre and the Bon Marche, where it can be bought for less than one-fourth of the price asked by the great couturiers. At first the rulers of dress thought that some of their workpeople were bribed to give points, but they soon discovered that the pilfering of ideas took place in the showrooms instead of the workrooms. The Louvre and the Bon Marche engaged handsome, distinguished looking young women, dressed them as if they had $20,000 a year and were accustomed from infancy to having and wearing the best, gave them a private carriage and had them go to the great costumers to order garments "just come out."

These afterward served as the models of things which the week after you might buy by the dozens. The large shops resort to this means to obtain novelties not only in the beginning of the season, but all the year round, and the couturiers have no way of avoiding the sales, for their showrooms are open to all who wish to purchase and give orders. To be sure these couturiers make most of their creations for authentic princesses and duchesses, but here also the shops get the best of them.—Cor. New York Tribune.

An Eccentric Washington Woman.

There is a woman in Washington society whose eccentricities in certain lines are so well known as to pass without comment. Her position as a matron of literary proclivities is the motive for sundry gatherings at her house during the season. On one occasion the guests bidden to the literary feast were informed upon arrival that they must enter by a side door, as the morning being rainy they would otherwise track mud over the hall carpet. That the hostess is not so much a respecter of persons as of things is further evidenced by her conduct at an afternoon reception.

Those of her guests whose garments were ornamented with jet were asked during their stay to remain in the second parlor, where the furniture was of mahogany. This sorting out process was explained by the frank announcement that if people would wear sharp ornaments on their clothes she must protect her own property by excluding them from the sacred precincts of the first parlor so that the rosewood furniture could not be scratched.—Kate Field's Washington.

How to Keep a Chameleon.

The Florida chameleon, which also is frequently brought home by the tourist, is a bright and intelligent creature. He requires almost unlimited sunshine to bask in, and flies, which he catches on the end of his long tongue, to eat. A fernery is a comfortable place for him. This fellow, it is said, has a temper, and if not well treated or if teased he will show fight, though he can hardly do much harm. The genuine chameleon, after whom the Florida lizard is named, is one of the quaintest and oddest of pets, but he is a native of the old world and rarely seen in our country.

Another American of the family, often sent from the west and south to pet lovers, is called the horned toad, though he is no toad, but a lizard. He is said to be an interesting pet and capable of being taught. All the small members of this race live on insects and need to be kept in very warm quarters.—Olive Thorne Miller in Harper's Bazar.

The Boomerang Is Not New.

The boomerang, the Australian native's weapon of offense and defense, referred to in all reference works as an instrument unknown until after the discovery of Australia, was doubtless known before the time of Christ. Pliny the elder, a contemporary of our Saviour, writes as follows in his "Natural History" respecting an instrument made of the wood of the aquifolia:

If a staff made of this wood, when thrown at an animal, from want of strength in the person throwing, falls short of the mark, it will come back toward the thrower of its own accord, so remarkable are the properties of that tree.

It is altogether probable that the learned Pliny did not consider the shape of the "staff" and referred its peculiarities to the nature of the wood of which it was made.—St. Louis Republic.

Blunder Worse Than Guilt.

There are some penalties on innocent acts essential to human safety, and the signaler whose failure has destroyed a train must be punished, even though, when he pleads that he was in a "dwam," he is to his own mind telling the simple and sufficient truth. Nature is even harder on blunder than on guilt, and though man has no right to be as stern as nature, which, for example, executed a dynamiter at Madrid—not for his intention to murder, but for his carelessness in dropping his bomb—still there are points upon which he must be nearly as hard.—London Spectator.

Colonel North's Strong Room.

Colonel North is said to have at Eltham one of the strongest of strong rooms probably in the world. Not only is his gold and silverware stored here, but lady visitors to Eltham are provided for, special arrangements being made for taking care of their jewels during the night. The room is floored with cement and walled all round with weighty granite. To get into its interior you must pass through many gates, all fitted up with burglar alarms. The treasures are kept in [illegible] and the room is [illegible] feet underground.—London Tit-Bits.

SUNDAY AMUSEMENT.

IN MEXICO A PRIEST SENDS HIS BIRDS TO A COCK FIGHT.

An Enthusiastic Lover of Game Roosters Entertains His Congregation With Rare Contests Between Belligerent Cocks. One Sunday's Sport.

"It was in a Mexican village," said the explorer. "Great had been our surprise the evening before when a little after 5 o'clock we rode into the public square up to the door of the convent and observed a long line of game cocks guarding one side of the great church. Well, that was our first impression. Closer inspection made things plainer. In the convent, residence of only the priest and his relations, we hung our hammocks, rested awhile, refreshed the inner man with tortillas and black beans, then went forth to investigate the feathered regiment. The large church was built out into the square, so that its rear wall was on a line with the convent and other structures forming that side of the square.

"Along the wall that stood at right angles with the front of the convent small wooden stakes had been driven in the ground. To each a plumed warrior was securely attached at a safe distance from his valiant compeers. Who could have dared to utilize for such a purpose the shade afforded by the wall of the sacred edifice? Another instant and we should have voiced this thought. It is generally a mistake to speak in a hurry. The good old priest had followed us and was now at our side. Pointing a lean brown finger at a very proud looking rooster, he said: 'That is the prince of this lot, though they will all prove themselves splendid fighters, I know! I have not studied the creatures 40 years for nothing.' So! They were his own property! Yes, another five minutes' talk made it plain that the pet hobby of this holy man was cock fighting! We will call him Father F. because it is not necessary to give the name of our kind host. Fairly launched on his favorite topic, he talked away for a full hour and was utterly amazed, not to say somewhat incredulous, when informed that we had never seen a professional tussle between those birds so dear to his heart and purse, and which he loved to see fighting in the ring. 'But you must come with me tomorrow afternoon,' said he; 'the people here all like it, and we enjoy the harmless sport every Sunday afternoon.' He intended no sarcasm.

"Nolens volens, when Sunday afternoon came, our host, having laid aside his sacerdotal robes after celebrating high mass, piloted us to the scene of action. The pit was in the interior courtyard of a private house. A circular fence of slender sticks surrounded the carefully leveled ground dedicated to the carnage. Chairs surrounded it, and a shed, thatched with palm leaves, sheltered the spot from the scorching rays of the sun. In gay attire the most respected matrons and maidens of the place were there, the performance being countenanced and partly provided by the priest. A lively conversation was kept up, all present being acquainted. The roosters had been shorn of their feathers, save those of the wings and tail. Each bird was weighed; then curved steel spurs were secured to the stumps of those provided by nature, but which had been cut off. Quite suddenly conversation ceases. Two birds are in the ring. The struggle commences. Heads lowered, eyes glaring, quivering with rage, the heroes fly at each other.

"Calculating that his opponent has jumped too high, the other one crouches, avoids the blow and turns upon his foe who stands firm. Both rise in the air, breast striking against breast, each striving to deal his adversary a mortal blow. One is stabbed—he staggers. Profiting by this weakness, his adversary follows up the attack, but the wounded one keeps an eye on his enemy, and not being ready for him dodges, regains his position and inflicts a wound. Both now have difficulty in keeping on their feet, though neither will yield. More wounds are dealt. Both fall exhausted. One recovers, sees his foe prostrate, so does not attack, but shakes his lowered head and claws the ground in his fury. Impatiently he thirsts for the life of his opponent, who, no less savage, regains his feet, and with glaring eyes watches every move of his adversary.

"The enthusiasm of their owners and backers increases as the wounds become more numerous—the excitement is intense, and bets run high. The creatures engaged in deadly strife keep cooler than the audience. A moment arrives when all the backers talk at once. 'Five dollars more on the white!' 'Ten on the canelo' (cinnamon color). The stakes do not exceed $50. At last one warrior falls. Dead silence follows, so great is the suspense. Will he rise once more? Victor examines victim very distrustfully, makes sure he is dead, then mounting on the prostrate form draws himself up with an exultant cry of victory, just like some gladiator of olden times.

"All through the long summer afternoon one battle succeeded another. The birds that survived were taken home to be carefully tended until restored enough to fight again. Even those that had lost one or both eyes would fight if an opportunity was given to them, for these birds are so ferociously brave that unless wanted to fight they have to be kept out of each other's reach.

"At the two o'clock dinner in the convent our reverend host talked of nothing but his triumphant roosters and called on us to bear witness that the very one he had pointed out had proved itself that day the greatest hero of them all."—New York Tribune.

'Round Home.

Ed. Schrader is shingling his stables.

Z. J. Farley returned last week from a trip to Chicago.

Dr. Watts departed last week for the White City at Chicago.

Geo. Reiley and W. E. Haynes came up from Fisher on Monday.

The train on the Great Northern on Monday was five hours late.

Wes. Fuller left for the windy city on Saturday evening to attend the Fair.

John McLean left on Sunday evening for a visit at the White City in Chicago.

E. M. Walsh has gone to Chicago to be present at the Fair on Minnesota day.

S. C. Johnson returned last week from a pleasant visit to the White City at Chicago.

This pleasant weather should be improved to the utmost completing the fall's work.

Sunday was one of those dreamy Indian summer days, for which Minnesota is famous.

I. U Jennings left on Friday evening for a fortnight's, visit to the great World's Fair.

Wheat still continues to be exceedingly low, with no bright prospects for the immediate future.

Benj. A. Strawbridge leaves for a trip to the White City, on Monday or Tuesday evening of next week.

Al. Vine, Smith, Tibesar and Johnney Hathaway, returned from a trip to the Roseau country this week.

Tom Harris returned on Saturday from an extended visit to his folks in Chicago—taking in the big show incidentally.

A. A. Glenn, Vic. Fontaine and Frank Farnum went out to Fosston last Thursday, and organized a camp of Sons of veterans.

Rain interferred with the perfect success of the Fosston Fair. They had a good show and it is a pity they could not have had good weather.

Frank Hertz' delivery rig has blossomed out in a spic and span new coat of paint. McKinnon Bros.' painter is to blame. It is a dandy job and no mistake.

There are comparatively few potatoes this fall. It strikes us that all who have any to spare will do well to keep them awhile until the price improves—which it is bound to do in the near future.

The St. Paul papers state that C. O. Christianson has been appointed a delegate to the real estate men's congress to be held in Chicago. C. O. informed our reporter on Tuesday that he had heard nothing of it as yet.

W. E. Kelsey and wife returned on Friday morning from a ten days visit to the Great World's Fair. W. E. says it is impossible for a person to begin to tell of all its wonders—it must be seen to be fully appreciated—and even that takes more time than the average mortal has to spare.

Judge Frank Ives and wife returned on Monday's delayed train.

Mrs. J. T. Orvick died on Wednesday morning of typhoid fever.

J. C. Lorens, of Milwaukee, arrived on Wednesday morning to visit his old friend A. C. Schmidt.

Lots of wheat coming in at the mill in these days. The mill is giving great satisfaction in grade and weight.

Dr. M. Leguee is kept busy taking care of the suffering equines in these days. His stables are full all the time and his calls from the country are numerous.

The Haynes Palace Studio car will be located near the Northern Pacific depot Crookston, October 26th and 27th, all are invited to visit this car and inspect samples.

A. C. Shemidt has a job at Fosston painting Stadswold's house. He was summoned home Tuesday evening owing to the death of his father-in-law, John Ross.

Notwithstanding the extremely low price of wheat, more wheat was received at Duluth during September than during any September for many years. The farmers' necessity is the speculator's opportunity.

Gus A. Amundson, the good-natured clerk in Slocum's grocery, was married in Fergus Falls last Thursday to Miss Christina Christianson of this city. The bride whose parents live in Fergus Falls, has been engaged in the McLean household during the past summer.

A half-breed named Ben Brunette was brought in from Red Lake, Saturday, and taken before U. S. Court Commissioner Christianson on a charge of selling liquor on the reservation. He was held to appear before the U. S. District court which is now in session at Duluth.

Since Street Commissioner McDonald has been on the sick list the streets and sidewalks have been neglected. There are some bad breaks in the sidewalk north of the school house, where the walk is raised a couple of feet from the ground, which should be fixed before some person breaks a limb in one of them, and brings suit against the city for damages.

With the first issue in November we will commence one of the most thrilling serial stories ever written by that great story-writer, Frank Barrett, entitled "Out of the Jaws of Death." It is a story that will help to while away the tedium of the long winter evenings and every family should have it. Subscribe now and get this most thrilling story.

Our thanks are due to those who have called to renew that subscription during the week, and we are ready to thank the balance of our readers for similar favors. Don't wait for the statement but walk up to the captain's office and secure our new serial which commences on November 1st. Everybody cordially invited.

Dept. Sheriff Losey seems especially partial to fruit.

W. E. Kelsey was over at Grand Forks on Monday.

Max Ericson came up on Wednesday's train on a business visit.

W. R. Spears, of the Red Lake Reservation, was in the city over Sunday.

Now is the time to subscribe for the JOURNAL and secure our new serial story.

The delay on Monday morning was owing to a freight train wreck, near Barnesville.

Wheat came up one cent on Monday—reaching the munificent price of 50 cents for 1 hard.

Wednesday morning opened out quite cold and bracing—a foretaste of the coming winter.

Ed. George returned yesterday from St. Paul, where he argued a case before the Supreme court.

Gomer Evans was one of the progressive farmers who sent in his renewal to the JOURNAL this week.

E. M. Walsh will attend the real estate convention on the 23d inst., and give the dealers in dirt a few pointers.

Wm. Marin and L. Walker left for Thief River Falls on Monday where they have a contract for building a school house.

The M. E. Conference has returned Rev. L. W. Squier to Crookston for the coming year which rejoices his many friends here.

L. K. Aaker and daughter, Catherine, arrived from Alexandria on Tuesday morning on a visit with friends in the city.

Thos. Sanders was again brought over from Grand Forks to be examined on a charge of lunacy, but was discharged and sent home again.

Farmers, and all who have occasion to take a meal in the city will find it largely to their advantage to call at the Ideal Restaurant, Dan McKinnon's new place on Second street. The best of meals at the lowest prices.

An important feature of the October number of the North American Review will be a symposium on "The Business Outlook," by the President of the New York Chamber of Commerce, and the Presidents of the Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange, the Cotton Exchange, and the Coffee Exchange of New York.

The pulpit of the Congregational church will be supplied by one of the ministers from Fargo, N. D., next Sunday. Pastor Smith will assist in conducteng a Sunday School institute at Stephen Saturday and Sunday. The services will be the same as usual. Preaching services at 11 a. m., Sunday School 12-1, Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor at 6:45, evening service at 7:30.

Deputy Cororer Wyett returned from East Grand Forks on Tuesday evening, where he had been to hold an inquest upon the body of Paul Lee, that had been found by some boys in a lonely place in the woods. Foul play was at first suspected but a thorough investigation indicated that the man had died from exposure. He had evidently wandered away in an intoxicated condition and perished, some time in November 1892, and the body had lain there ever since. Deceased was one of the early settlers, of Polk county, and a man of some means.

Thos. Erwin, of Fisher, was in the city Monday and made the JOURNAL a pleasant call. He has just returned from the Kootenia country, in British Columbia, where he had been to attend to some interests of a younger brother who died recently at Kaslo, and left some valuable mining property. The mining business is very dull, but that country is rich in silver ore. Mr. Irwin also took a trip into Southern Washington, visiting the far-famed Walla Walla country. In the Palouse country he found the price of No. 1 wheat to be 28 cents, and No. 2 22 cents, and hard work to sell it even at that price.

Peter Lorge left for his home in Wisconsin on Monday evening after a week's visit with old friends in the city. Mr. Lorge gave our reporter a vivid description of his home life in Wisconsin and says that of the two places he prefers Polk county as a residence, as times are better here and our soil is far easier to work. He raises wheat, oats, barley and clover seed on his Wisconsin farm and makes cheese. The land is very stony requiring about a life-time to get in proper shape for cultivation, and when cleaned of stone is no better than Polk county soil (if indeed it is as good). It will raise from 12 to 30 bushels of wheat, mostly winter varieties is raised, which sells at about the same figure as here. For about three years farmers have been making a good thing raising clover seed which has sold from $5 to $8 per bushel. They raise from two to six bushels per acre. Everything considered he thinks Polk county farmers are better off than farmers where he lives.

Ex-Governor Merriam and a party of friends occupied a Northern Pacific car on the Great Northern Wednesday morning, going to Northcote for a few days hunt.

W. F. Bugg resumed his accustomed place at the Valley Roller mills last week. Although not exactly as good as new yet, he is very much better than he has been and improving right along.

A special to the JOURNAL from Arvilla, N. D., says that the safe in the Great Northern depot at that place was blown open Tuesday night, and all the money it contained—about $10—taken, and also a revolver belonging to the express company.

A fair sized audience attended the performance of "Skipped by the Light of the Moon" Tuesday evening. The company is not nearly as strong as it was last season, and the introduction of several mediocre performers detracts much from an entertainment which is "very, very funny."

Apparent awkwardness and thoughtlessness in guests often arise from ignorance of the family ways and customs. No one more warmly welcomes even crumbs of knowledge in this regard than he who is being entertained.—New York Times.

Woman's Noblest Career.

An American lady interviewer asked me the other day what I thought the noblest career for a woman. I said I thought it was marriage. She seemed astonished. That is, in fact, my deliberate opinion. More, I believe that if the question were put to any woman who has lived the matron's life and has sons and daughters grown up whether, looking back, she would still deliberately choose to be the mother of these sons and daughters or would become a journalist, novelist, teacher, nurse, artist, typewriter, clerk, cashier or any of the many occupations open to women she would without the least hesitation declare that she would prefer the matron's life as the noblest and highest lot open to women. To enrich the world with noble children, to give the country more brave hands and honest hearts—what, in comparison with this, is the independence of the single woman or her work—her average work? Do not talk about the isolated cases of genius. Talk about the average work. That all women cannot marry is perfectly true; that women are making it every day more difficult to marry by taking men's work is also true.—London Queen.

To Clean Turbid Water.

Dr. Leffman recommends to housewives a simple means of precipitating turbid water by the use of a solution of alum. One hundred and thirty grains of crystallized alum dissolved in one pint of water will produce a large quantity of the purifying liquid, as it is only used in the proportion of one to two grains of alum to a gallon of water. That would require three teaspoonfuls of the solution to every two gallons of water. After stirring it in let the water stand a few hours, and it will be perfectly clear and ready to be poured off from the thick deposit in the bottom. If it is then filtered, it will be in good condition for drinking.

Even without filtering it will be safe to drink the water if it has not stood very long, as it has been found that the addition of the alum greatly reduces the number of bacteria. The taste is not affected, as the alum decomposes in the water and sets free compounds that attach themselves to the muddy elements in the water and cause them to settle. This remedy is not for contaminated, water which should always be boiled.—New York Post.

Brightening a Room.

If the dining room is small and dark and has no communication with direct air and sunlight, pull down the gloomy paper and substitute cream white, pearl, atmospheric blue, custard or some such cheerful and magnifying tint. Wall papers sell as low as 5 cents a roll, and although the quality may not be desirable it is preferable to the finest grade in dark or heavy tints. Don't carpet the floor. Have it stained or painted a light brown and put a rug under the table, not large enough to interfere with the chairs, but sufficient to rest the feet. Put thin, white muslin shades on the window, and if means allow drape over them the thinnest curtains. In some of the finest houses in New York, for summer service, the windows are hung with blue holland to keep out the sun, white linen to temper the light, and white tarlatan drapery for a pretty summery effect. This gauzy cotton stuff is put on quite full, rolled on the edge to keep it from raveling, and caught back with huge rosettes of the same.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

How to Sleep.

Place the right hand on the forehead and the left at the back of the neck while counting 49. The rationale of this process is thus explained by Dr. Salisbury: The palm of the right hand and the fore part of the body are both plus (or positive) magnetic poles. The left palm and the back part of the body are both minus (or negative) poles. Like poles repel, and by thus placing the palms of the hands over the various centers of plexuses a vital current is directed back into the body, its normal circuit is re-established, and its energies are guided and evenly distributed among the organs situate along its course. The physical and mental systems will become passive, contented and comfortable, all parts working together for the common good. The result will be composure and recuperation. All distracting, harassing, melancholy imaginings and gloomy forebodings will have passed away. The stomach and bowels and all their glandular appendages will renew their healthy functions, while digestion and assimilation, previously at a standstill, will go on normally. Overwork and improper food are at the bottom of our sleeplessness. Dr. Salisbury warns us that "the cerebrum should not be permitted to work and consume vitality for more than 10 hours in the 24 on an average. The 14 should be spent in recreation, eating and refreshing sleep." We should live less in the garret of our house and more in the kitchen.

Latest Fashions and Fads That Tempt the Housekeeper In China, Silver, Etc.

Russian china is one of the latest things. It is very expensive and less beautiful than many wares which do not cost so much, but is interesting for the pictures of Russian life which it exhibits. A handsome blue and white ware receiving attention and much admiration is the Royal Copenhagen. Although its designs are artistic, it is not so dainty as the Sevres.

Gold plated china is the latest fad. While it is very brilliant and finds a ready market with a certain class of people, it is named only as a passing fancy.

Limoges dinner sets are very handsome. They have a white ground, with double bands of dead gold, and between these bands are decorations of gay flowers in Dresden patterns. The handles are of solid dead gold, and the covered dishes are box shaped. These costly goods will of course, to a certain extent, set the fashion in shape and decoration for more unpretentious wares. They are noted, together with the following, by The Decorator and Furnisher:

A new fish set has a ground work of pale rose color which fades at the center of the platter and plates and is almost a blue. The decorations are flower-de-luce, with grasses, and among them are swimming fishes with gold scales.

An exquisite cracker jar is in crimson Coalport china. Biscuit jars are in hamper form, with a strap and buckle. Other novel ones resemble a bag, with a gold cord and tassels.

Silver cracker jars are broad and low. Many of these novel jars are of glass in oval shape, with a high silver top, and the tray on which they stand is silver.

A bread server is a new English novelty. In shape it resembles a short, very wide fork, and it may be of wood, steel or silver. It is intended to remove the slices of bread from the plate.

Boys In Bombay.

Life is much pleasanter for the boys in Bombay, or indeed in any part of India, than for the girls. When the boy first comes into the world, he is welcomed with great joy. His father is delighted, and his mother is proud and happy. I don't suppose the little baby knows much about this himself, but when he grows older he soon learns what an important member of the family he is.

If you Endeavorers could only see the boys in Bombay, the Mohammedan boys and the Parsee boys and the Mahratta boys, if you could realize that they are all your brothers, I am sure you would want to do all you could to help them. One thing you can all do—you can pray for them, and perhaps you can give some of your money to help them. It costs so little to support a boy in one of the mission schools. I am sure you could all do something toward it. Will you not do what you can?—Mrs. F. E. Clark in Golden Rule.

Put a Prayer Under.

There are some loads for the back, and some that must be lifted and carried with the hands. It tires the arms and makes the back ache when the loads are heavy, and if some one comes along who will put his shoulder under or lift with his hands, what a comfort and relief it is!

A young girl was once carrying a market basket that was much too heavy for her strength, and another girl, in passing, noticed it and said, "Let me help you." Then she took hold of the handle and lifted half of the load. It was easy to carry after this. The young girl who was overworked never forgot the kindness of this stranger.

But there are weights that can never be carried in this way. They rest upon the heart. The load may be fear, anxiety or care. It may be a heavy sorrow. How can one help another to bear such burdens? Ah, there is a way. Put a prayer under the load that presses.—

How to Anneal Lamp Chimneys.

Chimneys and all glass articles can be rendered less liable to break by being put in a pot of cold water to every gallon of which 10 teaspoonfuls of salt have been added. Let it boil awhile and cool slowly, the slower the better the annealing.

How to Bake Tomatoes.

To prepare baked tomatoes select those which are smooth and medium sized. Make a small aperture at the stalk end, remove the pulp and seeds with a spoon and put in a sieve to drain. Chop equal parts of cold chicken and veal and one green pepper; add a well beaten egg, half a cup of grated bread crumbs, a piece of butter, pepper, salt, sage and a suspicion of onion; mix well together, moisten with some of the juice and stuff into the tomatoes. Bake half an hour in a moderate oven. Serve each tomato on a lettuce leaf. This makes a pretty as well as a savory entree.

How the Word "Renig" Originated.

Properly this word used in card playing should be "renege." It is good English for refuse, renounce and deny. Shakespeare uses it twice—in Antony and Cleopatra, act 1, scene 1 (reneagues), and in King Lear, act 2, scene 2.

How to Act In Cases of Poisoning.

After poison of any kind has been taken give an emetic at once, so as to produce vomiting. A dessertspoonful of ground mustard in a cup of warm water, part of it to be taken at once, followed by clear warm water, until free vomiting is started. A good way to provoke the vomiting is to tickle the back of the throat with a feather. In all cases send for a physician without loss of time.

How to Cure Freckles.

Mix an ounce of lemon juice, a quarter of a dram of powdered borax and half a dram of sugar. Let them stand a few days in a glass bottle and rub occasionally on the face and hands.

Down Goes the Price of Meat.

George Vine is now located in his Broadway meat market, with a big stock and large variety of meat on hand and has put the price of meat down so low that everybody can afford to buy the best the market affords. Look at some of these prices.

Boiling beef, 4 cents per pound.

Three pounds sausage for 25 cents.

Three pounds round steak for 25 cents.

Roasts 8 cents per pound.

Twenty Dollars per Acre

Do Not Miss the World's Fair

From the Century Magazine for Oct. 1893.

Some weeks still remain in which those who have not seen the World's Fair may yet enjoy that never-to-be-renewed privilege. In the general astonishment at the beauty of the housing of the Exposition perhaps not enough has been said concerning the contents. That these are well worthy the attention of the student of every or any department of human enterprise goes without the saying—though in some departments much more than in others the truly instructional method has been observed.

It still remains true that the greatest feature of the Exposition is the architecture and the landscape gardening, including in these all their sculptured and painted decorations and adjuncts. In these the deepest pleasure and the deepest instruction are to be found, as well as the largest and longest benefit to the country.

If the visitor can only be a single day at the Fair or a single night, it is worth any sacrifice to enjoy this alone. And if it were to be a question between the daylight or the illumination at night, we would advise the latter, for surely no eyes now opened on this world are likely ever again to behold any sight so nobly beautiful.

Over [illegible] million people have already visited this Greatest World's Fair and you should not fail to see it before it [illegible]

CROOKSTON TO DULUTH

Samuel Hill Looking Over the Country Between Fosston and Leech Lake.

It is Believed that the Fosston Line Will be Extended to Duluth Next Spring.

Samuel Hill, who has recently been promoted to the position of first assistant to President J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern, and who will eventually fill the latter's shoes, passed through the city Tuesday morning, on his way to Fosston where, with W. J. Hilligoss as a guide, he will be driven across the country to Leech lake and down to Park Rapids. This trip at this time is very significant, and undoubtedly means that Mr. Hill wants to see for himself the nature of the country through which it is proposed to run the line from Fosston to Duluth, before he gives the final orders for the commencement of the work, which it is confidently believed will be next spring.

Mr. Samuel Hill, who is a son-in-law of President Hill, is about 30 years of age and has the reputation of being one of the shrewdest and best posted young railroad men in this country. He is accompanied on the trip by Geo. A. Brackett of Minneapolis, a Mr. Dunwoody and Dr. Hill, a brother of Samuel. They had a big supply of hunting paraphernalia, and the party is ostensibly a hunting party.

Donnelly's Doings.

Ignatius Donnelly passed through the city last Saturday morning on his way to Hallock to deliver an address, and incidentally boom his paper. The Kittson county fair, which was held at Hallock on Saturday was the cause of the Sage's visit to Hallock. He confidentially informed a follower that he has 2000 paid-up subscribers to his paper and that he would like to issue his paper in three or four different languages—an English edition, a Swedish edition, a Norwegian edition and a German edition. "The work said he," could all be done in one office, all we would need is a few more cases and a few more printers, and just think what a tremendous power it would be." Now, if the dear people will only raise the necessary funds, the Representative will be made a great power—for Donnelly.

Barn Burned.

Andrew Steenerson was up from his farm on Monday and reports the loss of his barn on Saturday morning. About 8 o'clock he started some teams for Fisher with wheat, and went with them to the river to see them across. When about ready to return he discovered the barn on fire and hastily returned but too late to do any good or to save even the horses, of which eight head were in the barn and consumed, together with 1000 bushels of oats, 400 bushels of barley and 100 bushels of flax seed. He had also many other articles such as harness, some farm implements and such things in the barn and destroyed. The loss is fully $3500, with $2300 insurance.

Sudden Death.

Miss Agnes Robinson, who was visiting her brother, Dave Robinson, at Mentor, died last Monday from the effects of an epileptic fit. Miss Robinson had been in the government service at Washington for 10 or 12 years, and was taking a vacation to visit her brother. She has a mother in Vermont, and a brother in the United States mint at San Francisco. Undertaker Wyatt, who was engaged to prepare the remains for burial, telegraphed Miss Robinson's mother in Vermont regarding the disposition of the body, and received instructions to send it to Vermont. He left for Mentor yesterday afternoon, and will return to-day with the remains.

The First Freeze Up.

On Wednesday night October 11th, the ground froze quite hard, rendering the first furrow on Thursday morning difficult to plow. Potatoes that were not well covered froze, and if there were any that were dug Wednesday and not picked up they were entirely ruined.

Resolution.

The following resolution was passed at the last meeting of the city council and should have appeared in our last issue:

At a regular meeting of the City Council of the city of Crookston, held the 10th day of October, 1893, Alderman Morrisey offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Alderman Marlette:

Resolved, That the street commissioner be instructed to make a connection between the brick sewer on Third street where the same is broken and the wooden sewer below that point, pursuant to a plan to be furnished by the city engineer.

Upon the call of ayes and nays, the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Jerome, Morrisey, Marlette, Norrie, Simmons, Walker, Watts, Anderson, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative: Childs, who made the following explanation: "The plan does not appeal to my judgment as a feasible method of relieving the pressure on the sewer."

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the president of the council.

Passed this 10th day of October, 1893.

JOHN CROMB,
President of the Council.

Approved this 10th day of October, 1893.

The Last Chance.

It is said that opportunity opens a door to fortune for every man, at least once in his lifetime. The pity of it is, that in many cases the poor mortal cannot see the chance, though it is his last. It is, therefore all the more important that a chance should not be allowed to pass us unimproved, when it is the last opportunity we shall ever have. Now next week is the last week of the World's Fair—and your last chance to see it. Do you think there will be another such exhibition in this country in your lifetime? Not probable; hardly possible. Do you think it will not pay you to go? A gentleman who is a "globe-trotter" said to the writer: If you were to travel for three years around the world, and spend $25,000, you would not see what is to be seen at the World's [illegible]

WHEAT PRICE TOO LOW.

Governor Nelson of Minnesota Says Bears Are Keeping It Down.

CHICAGO, Oct. 17.—Knute Nelson, Governor of Minnesota, is resting at the Sherman House after the fatigue and excitement of Minnesota day at the fair. Talking about the products of his state, he said:

"The bears are keeping down the price of wheat, though there is not the slightest reason for such a course of action, taking into account the shortage of the crop. If spring wheat was sold on the basis of the actual visible supply prices today would be far higher than they are. There is not anything like an average crop—less than half [illegible] Minnesota that a great many farmers have ceased growing wheat. In the southern part of the state the land is almost entirely given over to grazing for dairy purposes. All last season Minnesota butter sold in New York city from 25 to 30 cents a pound, fully up to the best prices brought by the best output of the Elgin creameries. Hard times have been less felt by these people than by the wheat growers and I expect to see the acreage of wheat still further diminished in the future."

INGERSOLL ON ECONOMICS.

His View of the Cause of the Labor and Financial Troubles.

"What is the cause of the labor and financial troubles?"

"In the first place, the mills and factories, furnaces and foundries of the world can produce more than the world will use. They produce, however, as long as they can sell at a profit, and when the supply is too great the mills and factories must close, and then the laborers are thrown out of employment. Then the people become economical, and the economy adds to the general distress. The truth is that the extravagance of the people does not keep pace with the invention of labor saving machinery.

"The machines of the world are doing the work of hundreds of millions of men, and when the machines stop the laborers employed in making and feeding and running these machines stop, too, and then hard times come. Those who are a little ahead begin to draw from the savings banks, and the savings banks collect their loans, and the other banks do the same, and then comes a currency famine, and then a few banks fail and lack of confidence becomes general, and then comes panic. After a time the surplus is used, mills and factories light their fires, the men go to work, people put their money in the banks because confidence has returned, and again notes and drafts and promises take the place of money, and another era of prosperity commences.

"The farmers work like the manufacturers. They either raise too little or too much corn or wheat or pork. Once in a few years, by accident, they hit the proper proportion, and then prices are good, and the farmers are prosperous. It is probable that as the manufacturer and farmer become better acquainted with the world—when they know what is being made and what is planted in various countries—they can in some degree lessen or put off the present evils. But I do not see how they can be surely or permanently avoided. I do not believe the purchase of silver by our government had much to do with the trouble."—Robert G. Ingersoll in New York World.

AFTER THE FAIR IS OVER.

It Will Cost Nearly a Million to Put the Park In Condition.

The directors of the fair are beginning to ponder very thoughtfully over the fate, after the fair is ended, of the big white buildings. The fair management, before any of the work of alteration or construction was begun at Jackson park, was placed by the park commissioners under $700,000 bonds to put the park back after the fair in just the shape in which it was before work was commenced. In the early days of the fair, when the skillful promoter was doing his work, a good round sum was put down in the column of assets, which sum was to be realized from the sale, at the conclusion of the exposition, of the materials that went into the construction of the various buildings. It now develops that the work of removal will be so expensive that the materials will not pay for the process of taking away.

It is estimated by experts that of the wreckage of the fair 75 per cent will be waste, and that whether the salvage on the remaining 25 per cent will pay for removing the whole is very doubtful. About 25,000 carloads of rubbish must be taken away bodily from the fair grounds. This equals about 5,000,000 cubic yards. These figures show the enormous amount of work to be done. About the only valuable parts of the buildings are the floors, in which there is considerable good lumber.—World's Fair Letter.

A Graded Income Tax Bill.

Representative De Armond of Missouri has prepared a bill for a graded income tax on rather remarkable lines. It imposes a tax on all incomes in excess of $10,000 per annum, the amount to be fixed each year by the secretary of the treasury, the total amount of revenue to be secured to be equal to the amount appropriated for the payment of pensions for that year. Taking the rate of tax assessed upon incomes ranging from $10,000 to $50,000 as a basis; that on incomes of from $50,000 to $100,000 shall be twice as large; on incomes of from $100,000 to $200,000, three times as large; on incomes of from $200,000 to $500,000 four times as large; on incomes of from $500,000 to $1,000,000, five times as large, and on all incomes in excess of $1,000,000 six times as large.—Washington Dispatch.

Veragua a Prevaricator.

A prominent citizen of Cincinnati, who has just returned from Spain, says that the Duke of Veragua has spread about that country that Roman Catholics are not allowed freedom of worship in the United States, and that until he set the example they did not dare to go publicly to mass. He also announced that the United States is about to pension him.

LONDON BY GASLIGHT

SATURDAY NIGHT STREET SCENES IN THE CITY OF THE DOCKERS.

A Break In the Fearful Dreariness That Marks the Life of the Toiling Thousands of the East Side of the Great Metropolis. Music, Songs and Dances.

The memory of a Saturday night in the City of the Dockers is like the recollection of a troubled dream, for on this last night of the week the great, hot streets are filled with the pentup life of 500,000 houses (one cannot call them homes), and all the varied phases of this hand to hand struggle for existence appear. The docker is prodigal of his few shillings on Saturday night, the maximum of his liberality being shown most often in the public house and on the catch penny street conjurer, while the minimum is apparent at the stalls of the grocer and butcher. But men, women and children are out on the streets, and, whatever else it be, Saturday night is something of a break in the fearful dreariness that marks the life of the east London toiling thousands.

The people love music. Their interpretation of music is rather rough and loud. The bass drum of every band that parades in a labor demonstration of a Sunday gets terribly punished before the day is over, but it commands a great following, and on Saturday night the street musicians and singers easily gather their crowds and reap an abundant harvest. The barrel organ is found everywhere, and wherever it is rattling out the popular "Daisy" or "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" the sidewalks will be crowded, while two or three couples of little girls dance on the flagstones.

Nearly every girl of 8 can dance, many of them have already appeared in public at the cheap concert halls, and as one watches them, hatless, dirty, but with faces beaming with delight, he does not know whether to be glad of their joy or to pity their hollow present and hopeless future the more. Often a part in these street dances will be taken by the older girls, factory girls, as they are all called in east London, who are out in crowds on Saturday night. They are an untamed, fantastic lot. All wear enormous hats, adorned with feathers, and train their hair about the forehead by curling it forward quite fiercely. They are intensely loyal to the customs and traditions of their own "set," and forced as they are to subsist on an income of 6 to 8 shillings per week they are a vexing problem to the east London philanthropist and reformer.

Besides the barrel organs, there are violins, accordions and any number of soloists unaccompanied by an instrument. Blind women, old men and the poor wrecks of this awful struggle for existence here stand at the curbstone and in weak, thin voices sing their songs. The restless crowd moves on, save when some one more curious or more kindly than the rest stands near to look or listen. A bent woman, whose thin shawl was thrown over her shoulders, was feebly singing some old song in the midst of the jostling throng around a public house. I saw a strong young girl of 14 come kindly toward her, drop a penny in the little box held by the feeble hand and then hurry away out of sight. Happy will the strong young lass be if the swirl of the turbid stream of east London life does not bring her some time to the place of the curbstone singer. Indeed there is no place that I have ever seen where mirth and pathos, vice and virtue, meet and mingle as on these streets in a night like this.

One sees very little begging. There is not much street begging anyway—there's no use begging; the people are too poor. The mendicant flees Canning town for the wealthier residential quarters. Of course the children beset one. The sidewalk artist is sometimes found, but the most common form of appeal is from the ragged little fellows who turn handsprings or stand on their heads for you. They really do their athletics very nicely, and there is something so appealing and "old mannish" in their looks that it is hard to resist them. I was hurrying through the crowds in Victoria docks one night about 10 when a boy of 7 came out and ran beside me, relating some sort of verse, I thought. Three repetitions made it clear:

Ha'p'ny won't 'wit yer,
Penny won't break yer,
Tu'p'nce won't send yer t' the work'us.

He was evidently working on a "graduated scale of benevolence adapted to the abilities of the donor." I believe by the emphasis laid on the last item that he estimated me from my gold bowed spectacles at tu'pence.

The barrows of east London delicacies abound in the streets where marketing goes on. The woman who sells cold pickled pigs' feet is in fair demand. The man who retails shrimps at a penny a bag gets a good trade, but the couple who preside at the barrow filled with "cockles and winkles" have their hands full. The delectable mollusks are displayed on little dishes as large as "individual butters," with a bit of garnishing of parsley, and are eaten with vinegar on the spot.

These barrows are found especially at the entrance of Victoria Docks road, a great marketing place in Canning town on Saturday night. Clothing (very cheap and shoddy and called "slops"), little tools for household use, cheap laces, filberts, "red bandanna" handkerchiefs and horn combs are some of the many articles sold from barrows in the street, outside the regular shops for meat, fruit and fish. On the whole, trade is carried on with great briskness, but more quietly than in market streets at home. The butchers are the most noisy. They delight in wearing tall hats and screaming odd calls at the full of their lungs. A penny is the standard unit here in Canning town. The buyers are poor, and everything that can be called at a penny is. A common cry is [illegible] at the barrows, where a pound of anything can be sold at this low [illegible]—Hartford Courant.

A penny a pun', a pun' a penny,

GRANDMOTHER SAID.

"Always set your chair back when you are going away;
Don't leave it in the middle of the room or standing carelessly."
This is what grandmother said, as often, when a boy,
I jumped up and ran out of doors a reckless hobble-de-hoy.

"Always set your chair back when you are going away;
Don't leave it in the middle of the room or standing carelessly."
These words, repeated long ago, come ever fresh to mind,
When little duties are o'erlooked or left to lag behind.

In the daily walks of busy life, when we think we haven't time
To be orderly and almost look upon politeness as a crime,
We are quite too apt, from carelessness, to think, if not to say,
That it matters not if we forget to set our chairs away.

But it will be found that daily life will be more worth the living
If we blend, in harmony, the precepts of receiving and of giving;
If we heed the tender chidings dealt out in childhood's day,
And always "set our chair back when we are going away."

—Clark W. Bryan in Good Housekeeping.

A Wonderful Timekeeping Automaton.

One of the most wonderful timekeepers known to the horologist was made in London about 100 years ago and sent by the president of the East India company as a gift to the emperor of China. The case was made in the form of a chariot, in which was seated the figure of a woman. This figure was of pure ivory and gold and sat with her right hand resting upon a tiny clock fastened to the side of the vehicle. A part of the wheels which kept track of the flight of time were hidden in the body of a tiny bird, which had seemingly just alighted upon the lady's finger.

Above was a canopy so arranged as to conceal a silver bell. This bell was fitted with a miniature hammer of the same metal, and although it appeared to have no connection with the clock regularly struck the hours and could be made to repeat by touching a diamond button on the lady's bodice. In the chariot at the ivory lady's feet there was a golden figure of a dog, and above and in front were two birds apparently flying before the chariot. This beautiful ornament was made almost entirely of gold and was elaborately decorated with precious stones.—St. Louis Republic.

High Explosives.

There are certain explosives of high power which, when heated, burn quietly if freely exposed, or if confined explode only at the spot where heat is applied without the whole mass taking part in the explosion. Nitroglycerol, dynamite, gun cotton, picric acid and the new German military powder are examples. This is said to be because they are bad conductors of their own explosive wave. If, however, the same substances are subjected to a violent shock by the explosion in their midst of initial charges of mercury fulminate, the shock seems to affect all the molecules of the explosive at once, and the whole mass of the latter explodes with enormous violence.—New York Sun.

The Pearl Oyster.

Very few people are aware that the pearl oyster is not in any way like the oysters which we eat. It is of an entirely different species, and as a matter of fact the shells of the so called pearl oysters are of far more value to those engaged in pearl fishing than the pearls. There are extensive pearl fisheries in the gulf of California, and some of the finest pearls have been taken from those waters. In 1881 one pearl—a black one—was sold for $10,000, and every year since that time many pearls have been taken from the beds in the California gulf valued at over $7,500 each.—Chicago Herald.

She Loved Him.

Single Man (to himself)—I am sure that darling little angel loves me. She takes me into her confidence and tells me all her troubles.

Same Man (some years later)—Consarn it all! From morning till night, and night till morning, when I'm home, I hear nothing but tales about the servants, the butcher, the butler, the baker, the candlestick maker and all the rest of 'em.—New York Weekly.

Not to Be Considered.

Mrs. Chugwater (after an unusually spirited engagement)—Josiah, if we can't get along in peace, we'd better separate.

Mr. Chugwater (shaking his head mournfully)—It wouldn't help matters any, Samantha. I can tell you right now you'd never get another man that would endure your cooking as meekly as I do.—Chicago Tribune.

Switzerland's numerous waterfalls have proved a means for the generation and supply of an abundant amount of power for a comparatively small expenditure of capital. At the end of last year there were in that country 552 electric light installations and 52 plants for the electrical transmission of power.

Roots of all trees draw large quantities of moisture from the soil, which is discharged into the air through the leaves. It is estimated that an oak tree with 700,000 leaves would give off something like 700 tons of water during the five months it carries its foliage.

In British India the number of persons adhering to the sects of the ancient Brahmanic religious belief is estimated at 211,000,000. There are 7,000,000 Buddhists, 90,000 Parsees, 57,000,000 Mohammedans and 9,000,000 of the ancient pagans or nature worshipers.

There was recently given in Denmark a concert that may be regarded as absolutely unique as regards the instruments used. The instruments included two horns from the bronze age, which are believed to be at least 2,500 years old.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Ontario, Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

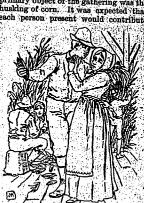
THE CORN HARVEST.

NO MORE THE ROMANCE OF THE RUBY EAR, NO MORE THE HUSKING BEE.

Since the Advent of the Organ Farmers' Girls Work Not Outdoors—Cutting Corn a Trying Task Is—Husking Makes the Fingers Sore.

The romance of the red ear is gone. The husking bee, actively participated in by the young folks of the neighborhood, is a thing of the past. Here and there, it is true, through the land the old time custom may be revived occasionally, but a modern "huskin" is not like one of the fathers' time. Then the primary object of the gathering was the husking of corn. It was expected that each person present would contribute his or her share of labor toward a big evening's work. The finding of a red ear was only an incident. The merry romp that followed was succeeded by great hustling to make up for lost time, and the success of the gathering was measured by the pile of shining ears that was accumulated in the middle of the barn floor when the party broke up.



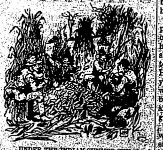
THE RED EAR.

Such husking bees as are held these later years are merely social subterfuges for the most part. Farmers' wives and daughters do not often help in the men's work nowadays, least of all in husking corn, for this is wearing on the hands. It causes split nails, and bleeding fingers, and lame wrists, and sore arm muscles. The husking bees of other days were necessities. The farmers were paying for their farms, and by all hands in a neighborhood turning to and helping each other at night in the husking season money could be saved and the economy that was so necessary conserved. But even in those old days there was far less of romance at husking bees than one would suppose from the stories that have been woven by imaginative fiction writers who have worked such occasions into their tale.

It was not at all common for the women and girls to help at the bees that I remember, though they sometimes joined their fathers and brothers for half an hour or so, and occasionally red ears were "barred" when the girls did take part. The work of the women was usually that of cooking and serving the supper. Sometimes this was eaten in the barn and sometimes in the house. When the parlor organ began to appear in the farmhouses, the husking of corn by girls died out almost altogether, for fingers that are accustomed to tearing the reluctant covering from ears of corn are not flexible enough for organ keys, and besides the same sentiment that caused the farmer to provide the organ for his daughter caused him to object to seeing her engaged in any form of man's work.

The corn harvest is managed quite differently in the east and the west. In the west the ears are generally picked from the stalks while the latter are still standing in the field. In the east the corn is cut first and set up in "shocks" around a single hill that is left uncut. There it stands curing for days and sometimes weeks before it is husked.

"It is not fun to cut corn," said a farmer friend the other day. "The first day or two in the cornfield strains every muscle in your body. Your arms, and your hands, and your back, and your legs all suffer, and when you come to go to bed at night you ache from your heels to your head. If your hands are a little tender, you are sure to cut them on the sharp edges of the bladelike leaves, and before noon little blisters come in your palms, to break before night and bleed the next day. By the second day cracks appear between the thumb and forefinger, and they bleed too. To add to my misery, when I cut corn, which I haven't for several years till this fall, when I could not get help enough to suit me, and so had to go into the field with my men, the peculiar rasping sound caused by the rubbing of the leaves and stalks together makes cold chills chase each other up and down my spinal cord for the first day or two in a way that is terrifying even to think about.



UNDER THE INDIAN SUMMER SKY.

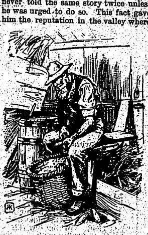
"The tying of the knob in the stalk band that binds the shocks together is what does up your hands most, and splits your nails and turns them back on your finger and makes you wish your manual appendages were made of brass or steel. It's almost as bad as binding oats with thistles in them, and that is the most harrowing performance in the whole round of farm work. Binding grain is now done mostly by machinery, but they have not yet successfully solved the problem of machine husking of corn, and I'm afraid they never will."

The strain on the hands in husking corn is greater than in cutting it, and when I was a boy and had to join my grandfather's hired man in the work we used husking pegs to part the husks at the point of the ear. The man or boy—and I believe it was a boy—who invented the husking peg is deserving of all the blessings that were showered upon the "man who first invented sleep" by Sancho Panza. A husking peg is about six inches long and should be made of hickory or ash or oak or iron wood. It is sharp pointed and polished and fashioned with infinite care.

Each husker of the old days used to like to make his own peg, and there were many animated discussions among them as to the proper form to give it. Some liked straight pegs best and some curved, and there were preferences in the matter of material that have been known to lead to fist fights and a profusion of language not suited to representation by means of printed characters. At the stores 20 years ago iron pegs were sold, and the first year they were added to the stock at Deacon Jephson's establishment they went off rapidly. But they did not suit. There was no give to them, and they were so heavy that they tired the hand.

If the weather is not too cold when the work of husking corn begins, it is pleasanter to husk in the field under the dreamy blue of an Indian summer sky that is warmed by the yellow light of the sun of October and early November. It is possible to talk at your work if you are a husker of sufficient experience to have trained your hands to operate automatically, and if the party of field huskers include one man who is a good story teller the hours pass fast enough once the cracks and wounds that come to your hands during the first few days have closed up.

Some of the best stories ever related by human lips have been told around the growing piles of husked ears of corn, and the quaint and piquant phrases with which they are related add immensely to their effectiveness. I knew a hired man a score and a half of years ago whose stories told during husking time would make the fortune of any writer who could put them into a book without losing their charming rustic flavor. They abounded with quiet humor and subtle wit, and it was not every one of his rural auditors who could appreciate them. Curiously enough, the name of this hard-working raconteur was Joe Miller, but his jokes were always fresh, and he never told the same story twice unless he was urged to do so. This fact gave him the reputation in the valley where he passed his whole life, working first on this farm and then on that, of being the "biggest liar between the hills."



SHELLING WITH A CASEKNIFE.

"But," Deacon Allen used to observe philosophically when discussing Joe Miller's tales, "his lies don't count, I guess, fer they don't do nobody no harm, and they sometimes chirk a feller up wonderful—wonderful."

There was no stain on Joe Miller's reputation, save these jokes and stories, and they were never low or vulgar, but he used to be held up by Deacon Jephson as one who at the end of life would have many an "idle word" to answer for, and the good deacon frequently made excellent use of these "idle words" as illustrations before his Bible class on Sunday.

Joe couldn't tell as good stories when the husking was done in the barn as when in the open air. He missed the sunshine, and the azure sky, and the breezes. The weather was generally wet and gloomy or cold and the ground snow covered by the time it was thought best to haul the corn under cover for husking.

A good deal of ingenuity has been expended in attempts to devise effective corn husking machines, but none of them has been eminently successful. The shelling of corn, however, is almost altogether done by machinery nowadays. Hand shelling was done in two ways 80 years ago. The most primitive method was to denude the ears of their kernels by abrasion, a cob being held in one hand and an ear in the other, both being grasped in a viselike grip.

Later some genius discovered that the work could be accomplished with greater rapidity and ease by driving a "case knife" into the end of a board and rasping the kernels off against the knife, the sheller meantime sitting astride the board, which projected over the edge of a basket placed for the reception of the shelled corn. This method was adopted with great unanimity after its discoverer first used it, and it continued to be practically the only method until the machine sheller was introduced.

Decimals in America and Europe.

In both France and Germany one-fourth reduced to a decimal is written 0,25. In England it is written 0·25 (always with the period at the top of the line) and in the United States in this way—0.25. Sir Isaac Newton is given credit of originating the present English method of [illegible] the decimal point, his reason being [illegible] at the top of the line it could be distinguished [illegible] the full stop punctuation mark.

HOW TO SEE THE WORLDS FAIR.

Suggestions as to the Most Convenient and Economical Method.

When you go to the World's Fair do not take a trunk with you if you can possibly get along without it, but pack your few necessary traveling articles in a hand bag or grip and carry it along with you. You will never know what a lot of annoyance you have been spared in this way. Then get your tickets from Crookston to Chicago and the greatest Fair the world has ever seen, reading via St. Paul, and thence via "Northwestern Line" to Chicago. The Northwestern line runs three superbly equipped trains from St. Paul to Chicago, leaving St. Paul at 8:00 a. m. daily, 6:25 p. m. daily except Sunday, 8:00 p. m. daily, making quicker time to Chicago than by any other line. When you arrive in Chicago you will find World's Fair omnibuses at the Northwestern line depot which will take you to the Van Buren street station of the Illinois Central road, where trains for the Fair leave every three minutes, and where World's Fair steamers can be taken for the Fair every ten minutes, or you can take a steam ferry from the depot of the Northwestern line direct to the same place via the Chicago river and making connections with the famous whaleback steamer Christopher Columbus for the Fair for 25 cents. When you arrive at the Fair you will find a number of first-class hotels within a stone's throw of the main entrance and dozens of good restaurants where meals can be had to accommodate the most modest purse.

By following these simple directions your trip is bound to be a pleasant one. See that your ticket from St. Paul reads via the Northwestern line, and remember that by this route you will obtain the best service, the greatest luxury, the most complete comfort. Be sure and buy your tickets at starting point.

As Long as You Live

You will regret it, if you fail to see the World's Fair at Chicago. Every one who has visited it says it is the grandest and most beautiful display of the products of science, art and industry that mankind has ever seen, and beside it all previous "world's fairs" sink into insignificance. It represents an expenditure of two hundred millions of dollars, and we shall not look upon its like again in this generation. Only three short weeks remain in which you will have the opportunity to visit it. To see, even for a week, this World's Fair, is to supplement your education, no matter how good it may have been, with invaluable information. Rates of fare are very low, and you can live in Chicago as cheaply as anywhere in America. You cannot afford to miss the Fair. Get ready to go soon, and then ask your home ticket agent for tickets reading via "The Burlington," the great scenic, vestibuled, compartment car, free reclining chair car and dining car line, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

SIX SPASMS A DAY.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I never lose an opportunity to recommend Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine to any one afflicted with nervous complaints with the assurance that it will not disappoint them. When our boy was eighteen months old he was attacked with violent spasms. Sometimes he would have five or six spasms in a single day. WE TRIED MANY PHYSICIANS WITHOUT BENEFIT; finally our druggist recommended Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. We tried a bottle, and could see that HE WAS BENEFITED FROM THE FIRST DOSE. We used three bottles, and I am happy to say the child was ENTIRELY CURED. We used no other remedy, and his cure is complete. He is now three years old and perfectly healthy. You are at liberty to use my name in SOUNDING THE PRAISE OF THIS WONDERFUL REMEDY.

IN A DUAL ROLE.

For a couple of weeks the JOURNAL has been gathering material for an interesting story, in which one of our county commissioners plays a double role—something which requires a very skillful performer to do successfully.

At the last meeting of the county board, it was suggested that the members go through the county jail at noon and see the prisoners fed—as rumors had been afloat for some time that the prisoners were not being fed as they should be. The suggestion was acted upon and the board saw the prisoners fed, examined the food, estimated the cost of the meal, and decided that the sheriff was not giving the prisoners sufficient food. The members of the board were all indignant about the matter, and Mr. Kirsch, the chairman of the board, was loudest in his denunciation of the sheriff. When the board met after dinner, Commissioner Rhinehart reprimanded the sheriff, but Mr. Kirsch said not a word. He kept his indignation under his vest, and only let it escape on the street corners, or in private conversation.

Several days afterwards a JOURNAL man met Mr. Kirsch on the street and asked him about the investigation of the jail. He said he saw the prisoners fed, and that each one had about two ounces of meat, a cold potato, a small piece of poor bread, a small piece of good bread, and a cup of tea, which looked more like river water. "It's a shame," added Mr. Kirsch, "the sheriff is well paid for boarding the prisoners, and should feed them better."

Shortly after this, the Daily Times published an interview with a prisoner who had been discharged from the jail, and he said he was glad to get out, as he had been half starved in the jail, and that the meat wasn't fit for a dog. In the next issue of the Times, September 28th, appeared the following interview with Mr. Kirsch:

A Times reporter interviewed Commissioner Kirsch to-day regarding the reports of mismanagement at the county jail. "There is not the least particle of foundation for the reports," said he, "and Sheriff Grundysen is done an injustice by circulating them. When I first heard the reports I began quietly looking into the matter, and have satisfied myself that the sheriff is taking care of the jail fully up to the requirements of the law and as well as they were ever cared for under any other sheriff. I have dropped in unexpectedly upon several occasions when their meals were served, and do not hesitate to say that they get better food day in and out than two-thirds of the farmers and laboring men throughout the county. Further than this, of the 20 prisoners now confined in the Polk county jail, only one is an actual resident of Polk county. The rest are part of the gang of toughs and cutthroats who have overrun this country for the past two or three months. They are not deserving of very much sympathy or consideration, and the fare they are getting I believe is far too good for them."

This was a direct insult to the balance of the board, and especially to Mr. Rhinehart, who had publicly scored the sheriff for not feeding the prisoners sufficiently, and the JOURNAL has interviewed three of the members of the board to see if they also had changed their minds. It is needless to say they had not. Commissioner Rhinehart, when seen about it, made the following statement:

During the last meeting of the board, we adjourned at noon one day and all went in a body to the jail, accompanied by the auditor. We stayed in the jail until dinner was served. The dinner consisted of boiled meat, which Messrs. Kirsch, Oppegaard, Lindem, DeMers and myself looked carefully over and made an estimate that each man had not to exceed two ounces, one small potato, and two small cuts of bread, one of which was sour, but the sheriff claimed it was the only poor baking that they had; there was butter on the bread; each man also had a cup of dreadful weak tea, and this completed the food for the dinner. Mr. Kirsch was just as loud in his denunciation of the dinner served the prisoners as any of the other members of the board, and I cannot understand why he should so suddenly change his mind.

Commissioner Lindem, when seen, had just returned from a two week's trip to the World's Fair, and had not seen Mr. Kirsch's statement in the Times. When asked about the jail investigation, he expressed himself as follows:

I went through the jail in company with Messrs Kirsch, Rhinehart, DeMers, Oppegaard and Auditor Webster. We saw the prisoners fed; each man had about two or three ounces of meat, a potato, a piece of good bread, a piece of poor bread, some butter and a cup of very weak tea; Mr. Kirsch expressed himself very strongly; if I remember right, he said it was "an outrage."

Commissioner Oppegaard, when questioned about it, gave out the following:

I went through the Polk county jail with Messrs Kirsch, Rhinehart, DeMers, Lindem and Auditor Webster; I saw the prisoners get their dinner; each man had a small piece of meat, about two or three ounces, a potato, a piece of good bread and a piece of poor bread, some butter and a cup of very weak tea. Mr. Kirsch expressed himself very strongly and said the prisoners received an insufficient quantity of food.

Now, the question is, why did Mr. Kirsch so suddenly change his mind from one extreme to the other? One day he is denouncing the sheriff, the next he is applauding him. The conditions haven't changed any, it is simply Mr. Kirsch's mind. It is quite evident his statement in the Times was an afterthought. But how a man like Mr. Kirsch—who has the reputation of being quite cunning—could make such a statement in the public press, in the face of the facts, and of his former statements to individuals, is something past understanding. The motive for such a change must have been very strong.

While we are on this subject, a few words about Sheriff Grundysen may not be amiss. He is probably the most thrifty sheriff ever elected in Polk county. Take this one item of the board of the prisoners. He has a contract with the county to board the prisoners for $3.50 per head per week. As good board can be secured in our second-class hotels for the same amount, it will be seen that the sheriff could give his boarders plenty of good coarse food, and still make a nice profit, as he has no expense except the wages of a cook who, we understand, also does the cooking for the sheriff's family. It has been estimated that the cost of the food served each prisoner per week did not exceed 40 or 50 cents. This would leave a net profit to the sheriff of about $3.00 per prisoner per week, and as there are about 20 prisoners it will be seen he has a very snug revenue from this source alone. Now, the JOURNAL has no sympathy with criminals, but a man who is in jail awaiting trial—as many of those in the Polk county jail often are—is not a criminal until he is proven guilty. Besides, if the proper thing to do with our prisoners is to half starve them—as Mr. Kirsch would make out in his published statement—then why not let the tax-payers have the benefit of it? Is there any particular necessity for subsidizing the sheriff?

RECENT local events which have transpired leads the JOURNAL to suggest that the office of "official whitewasher" be created, that it be made an elective office, and that half of the fees of the office go to the county. Then when a public officer becomes derelict in his duties, or corrupt in his office, the official whitewasher can step in and, for a certain consideration, can "square" the guilty officer. He could exercise a moral supervision over the officers, keep them in the paths of rectitude and duty, and when any of them go astray, he can lead them back to the ways of honesty and tell the dear people that it was all a mistake, that he didn't sin at all.

WHEN Hon. Halvor Steenerson filed the complaint against the present freight rates of the Great Northern railway, he also wrote to Ignatius Donnelly, the president of the state farmers' alliance, asking him to co-operate in furnishing testimony against the railroad, when the case came up for hearing. In the last number of Mr. Donnelly's papers he expresses the opinion that the investigation will amount to naught, and assumes beforehand that the commissioners will do nothing. Now the JOURNAL does not believe in assuming anything of the kind. It has confidence in the integrity of the members of the railroad commission, and believes they will make an effort in be half of the farmers of this country. If we never make any demands, we will never get any concessions from a railroad. In this case the demands are going to be made in such a way that they cannot be ignored.

THE fiasco in the United States Senate still goes on. The democratic majority is unable to control the democratic minority, or rather, they refuse to adopt measures to bring the minority to time. And now it is said the only way to prevent further disgrace to the administration is to force an adjournment and let the solons go home. There is some talk of putting a man with some back-bone in the chair—such a man as Senator Hill—who will adopt arbitrary measures, and not take heed of any technical interpretation of the rules which allows the minority to control the majority. If minorities can control legislative bodies, then it is time we tear up our constitution and go out of business.

THE Winnipeg Free Press of October 16th quotes the price of No. 1 hard wheat at Fort William, which is on the northwest shore of Lake Superior, at 62½ cents per bushel on October 12th, while at Chicago, on the same date it was 62¾ cents. This is undoubtedly due to the cheaper freight rates on the Canadian Pacific railway. The rate from Winnipeg to Montreal, a distance of 1424 miles by rail, is 32 cents per 100 pounds by the lake and rail route—not quite double the rate from Crookston to Minneapolis, 299 miles. In other words the Canadian road carries wheat 100 miles for 2¼ cents per 100 pounds, while the farmer in the Red River valley has to pay a little over 5½ cents for the same distance—more than double charged by the Canadian road. And yet the Canadian people are constantly kicking on the exorbitant freight rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

FRIDAY, Minnesota day at the World's Fair, was one of the biggest days in the business. Hundreds of thousands were on deck to do honor to the occasion, and it is needless to say that that the day was duly observed in great style. Crookston was represented by a score or so of our leading citizens who were right in it.

IT IS said the World's Fair commissioners have decided to run the great Fair through November, providing the weather will permit. This would give many who will otherwise be deprived of the privilege the opportunity to see it.

THE appointment of receivers for railroads is becoming quite popular. The Union Pacific has gone into the hands of receivers—for the protection of its creditors.

AS AN art supplement, the picture issued by the St. Paul Globe last Sunday is a huge success.

The Warren register views the situation after this fashion: "The Democratic editor nowadays thus soliloquizes: "We Democrats are in power and must do something. We will repeal the election laws, thereby insuring to us a long lease of power; on this point our party is a unit. We must repeal the Sherman law and the McKinley law, because we have charged to their existence so many evils that the people, taught that where there is so much smoke there must be some fire, have been led to believe that abolition is a necessity. We don't care much about either the tariff question or the silver question; but both these laws were enacted by a Republican congress, and as we have denounced all Republican legislation as bad, we must devise some means of getting rid of them. When there is nothing left to repeal, what then? Blest if I know! It is a Democratic principle that the nation that is the least governed is the best governed, so I suppose we'll get along all right without any laws."

A Homemade Barometer.

A simple barometer can be made by filling a common, wide mouthed pickle bottle within three inches of the top with water. An ordinary Florence oil flask should be washed thoroughly and stripped of its straw covering. This should be inverted and its neck plunged as far as it will go in the pickle bottle. This gives a complete barometer. In fine weather the water will rise into the neck of the flask higher than the neck of the pickle bottle; in wet and windy weather it will fall to within an inch of the mouth of the flask. Before a heavy gale of wind and at least eight hours before the gale reached its height the water has, it is said, been seen to leave the flask altogether.—New York Telegram.

ADAM'S NAIVETE.

A Woman Defends the First Man From Charges of Cowardice.

And the Lord said, "Hast thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee thou shouldst not eat?" The man said, "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me—she gave me of the tree and I did eat." This, it has been held for centuries, was Adam's great sin, for which he was driven out of the garden and his descendants, even to the present generation, compelled to work for a living. In addition to bearing the consequences of his error Adam has been denounced through all succeeding centuries for his cowardice and lack of gallantry in trying to throw the blame upon the woman who had been given to be with him—"God's first, best gift to man."

We are glad, therefore, that even after 6,000 years of unmerited condemnation which the memory of our great progenitor has had to bear there has arisen one person who dares to speak for him. And it is all the more fortunate that that person is a woman—a member of the sex whom Adam's words, by a wrong interpretation, were held to have maligned. This person is Mrs. Caroline F. Corbin, a distinguished authoress. In her latest book she says of Adam's plea:

"This is not the expression of cowardice, but of the innocent and native belief that anything which this lovely being, fresh from God's hand, proposed must be right, and right or wrong must be done. It is a trait which has come down in unbroken continuity of inheritance to the latest born of Adam's sons."

The thought is a new one, but there is not a man alive and capable of appreciating Mrs. Corbin's argument who will not indorse it. Where is there a man today, barring a few crusty old bachelors, who would not have done the same thing under like circumstances? The woman was beautiful, the apple was good, and Adam was an unsophisticated, ingenious young man unaccustomed to the little social arts and deceptions that the daughters of Mother Eve have learned from her example.

We insist that Adam is vindicated, and that Mark Twain's tears over his grave were a deserved tribute. Now, let the building of his monument proceed. And let it be recorded thereon that "he was a kind, loving and obedient husband."—Troy Times.

Small Fortune Between the Cracks.

A cigar dealer was recently compelled to move from his down town stand, which he had occupied for 85 years, because of the demolition of the old building.

He packed his belongings with many a sigh of regret. When he had got his things all out, he turned to the workmen, who were waiting to begin tearing down the building, and remarked in a rather sarcastic tone:

"Well, boys, you may have all you find in this old trap."

The workmen began on the old floor, which had been worn into hollows by age. It had not been replaced since it was originally laid.

One of the men ripped up a board with his crowbar, raising a cloud of dust. When he got it out of his eyes, he saw something shiny in the crack.

He picked it up, and it proved to be a dime. Further investigation revealed the fact that the crack was lined with silver.

This was an incentive to the workmen. They plied their crowbars with remarkable energy for men poorly paid. In this instance they were amply rewarded.

In every crack of the floor silver dimes were found. Some of them bore dates of nearly half a century ago. The men gathered the coin in handfuls.

The cigar dealer, in speaking of the occurrence, said that he hadn't the slightest idea that so much money could be lost through carelessness and a poor floor even in 85 years.

"But it won't happen again," he said. "When I heard of it, I immediately gave orders to have my new store refloored with hard wood, and no cracks, at my own expense."—New York Herald.

A Striking Presentiment.

It is curious how future events are occasionally prefigured by some anticipatory token which, unlike presentiments and premonitory dreams, makes perhaps no impression at the time on those whom they concern.

Here is a striking example. One of Charles Dickens' sons, from some childish oddity of expression in his large, wondering eyes, was given by his father the very unique sobriquet of the "Ocean Specter," by which he was always called. The great novelist never knew of the weird significance his playfully bestowed appellation was to bear, for he himself had been nearly two years in his grave at the time his little "Ocean Specter," then a lieutenant in the royal navy, died and was buried at sea.—London Tit-Bits.

Useless Purchases.

Two eminent French gentlemen, who were great friends, used to relate an amusing story of their impecunious days. Neither fame nor fortune had come to them, but they were always hopeful. The years had weighed heavily enough upon Jules, however, for him to have become entirely bald. One day Alphonse met him with a beaming countenance and cried gayly: "What do you think, Jules! I have been buying a strong box!" "Then, Alphonse," replied Jules firmly, "I shall buy a hair-brush."—Argonaut.

George Eliot suffered from melancholic moods, and from her thirtieth year had severe attacks of headache. As a child she was poor in health and extremely sensitive to terror in the night. She remained a quivering fear throughout her whole life.—New York Times.

Writes Postmaster J. C. WOODSON, Forest Hill, W. Va., "I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character, that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary medicines, and advised me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and one bottle cured me. For the last fifteen years, I have used this preparation with good effect whenever I take and I know of numbers of people who keep it in the house all the time, not considering it safe to be without it."

"I have been using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for 30 years, with the most satisfactory results, and can cheerfully recommend it as being especially adapted to all pulmonary complaints. I have, for many years, made pulmonary and other medicines a special study, and I have come to the conclusion that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral occupies a position pre-eminent over other medicines of the class."—Chas. How to See the World's Fair.

Assuming that many of our readers will be able to spend only a week at the Fair, the following program is offered by a sight-seer of much experience: Devote the first day to view of the grounds, approaching if possible, by boat from Chicago, and landing at the great pier. Start for the Manufactures Building, passing the Statue of the Republic, around the foot of the Basin, to the noble Agricultural Building, then Machinery Hall, the Administration Building, State Buildings, Transportation and Horticultural Buildings. The second day can be wholly spent in the Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building, and even then, only a general impression can be carried away. The third day can be given to a tour of Machinery Hall, the Mines, Electricity and Transportation Buildings. The fourth day spend in the Building of Agriculture, where are eighteen acres of exhibits, the fifth day one should visit the Women's and Children's Buildings, where a few hours may be pleasantly spent. The greater part of this day should be devoted to the magnificent displays of painting, engraving and sculpture in the Fine Arts Building. The sixth day we will spend in a tour of the Midway Plaisance, where are many curious attractions. In the afternoon one may take a farewell walk through the main grounds, and we have seen something of the Columbian Exposition. To arrive in Chicago in good trim for such a week, buy your ticket over the Burlington Route. Your home ticket agent can supply you or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, St. Paul, Minn.

THE CUP STAYS HERE.

Third and Deciding International Yacht Race Won by the Vigilant.

SANDY HOOK, Oct. 13.—The Vigilant won the third and deciding race of the America's cup, defeating the British yacht Valkyrie in a gale by 40 seconds. The race, which had been postponed from Wednesday, was started at 12:27, with the Vigilant leading. The wind was blowing 30 miles an hour from the east. At 11:30 the danger signal was set at the signal station, but notwithstanding this both yachts put a great amount of sail up and kept up their topsails. It was plain that both boats intended to strain every point in the contest. The course was the same as that of Wednesday—15 miles to the windward and return.

The race was an exciting one throughout and was marred only by a mishap which happened to the English cutter. She was tearing along several lengths ahead when a little split appeared in the inner reach of the cutter's spinnaker. Larger and larger the rent seemed to grow and when it had spread 10 feet out, Captain Canfield was forced to take it in. In two minutes another spinnaker of light Irish linen was taken and quickly ran up. It was all in vain, however, for the wind was blowing nearly half a gale and the light canvass was soon torn into shreds. This crushed forever the hopes of an English victory for one brief day, for although a jib balloon topsail was hoisted instead of a spinnaker, the Valkyrie fell astern and crossed the line 500 yards behind the Vigilaat.

MINNESOTA AT THE FAIR.

Citizens of the Badger State Celebrate State Day.

WORLD'S FAIR GROUNDS, Oct. 14.—The men who control the civil and military affairs of Minnesota and several thousand citizens in private life came together at the fair and made the Minnesota celebration a success. The air was damp, chilly and foggy, but that did not dampen the ardor of every Minnesotan to muster at his state building and attend the exercises which were held in Festival hall. Governor Knute Nelson, accompanied by his staff and official delegation, came in carriages to the hall from their hotel. Ex-Govenors Hubbard and McGill were not present but four ex-governors and one governor filled the bill pretty well. President Monfort welcomed the officials and his fellow citizens in private life to the fair on behalf of the Minnesota managers and presented Governor Nelson, who spoke entertainingly regarding Minnesota, with particular reference to its industries, display and interest in the exposition.

The other speakers were S. M. Owen, President Northrup of the state university, National Commissioner Tousley, H. F. Stevens, and C. A. Towne of Duluth.

ALL ON BOARD LOST

STEAMER DEAN RICHMOND GOES DOWN ON LAKE ERIE.

The Entire Crew of Eighteen Persons Supposed to Have Perished. Steamer Wocoken Wrecked Near Long Point and Thirteen of the Crew Drowned.

BUFFALO, Oct. 15.—Eighteen persons, the entire crew of the propellor Dean Richmond, are given up for lost in the storm on Lake Erie. The corpses of five have been washed ashore off Van Buren point, 40 miles from this city. The shore of the lake is strewn with wreckage and merchandise and the waves are hourly yielding up further evidences of the fate to which the Richmond has gone. Another boat, the schooner Typo, is thought to have gone down with her crew just off Gravely bay, on the Canadian side, a few miles from this city. She is owned by the Hargrove company of Detroit.

The condition of the bodies washed ashore at Dunkirk indicate that the unfortunate seamen had not been dead long, that they had probably been cast adrift some time during the night and had been beaten to death on the dangerous rocks that abound in that part of the lake. The wreckage is still being cast ashore and it is believed the Richmond foundered not more than three miles out in the lake. It seems impossible that any one of the 18 souls on board could have escaped alive. The Richmond was a Clover Leaf boat and her crew were all from Toledo. She was the first of the larger steamers which mark the coming of the present style of marine construction on the lake.

THIRTEEN LIVES LOST.

Steamer Wocoken Wrecked In the Recent Storm on the Great Lakes.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 16.—Thirteen more victims have been added to the already long list of fatalities resulting from the terrific northwest gale that swept the Great Lakes Saturday and Sunday last. It is now definitely known that the steamer Wocoken of Cleveland sank in 10 fathoms of water just above Long Point, on the northern coast of Lake Erie, in the recent storm, carrying down all but three of her crew. The captain was among those drowned.

A DOZEN KILLED.

Frightful Accident on the Michigan Central Road.

JACKSON, Mich., Oct. 13.—The second greatest accident in the history of the Michigan Central road occurred here within 100 yards of the place where almost 14 years ago to a day the Pacific Express crashed into a freight engine in October, 1879, and 18 people were killed. This disaster has so far a record of 12 killed, five probably fatally injured and 15 others more or less seriously hurt. At 8:49 a. m. an excursion train, originating at Owego, N. Y., which had been turned over by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western to the Central at Buffalo, was standing on the track at Jackson station when a second section, also laden with excursionists from the East, and telescoped the last three cars of the Owego special. Many of the passengers of this latter train had been out to breakfast, some had returned and were in the coaches, some were at the station platform. Their train was about ready to pull out when the second special came into the yards and in sight of the station under check. When within a few hundred feet of the standing train, Engineer William Wheelan of the second special put on the brakes, but found to his alarm that they did not work. The speed of the train did not diminish, and reversing his engine, Engineer Wheelan and his fireman, Joseph P. Kimbling, jumped from the locomotive.

Crashed Into It From the Rear

The Train Kept On

and in full view of the several hundred people in and about the station, crashed into the rear coach of the first train, passing nearly to the other end. There were eight cars in the train. It was in the sixth, seventh and eighth cars where the slaughter took place, and not a single occupant of these cars appears to have escaped death or injury.

The injured number over 50, some of whom will probably die.

WRECKED THE TOWN.

City of Emington, Ills., Badly Damaged by a Dynamite Explosion.

EMINGTON, Ills., Oct. 16.—The entire business portion of Emington was wrecked by a premature explosion of dynamite at 11 a. m. Five people were killed and five more seriously injured, two of whom cannot live.

The men were engaged in digging a well and to further their work they filled a gas pipe 2 feet long and 1 1-4 inches in diameter with dynamite, and were capping it when it exploded, throwing the men and landing them over 50 feet from the spot where they were working. The Eyers and Cornwell were mangled in such a manner [illegible]

REPEALERS TIRED.

ANTI-SILVERITES UNABLE TO STAND THE STRAIN.

Senate Adjourns After a Continuous Session of Nearly Forty Hours—Allen of Nebraska Breaks the Oratorical Record—Peffer Amendment Defeated—The Session In Detail.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—After a continuous session of 38 hours and 40 minutes, Senator Voorhees, leading the repeal force, was compelled, by the inability of his followers to longer stand the terrible strain, to capitulate, temporarily at least, by yielding to an adjournment. He had been trying all day and all night to induce the silver men to allow the senate to take a recess and thus keep the legislative day, which began Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock, alive. But the obstinate silverites would accept only adjournment. At 1:40 a. m., after the quorum had been twice broken, he reluctantly threw up the sponge. This forces the repealers to relinquish the ground they secured and begin all over again if the attempt to secure a vote by brute force is to be attempted once more.

THE DAY IN DETAIL.

Voorhees Calls Time and Continuous Session Begins.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—Mr. Allen was speaking in the senate when at 6:05 o'clock Mr. Dubois (Rep., Ida.) rose, and, Mr. Allen yielding to him, he observed that it was 6 o'clock, the hour when the senate usually adjourned. He asked the senator from Indiana (Mr. Voorhees) whether he was going to make that motion.

"I feel it to be my highest duty," said Mr. Voorhees, "not to make that motion, but on the contrary to ask the senate to stay in continuous session until the pending measure is disposed of."

Mr. Dubois denounced this action as undignified and uncalled for, but that the opposition was ready for the struggle. Several other senators expressed themselves regarding the move and the struggle began.

Allen's Long Talk.

The first night session of the senate was a peculiar one. Senator Allen took the floor at 5:15 in the afternoon, and without interruptions, except such as were purely incidental, he had the floor all night. He proved himself an able and indefatigable talker. At no time did his voice fail him, and even when the clerk was calling the roll to secure a quorum, he stood erect and ready to proceed with his remarks. Spectators grew weary, but the speaker kept on. At 8 o'clock in the morning, after talking over 14 hours, he concluded his speech, apparently as fresh as when he began. Mr. Allen's speech breaks all previous records, and his powers of endurance won for him the admiration of those who were opposed to his tactics. Prior to this Mr. Faulkner was the record breaker, he having held the floor for 13 hours during the force bill debate.

Silver Men Object to a Recess.

At 7 a. m. the repeal men asked that a recess be taken in order that senators might get 30 winks and breakfast, but the proposition was spurned by the silverites, who replied that if the present proceeding was a test, it must be in every sense of the word.

The first rays of daylight brought great relief to the tired solons.

Mr. Voorhees rallied notably and Mr. Hill looked as if he were capable of a campaign of indefinite length. Mr. Smith of New Jersey also looked fresh, and the venerable Senator Palmer gave an indication of his purpose to stick it out for three years if necessary by the cheerfulness with which he remained at the front. Mr. Harris of Tennessee was still as alert as of yore and it was a noticeable fact that the older senators who had been expected to first show signs of distress, were holding out with a show of vigor that their juniors emulated with ill success.

Voorhees Forces a Vote.

At the conclusion of Mr. Allen's remarks Mr. Voorhees moved to lay the Peffer amendment on the table. A number of dilatory motions were made by the silverites and disposed of and the amendment was then laid on the table by a vote of 33 to 17.

Mr. Martin (Dem., Kan.) then addressed the senate. He continued, with the usual interruptions for a call of the house, until 4 p. m. when he sat down, saying he had concluded his remarks for the present.

Mr. Teller immediately took the floor and proceeded with a speech against the bill and at 6:20 was relieved by Mr. Stewart, who continued until 1:40 a. m. He was constantly interrupted, however, by lack of a quorum and several times waited over an hour while the sergeant-at-arms was searching for absent members.

The Last Roll Call.

At 1:20 Mr. Wolcott again suggested the absence of a quorum. Thirty-six senators answered the roll call and the sergeant-at-arms was instructed to bring in absentees. At 1:40 he submitted his report in writing, which showed that 3 senators were absent from the city, 12 excused by the senate, 4 unable to attend on account of illness, 9 in the Capitol who made no answer to the summons, and 16 reported at their residences as absent from home and could not be found. Immediately after this Mr. Voorhees said that in view of the report of the seargeant-at-arms it was evident no further business could be transacted, and he therefore moved that the senate adjourn. There was no opposition, and the the senate at 1:45 adjourned.

Grind Again Commences.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—The senate [illegible] the purchase repeal bill. Mr. Voorhees was in his seat at 11 o'clock looking somewhat tired, but alert and resolved to push the bill to the last. At 11:30 the bill was taken up on his motion and Mr. Stewart took up his speech at the point where he had left off 10 hours before. Notices of two amendments to the bill were given by Mr. Vest (Dem., Mo.) and Mr. Allen (Pop., Neb.). Mr. Vest proposes to repeal the silver purchase clause of the Sherman act, the free coinage of silver at the rate of $3,000,000 a month until the limit of $800,000,000 is reached; the coinage of the seignorage to standard silver dollars (16 to 1); the authorizing of the treasury department to require gold payment on any United States obligations whenever the secretary is satisfied that it is applied for with a view of exporting the gold; authorizing the issue of certificates to exchange for silver dollars, and provides for a joint committee of the two houses on the question of finance. Mr. Allen's amendment is a free coinage proposition.

Mr. Stewart yielded the floor to Mr. Manderson (Rep. Neb.,) who brought up the question of the Union Pacific railroad and the appointment of receivers therefor, and the rest of the day was spent in discussing what action should be taken by the government in the case.

Roll Calls the Order.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—The night session of the senate was a weary succession of roll calls to keep a quorum, and was only ended at 10 p. m. by a motion made by Mr. Voorhees to adjourn. Mr. Peffer had the floor for a speech, but he only spoke a few minutes at a time before someone would raise the "no quorum" point, and the clerk would be directed to call the roll. Finally a partial agreement was reached by which filibustering by silver senators is to cease in consideration of the abolition of night sessions. If the agreement is perfected no more night sessions will be held.

PASSED THE BILL.

The Tucker Amendment to the Federal Election Law Adopted.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 10.—The house has passed the Tucker bill, repealing the federal elections bill, by a strict party vote, yeas 200, nays 101. The Populists voted with the Democrats in the affirmative.

GEARY LAW EXTENDED.

Amended Bill Relating to Chinese Registration Passed by the House.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—The house has passed the McCreary bill, with the amendments offered by Mr. Geary and Mr. Caminetti. The bill as passed extends the provisions of the Geary law six months, defines Chinese laborers and Chinese merchants, makes mandatory photographic identification, requires marshals to carry out orders for deportation, jailing Chinamen without bail pending the execution of deportation writs, and excludes Chinamen convicted of felony from permission to register. Mr. Geary declares that the bill as passed is perfectly satisfactory to the coast, and if enforced at the expiration of the time limit will settle the Chinese problem.

NO MORE APPOINTMENTS.

Cleveland Will Leave Offices Unfilled Till the Silver Bill Is Settled.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—It comes straight from the executive mansion that President Cleveland will make no more appointments until after the fate of repeal is known. There have been so many stormy executive sessions over confirmations that the president will not venture to make any more appointments at present.

RECEIVERS APPOINTED.

Union Pacific Railroad Unable to Pay Interest.

OMAHA, Oct. 13.—The Union Pacific road has passed into the hands of receivers, President Clarke, Comptroller Mink and Government Director Anderson being appointed. The application was made by the executors of the Ames estate, by the son-in-law of the late Sidney Dillon, and by Director Atkins as independent stockholders. The object was to keep intact in one system and preserve the road at its greatest value and anticipate possible sales growing out of failure to meet obligations because of dull times. The present theory of management will be continued, and all officers, agents and employes retained. Mr. Anderson, who was appointed government director by President Cleveland, and was a member of the Pacific road's investigating commission, represents the government interest.

A Long Strike.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 11.—The big strike inaugurated by the weavers in Olneyville bids fair to become a long struggle between the strikers and the millers; but it is believed now that it will be continued chiefly to those already out, as up to the present time the weavers in other mills throughout Rhode Island have refused to enter into the ranks of the unemployed. A big mass meeting was held and the general management of the strike was placed in the hands of the chairman and secretary, neither of whom are workmen.

Free Fish.

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 17.—The treasury department at Washington has notified the dominion authorities that fresh or frozen fish caught in Canadian waters will be admitted into the United States free when caught with nets or other devices owned by citizens of the United States.

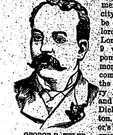
LONDON'S NEW LORD MAYOR.

He Will Soon Be Inaugurated With Great Pomp and Ceremony.

George Robert Tyler, alderman for Queenhithe since 1887, having passed the shrievalty of the city, as ancient custom requires, and been duly elected by the liverymen of the great city guilds, will be duly installed lord mayor of London on Nov. 9 with all the pomp and ceremony that have come down from the days of Henry Fitzalwyn and the famous Dick Whittington. Lord Mayor's day is the great city holiday of London, and those who lose sight of the significance of the ceremonials are apt to vote it a useless nuisance.



GEORGE R. TYLER.

The new lord mayor is really inducted into office on the 8th of November, though the 9th is Lord Mayor's day. On the 8th at the Guildhall, he is presented very ceremoniously with the city's scepter, seal, purse, sword, mace and keys, and the retiring mayor formally resigns to him the civic chair. Everybody engaged in the ceremonies is attired in brilliant hued robes of office, and the ceremonies include much reverential bowing and ironclad formality, but these things have their uses.

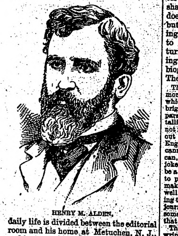
On the morning of Nov. 9 the new lord mayor begins to exercise his functions, formally taking possession of his office at the Guildhall. Then follows what is called the lord mayor's show. This is the gorgeous procession from the Guildhall to the law courts within the precincts of Westminster. Before his coach run many footmen in livery, and there is a long line of carriages bearing the aldermen and other city officials, the heads of the several guilds and the main body of the new mayor's own guild. In their best and gaudiest official gowns, accompanied by their beadles and their banners and by floats illustrative of historical events or industrial processes, they make a brave show indeed, though it sometimes has a tawdy and theatric effect.

At the law courts the lord mayor is presented to the lord chief justice of England and takes the oath of fidelity to the sovereign. Then he calls on the judges of the high court of justice and invites them to dinner, after which he goes back to the city, takes possession of his official residence, the Mansion House, and for a year within the city is the greatest of all the queen's subjects, giving precedence only to her majesty herself.

A MODEST MAGAZINIST.

Henry M. Alden Is the Guiding Genius of Harper's.

After 24 years of service in the editorial chair of Harper's Magazine, Henry Mills Alden is fairly entitled to the distinction conferred upon him by his contemporaries, who call him "the dean of the magazine world." Few people know him, though many admire his work. His daily life is divided between the editorial room and his home at Metuchen, N. J., and he is seldom seen at the gatherings of literary people in the metropolis. His home life and his books are more attractive to him and may be of greater service to his readers, for who can tell how largely responsible his fireside habits are for that indescribable feeling of restfulness that old readers of Harper's feel when they get a new number in their hands?



HENRY M. ALDEN.

Mr. Alden has been connected with the Harpers since 1863, when he succeeded Richard Grant White as editor of Harper's Weekly. That position he retained for six years, and since then he has been in charge of The Monthly Magazine, devoting his entire time to his work and never obtruding himself or his name upon public notice. His work is entirely impersonal, and even the book which the Harpers published for him in 1890, "God In His World," was anonymous. It is a singularly winning work, bringing comfort to many anxious hearts, and quite in line with the early predilections of its author, who in his college days is said to have contemplated writing a history of philosophy.

Mount Tabor, Vt., was Mr. Alden's birthplace and Nov. 11, 1836, his birthday. John Alden of Mayflower fame was his ancestor, and the first president of Amherst college was an uncle of his mother. He was educated for the ministry, graduating at Williams college in 1857 and going at once to the theological seminary at Andover. While there he wrote two essays—"The Eleusinian Mysteries" and "The Saviors of Greece"—which James Russell Lowell printed in The Atlantic, of which he was then editor. In the winter of 1863-4 Mr. Alden delivered a series of lectures on "The History of Paganism" before the Lowell institute of Boston. He was forced to abandon his ministerial career because his voice was not of a caliber to meet its requirements. How much literature was the gainer thereby let a coming generation estimate.

BILL NYE UP TO DATE

THE DEVELOPMENT OF A POPULAR HUMORIST.

One Reason For His Remarkable Success. His Early Struggles and Present Prosperity—His Ideas of American Humor—How He Writes—Interesting Characteristics.

On a parlor center table in Laramie, Wy., lies an album of questions and answers which are denominated mental photographs. From one page dated February, 1879, the following paragraphs are selected:

What is your favorite color? Sorrel.

Tree? Christmas tree.

Object in nature? The trick mule in the circus.

Gem? Ace of diamonds.

Musicians? The Bull brothers, Ole and Sitting.

Prose authors? Mark Twain and the commissioner of patents.

Book to take up for an hour? My grocer's passbook.

What book (not religious) would you part with last? My pocketbook.

Where would you like to live? On the top shelf.

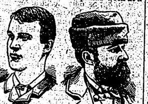
If not yourself, who would you rather be? Yours truly.

What is your idea of happiness? Short space between meals.

What is your bete noir? Don't know what a bete noir is.

What is the sublimest passion of which human nature is capable? The passion that actuates the maternal slipper.

To the reader who is familiar with the newspaper literature of the day it is scarcely necessary to state that to this disclosure of odd characteristics is signed the name of Edgar Wilson Nye, the ingenuous humorist who recently visited the World's fair "for a plumb week at a scandalous low price" and has now gone to Europe to "jostle and junket around with foreign dynasties."



NYE IN 1870 AND IN 1879.

Very different from the serene and polished humorist of today was the bewhiskered Nye of 1879. The struggling, ill fed, roughly clad editor of the frontier, who eked out a subsistence by dispensing justice and distributing mail, has developed into an accomplished man of the world, a favorite lecturer and a writer of international fame. But his work is essentially the same. There is the all pervasive good nature, and the odd and homely characterization of familiar things which is always entertaining and often irresistibly droll.

With the exception of Charles B. Lewis, better known as M. Quad, probably no newspaper humorist has had such a long, well sustained and successful career as Nye. And the reason of his prosperity is not difficult to understand. His humor is wholesome, spontaneous and healthful. There is no bitter sarcasm, no covert malice. His shafts tickle, but do not wound. He does not hesitate to make himself the butt of his own jokes, and with surprising insouciance submits his personality to the ludicrous libels of the caricaturist. In this connection it is interesting to read what he says in "The Autobiography of an Editor," published in The Century a year ago:

> There is a grim and ghastly humor—the humor that is born of a pathetic philosophy—which now and then strikes me in reading the bright and keen witted work of our American paragraphers. It is a humor that may be crystallized by hunger and sorrow and tears. It is not found elsewhere as it is in America. It is out of the question in England, because an Englishman cannot poke fun at himself. He cannot joke about an empty flour barrel. We can, especially if by doing it we may swap the joke for another barrel of flour. We can never be a nation of snobs so long as we are willing to poke fun at ourselves. It saves us from making asses of ourselves. Today many a well fed special writer goes on Saturday evening to the cashier of a prosperous metropolitan journal for the reward he earned years ago on some struggling, starving, wailing bantling that is now sleeping in the valley.
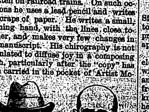
> There are gray streaks in his hair and a wrinkle here and there that came when he walked the floor of nights with that feeble, puling, colicky journalistic child, but with those gray hairs he got wisdom, and he learned patience. He learned to be more prodigal with his humor and more economical with his moans, and when he got a little grist of sunshine he called in the neighbors, and when one woe came as the advance agent of a still greater, allied woe, traveling by means of its own special train, he worked it up into a pathetic story and made some one else the hero of it.

Mr. Nye has a habit of using his knee for a writing desk, and many of the letters which convulse the multitude are written on railroad trains. On such occasions he uses a lead pencil and writes on scraps of paper. He writes a small, running hand, with the lines close together, and makes very few changes in his manuscript. His chirography is not calculated to diffuse joy in a composing room, particularly after the "copy" has been carried in the pocket of Artist McDougall until its edges and creases are frayed. His private letters are frequently quite as funny as his newspaper correspondence, but in conversation he is usually serious.



NYE IN 1893.

In private life Mr. Nye is modest and genial, a fond father and a devoted husband. He has a beautiful home at Arden, N. C., and receives a handsome income from his lectures and newspaper work. He has published a number of books and in 1891 produced a play, "The Cadi," which pleased his admirers, but did not score a financial success. Mr. Nye is 43 years old and is a native of Maine.

ORGANIZED FOR CHARITY.

The Protestant Orders of Nurse and Visiting Deaconesses.

The establishment of the order of deaconesses by Protestant denominations—or rather its re-establishment, for the order was a prominent feature of the primitive church—may be classed among the most important of the beneficent undertakings of recent years. The Lutherans were the pioneers in the movement, and the Episcopalians soon followed them, though the latter church already had several sisterhoods and conventual orders which were organized for similar work, but on a somewhat different plan, more like that of some of the female orders of the Roman church. The Methodists followed the Episcopalians, the general conference of five years ago establishing the order and prescribing the duties and government of its members.

NURSE DEACONESS.

The Presbyterians have discussed the matter in several general assemblies and many presbyteries, but have generally voted against the order on the ground that it is "not Biblical." Professor Charles A. Briggs, who is under suspension for heresy, was an earnest advocate of the order, and it may be of interest to note that his daughter has entered the school for the training of deaconesses connected with Grace Episcopal church in New York city, though she cannot enter the order in that church, as she is not an Episcopalian.

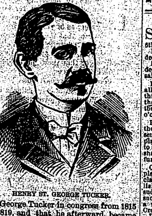
The training and duties of the members of the order in the different sects are very similar. They are required to be unmarried women not under 25 years of age and to spend at least two years in special training for their work. The Methodist deaconesses are divided into two classes, visiting deaconesses and nurse deaconesses. The former devotes her whole time to ministering to the poor, the sick, the orphan and the sinful and to such other Christian work as may be suited to her abilities. Her training involves much Biblical and doctrinal study, but practical work is not by any means neglected.

The nurse deaconess, in addition to her Bible study, receives thorough instruction in general and medical nursing. Her time is entirely devoted to the sick poor, and cots, clean linen, a washerwoman and the services of a physician are at her command if she finds them necessary. Her services are given to the suffering entirely free, but always with a view of ministering to their spiritual as well as their physical needs. These women are bound by no vows and are free to sever their connection with the order at any time. They may reside with their families or at the various homes which have been established for them in most of the large cities. Most of them prefer the community life, and it is of undoubted assistance in keeping them interested in their work.

THE VIRGINIA TUCKERS.

Henry St. George Is the Fifth of the Family to Serve In Congress.

Congressman Henry St. George Tucker of the Tenth Virginia district, who has come to the front in the house of representatives recently as the author of a bill to repeal the federal election laws, is the fifth member of the Tucker family to sit in the house and the second of the same given names. It is a fact very few people remember that there was a Henry St. George Tucker in congress from 1815 to 1819, and that he afterward became presiding justice of the Virginia court of appeals.



HENRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER.

John Randolph Tucker, son of the elder Henry St. George, comes more within the purview of living generations, and his career as a member of the house from 1876 to 1887 is recent and well known enough to need no recounting here. He retired from congress to make way for his son and is enjoying his hale old age in his native state, devoting himself to the duties of his law professorship at the Washington and Lee university.

The present Henry St. George Tucker is now serving his third term in the house, which he entered in 1889. He is 40 years old, and, like his father, was born at Winchester. He was educated at Washington and Lee, taking his A. M. degree in 1875 and his B. L. in 1876. After that he devoted himself to practicing law at Staunton, where he resides, until he was elected to congress. He has never held any other public office.

Alexander Hamilton's Watch.

A watch originally owned by Alexander Hamilton now belongs to Louis M. Hobbins of Madison, Wis. It is known that Hamilton wore this watch when the Declaration of Independence was signed, and also that he wore it during the duel with Aaron Burr.

ASTOUNDING MAGIC.

THRILLING FEATS PERFORMED BY ANCIENT ORIENTAL JUGGLERS.

The Wonderful Conjuring Tricks Were Accomplished Without the Use of Elaborate Paraphernalia and Seem Almost Beyond Belief.

Tales which horrified our forefathers while they were trusting and ignorant, which stirred a later generation to mirth and were dismissed at length as threadbare jests, become interesting again now that we can perform these miracles ourselves. The best of our conjurers' tricks have been learned in the east, and in many instances they have improved on the original. But it is not certain that their modus operandi is the same.

The most ingenious "professor" in Europe might despair when set to achieve that feat which is the first trial of an aspirant among the Kakhuens, as Sir E. Slade describes it. The neophyte must climb a ladder of which the rungs are naked swords, edge upward, and sit upon a platform thickly studded with spikes for an uncertain time before he even "goes up for examination"—and this in the open air among a crowd of tribesmen.

Of the stories told by the Ibn Batuta some have been verified, so to speak, but not all. One day, when he was talking with Mohammed Tughlak at Delhi, three Yogees approached, and the emperor told them to astonish his guest. Forthwith one took the form of a cube, rose into the air and hung above their heads. Ibn Batuta fainted promptly, but the emperor gave him a draft which brought him to in an instant.

It has been suggested by those who can read the original text that this must have been alcohol in some form. However, when he recovered his senses the object was still suspended. The second Yogee then snatched a sandal from one of the bystanders and struck it sharply on the ground, thereupon the sandal mounted and slapped the cube, as if upon the face, when down the Yogee fell. Mohammed Tughlak promised to show his guests things yet more surprising, but Ibn was seized with a palpitation of the heart, which put a stop to the entertainment for that time. Perhaps there was no "draft" handy.

On another occasion, however, some Chinese jugglers gave a performance. "In my presence," says this respectable traveler, "they produced a chain 50 cubits long which they tossed upward, and it stood erect. A dog was then brought forward. It ran up on the chain and on gaining the top vanished. In the same manner a boy, a panther, a tiger and a lion mounted one after another and disappeared. At last they took down the chain and put it into a bag, no one discerning how the animals were made to vanish in the mysterious way I have described. This, I may venture to affirm, was beyond measure strange and surprising."

An exact pendant to this is tale civ., in the "Liao-chai-chih-i," translated by Mr. Giles under the name of "Strange Stories From a Chinese Studio." The author declares that he himself beheld the marvels related—the only instance, we believe, in which he vouches his personal experience, a fact worth noting, for he tells a thousand marvels of the sort. When a little boy, Sung Lung was taken to the provincial capital for the spring feast and followed the crowd into the judges' yamen. In the middle of the hall was a man with a little boy, who undertook to perform anything demanded of of him. The great men seated round asked for peaches. It was the month of March.

Much "business" followed, but at length the juggler said he must get them from the orchard of "the royal mother," who dwells in heaven. He took from his box a piece of cord "some tens of feet long," arranged it carefully and threw one end into the air, where it remained fixed, "as if caught by something," and he paid it out from below. Higher and higher the rope mounted, until a small piece only remained in his hands. Then the man called his boy and bade him climb up. Up went the boy, after more "gag," like a spider running up its thread, and in a few minutes he was out of sight.

Presently a peach fell down as large as a basin. While the magistrates were examining it the rope dropped suddenly in a heap, and the man cried: "Alas, somebody has cut it! What will my son do now?" At the same instant the boy's head fell from heaven, and lamentations which may be imagined followed. Limbs and body came tumbling after. To omit "business" the juggler collected them, put them in his box and begged help for the funeral expenses. The horrified spectators subscribed liberally, and when they had given as much as could be hoped the man tapped upon the box, saying, "Why don't you come out, you rascal, and thank the gentlemen?" Forthwith the boy threw up the lid, jumped out and bowed to the company.

Sung Lung says: "I have never forgotten this strange trick, which, as I have heard now, is performed by the White Lily sect, who probably learned it from this man." The White Lily, otherwise "Do Nothing," Wu-Wei-Keaou, is the most dreaded secret society of China, said by Mr. Giles to date from 1450. Mr. Maskelyne, we hear, has been consulted upon Ibn Batuta's trick. He answered: "These apparent effects were due doubtless to the aid of concave mirrors, the use of which was known to the ancients, especially in the east, but they could not have been produced in the open air." The explanation seemed almost as incomprehensible to the uninitiated as the statement itself. As a matter of fact, however, the Chinese performance did not take place in the open air. Sung Lung mentions distinctly that a hall in the judges' yamen was the scene. Upon the other hand, how could the rope and the boy penetrate a roof? But then again Mr. Giles [illegible]. If the hall was but partially covered in, Mr. Maskelyne's [illegible] might be [illegible]—London Standard.

BUILDING A DRAMA.

An Interesting Account of How the Real Article Is Constructed.

A real drama is constructed and not written. It is built up as a house is erected by the bricklayer and stonemason, and the words are only the bricks and stones and have the same relative value to the design of the playwright as these to the designs of the architect. The architect has the structure in existence and clearly wrought out before the first stone is laid, and the drama of the true playwright is in existence before a word is written. Words there must be, just as there must be bricks, but as the latter can be carted from the kiln at current prices in any quantity, so can the former be brought to the playwright from the dictionary by any purveyor of sentences at current prices.

The rare man who constructs a good play can hire men by the regiment to write the lines. But the dialogue, the epigram, the repartee, the brilliant speech such as we find in Congreve and in Sheridan, is not this an essential? the reader will ask. Let us not put the cart before the horse. It is the situations that produce the dialogues. It is not the dialogues that produce the situations. Given a situation that calls for a smart, brisk, snappy, witty exchange of words, and the words will come. We see this in real life, and the stage copies real life. Even in so simple a situation as when a couple of cartmen get their wheels locked on Broadway on a muddy day and a policeman comes up to separate them, you will hear a good deal of smart though coarse dialogue. Such dialogue and all dialogue that grows out of any situation (and no dialogue worth listening to grows out of anything else) is interesting in proportion as the situation is interesting.

Without situation to call forth an interchange of language suitable to the occasion, and especially such situation as of itself interests the audience and causes each member of it to ask himself what the characters will say next, a lot of well dressed people might stand or sit around on the stage and fire off epigrams at each other, and the audience would yawn.

Dramas, so called, written in perfect accordance with syntax, witty here and there and always elegant, pour in upon the manager and are repeated with the utmost energy and dispatch because they are nothing but sermons or essays in three or four chapters called acts. Their authors style them dramas because they are not dramatic. They divide them into acts because they involve no action and subdivide them into scenes because where nothing is done nothing can be seen. I may remark in passing that the old fashioned shifting of scenes during an act is now only put into plays by novices who have not studied the modern stage.—W. H. Crane in North American Review.

How Gravitation Varies.

That changes involving the displacement of immense masses are going on within the earth is one of the suggested explanations of some observations recently announced in France. It has been found at the Parc St. Maur observatory that the force of gravitation, or the weight of bodies, undergoes daily variations. These are rendered sensible by placing in the earth a tube containing a column of mercury balanced by the pressure of hydrogen contained in a closed vessel connected with the tube and registering by means of photography the alterations in the level of the mercury.

After all corrections have been made for the effect of changes of temperature it appears that certain sudden variations in the level of the mercury are only to be explained on the theory that they are due to change in gravitation. These variations last from 15 minutes to an hour. They are of course very small, amounting at a maximum to only one-twentieth of a millimeter, but they may imply very great displacements of matter in the interior of the globe.

It has been suggested that similar experiments should be conducted in the neighborhood of active volcanoes, where liquefied rock is moving beneath the surface, and other disturbances of the strata of the earth are taking place.

Such facts as these present to the imagination a very formidable picture of the gigantic commotions that accompany the slow cooling and contraction of the globe, on whose hardened crust we rear our edifices, wondering, when some of them are occasionally shaken down by earthquakes, at the instability of a planet that is apparently so solid.—Youth's Companion.

The Ugliness of Trousers.

Trousers appear to have been introduced into Rome at a comparatively late period and as a part of the military uniform. They are worn by the Roman soldiers represented on Trajan's column as well as by barbarians. The Greeks had never adopted them. With their instinctive sense of beauty they had recognized that these are the only garments that cannot possibly be made graceful. A sleeve may become a part of the drapery of a figure. A trousers leg is more obstinate in its ugliness. If tight, it bags at the knees on the third wearing. Yet this is perhaps its least objectionable shape. If somewhat loose, it takes petty and meaningless folds. Some oriental nations have tried to disguise it as a skirt, but the result is not entirely satisfactory. If the trousers do not appear to give freedom to the leg, they have lost their principal merit. Compromise, which is the life of politics, is the death of art, which should always struggle after an ideal. So thought the Greeks when they entirely renounced for themselves the barbarous pantaloons.—Scribner's.

Some of the largest domes in the world are the Pantheon, at Rome, 142 feet diameter, 143 high; Baths of Caracalla, Rome, 112 feet diameter, 116 feet high; St. Sophia, Constantinople, 115 feet diameter, [illegible] feet high; [illegible], Florence, 139 feet diameter, [illegible] feet high; St. Peter's, Rome, 139 feet diameter, [illegible] feet high; St. Paul's, [illegible] dome 112 feet diameter, [illegible] feet high.

OLD TIME TROUSSEAU GOWNS.

Splendors of Silk and Gold, but What on Earth Were "Cama" and "Atlas?"

Some one who has been delving into old, musty magazines has brought to light a description of some trousseau gowns made for Princess Charlotte when she married Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg.

Here is the description of the wedding gown: "The wedding dress was a slip of white and silver atlas, worn under a dress of transparent silk net elegantly embroidered in a silver cama with a border to match, tastefully worked in floral designs to form festoons round the bottom, the sleeves and neck trimmed with a most rich suit of brussels point lace."

All very fine, but what, prithee, thou quaint old fashion writer, are "cama" and "atlas?" "Mantus" is almost as obsolete a part of the vocabulary of fashion, but we still recognize behind it the image of a flowing cape. But "atlas?" It is a conundrum. And "cama?" An Egyptian riddle. It seems to have been quite popular, whatever it was, for another of the trosseau gowns was of white net embroidered in gold cama, with border laid over white satin. In this case the mantus was of rich gold brocade, with blown roses richly woven in and trimmed with gold lace. Of the other gowns of this old time bride, one was of transparent net richly embroidered in the bright and dull tones of silver; another was of fine white india muslin worked over in little spots wrought in filigree gold and flounced with brussels point; another was of silver tissue trimmed with silver lace.

In addition to all this gold and silver finery, there were two whole dresses of brussels lace, valued respectively at 800 and 860 guineas; also two of British blond net, specially worked for her royal highness. The last but one of the gowns described was a white muslin morning gown, trimmed with three broad rows of valenciennes lace. All the gowns, it will be noticed, were white, and most of them were gorgeous with gold and silver thread.

But the going away gown of the Princess Charlotte is enough to make a modern bride gasp. It was of the richest white silk, trimmed with a broad foot ruche of white satin, headed by two deep flounces of brussels point. The short sleeves and low bodice—imagine a decollete traveling gown!—were veiled in the same lace. With this was worn a pelisse of white satin, lined with sarsenet and trimmed with broad bands of ermine. Unfortunately there is no description of the millinery which accompanied all this magnificence. Of course the hat must have been white and enormous, with sweeping plumes and voluminous lace veil.—New York Sun.

No Thief Will Touch It.

A costly ring, unguarded by police or other special protection, hangs suspended to a silken cord, round the neck of a statue of the Maid of Almadena, the patron saint of Madrid, in one of the most frequented parks of the Spanish capital. It is set with valuable diamonds and pearls, but there is not the least danger of its being stolen. The greatest thief in Spain would sooner steal the plate from his own mother's coffin than to even so much as touch the uncanny relics. Its history is curious and interesting, being equal to anything related in mediæval folklore.

It was made in accordance with a special order from the late Alphonso XII, who gave it to his cousin, the beautiful Mercedes, on the day of their betrothal. She wore it constantly during her short married life. Upon her death the king presented it to his grandmother, Queen Christina. She died soon after accepting it, and the king then passed the deadly little jeweled band of gold to his sister, Infanta de Pilar, who died within a month after. Again the accursed circlet started on its deadly rounds, next finding a place upon the finger of Christina, daughter of the Duke Montpensier. In less than 100 days she, too, was dead. Alfonso then put the cursed jewel in his own casket of precious relics and lived less than a year after so doing. Is it any wonder that such a harbinger of death can safely hang on a statue in an unguarded square.—Philadelphia Record.

Edison on Brain Food.

Said Edison in a recent interview: "Every man has his own ideas as to what he should and what he should not eat and what quantity of food he should partake of during the course of 24 hours.

"As a general rule, you may put it down that hustlers eat very little. I mean brain hustlers. They don't need much fuel. I eat very little."

"How much?"

The famous inventor picked up a scrap of yellow blotting paper lying before him and drew upon its rough surface a diagram. The broad brow of the thinker contracted. It must have been a difficult thing to determine just how much food substance it took to supply the system of the thinker. The result showed that Mr. Edison eats about 24 ounces of food a day.—Brandon Bucksaw.

Wanted the Basting Threads Pulled.

Eating corn from the cob may not be the most graceful or dignified mode of enjoying the vegetable, but it is a method much affected throughout the country.

Observing a young lady attacking an ear in this way recently, a Brooklyn man was bold enough to make the remark: "You like your corn unshaven, do you, Miss Blank?"

"Unshaven, did you say?" replied the miss, whose teeth had just become entangled in some corn silk. "I wasn't thinking of the whiskers, but when you spoke I was wishing that they'd pull the basting threads the next time they serve it."—New York Herald.

"I do not Eat Pastry."

How often you hear this expression, and the explanation that usually follows: "I am troubled with dyspepsia." The explanation is not far to seek. In the past Lard has been used as the principal shortening in all pastry, the result—dyspepsia. The dyspeptic need no longer be troubled, providing

Carl Rauk, the Belmont, N. D., giant, died last week. He was the largest man in Noth Dakota if not in the United States. He weighed just 520 pounds before his death. Mr. Rauk visited Crookston not long since and attracted a great deal of attention. It is said that he refused a cash offer of $2000 to go on exhibition at the Worlds Fair.

Speaking of the Saake car coupler the Moorhead News says: "The new car coupler which Mr. Saake of Crookston has invented has met with the approval of all the officials of both the Great Northern and Milwaukee railroads, and will have its initial trial at St. Cloud in about two weeks and will in all probability be adopted by both of these roads in the near future."

This is how Bro. Stevens, of the Warren Register view the county division scheme: "There are several ambitious towns in Polk county that want to be county seats, hence a strong combination has been formed for the purpose of dividing the county into five counties. How strong this movement may be cannot be foretold at present. That division will ultimately come about some way, seems assured; but it looks to an outsider, that it may be a long way ahead, owing to the large number of would-be county seats."

Geo. McLean has been busy receiving and answering letters ever since the JOURNAL announced that his potato crop on Jerome's Addition turned out at the rate of 300 bushels per acre. Commission houses who want to help him dispose of his crop and people who are anxious to learn how to raise potatoes are making life a burden and one man writes him quoting prices by the carload and promises to do better by him than any other house will if George will ship his entire crop at once. George is thinking of chartering a whole freight train if he can find teams enough that Rhinehart has not got into the big ditch to load the train. George raised a lot of potatoes over there for a fact—a big lot—50x150.

One Way to See a Sun Spot.

The shutters of the observer's house happened to be closed, and through a tiny hole near the top of them a beam of sunlight found its way to the floor. There it left an image, clear and round, tinged at the circumference with a fringe of blue and orange. The whole appearance of the beam as projected reminded the spectator of the image of the sun taken on paper through a telescope, and he got a sheet of white note paper in order to test his surmise. The result confirmed it. A beautiful round image of the sun fell on the paper, and near the center thereof could be seen a bluish spot which moved about with the image whenever the paper was shifted. The bluish colored object was a veritable sun spot, and the observer watched it by the simple means described for several days until the revolution of the sun had carried it out of sight.—Boston Herald.

PLAYING WITH FIRE.

The Gospel of Wealth According to Hon. Abram S. Hewitt.

The man who robs you of freedom of action—that is, the right to acquire property—is the enemy of society. I do not care in what form it is discussed. Men may persuade themselves by a sort of sophistry that they have a right to restrain their neighbor in the exercise of his faculties and in the right to gain an honest livelihood, but such a conclusion is against human nature. I know that I am created free, and no man has a right to restrain my freedom of action. Only society as a whole is invested with this power. So while men must combine together, must have trusts and associations and trades unions and trade organizations, they are all parts of a progress toward a plan of civilization. Yet, when they are abused so as to take away from any man the natural right to do with his own as he will, believe me, human nature may be trusted to assert its inherent right, and it does assert itself whenever the issue is fairly made.

Now, I do not think the men who have the great fortunes in New York are doing their full duty to the community. I say it frankly, but there are many noble exceptions. I know of one man in this city, a rich man. I mean by a rich man a man worth $20,000,000. This man inherited this sum. He did not make it. No man ever made $20,000,000. He deliberately said, "I have got enough." Every dollar of his income beyond that which is required for a very modest support of his family is appropriated to public and private charities. That man, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, has a proper conception of his duty.

I do not wish to preach what may be called "the gospel of wealth," but I know that when those who work shall have educated themselves up to a comprehension of the fundamental principles upon which society rests—then I know that the rich man will be educated pari passu and will recognize the fact that as to this excess of income over any ordinary requirements for a comfortable or even a luxurious life they are trustees responsible in this world to public opinion, and in the next world to God for the way in which the trust has been executed.

What, then, is the remedy for the evils which demagogues handle with such advantage to themselves and so much danger to the community? They are playing with fire. The remedy is education first and thrift next and last of all association together for the discovery of correct principles, for the discussion of grievances, for the representation of wrongs to those in authority, for securing in the public halls of legislation men who are fit to represent an educated community and not, as they are often now, representing the worst element of the community.

On education, thrift and association I base all my hopes for the continued progress of society, and I believe that under this potent influence the evil incident to the rapid accumulation of wealth in the hands of men who do not appreciate their opportunities and duties wil disappear.—Ex-Mayor Hewitt of New York.

SALMON A CENT EACH.

Cheap Food For the Poor on the North Pacific Coast.

Probably humpbacked salmon were never cheaper or thicker in Tacoma than they are right now. All sizes, from three to six pounds, are selling for a cent per fish. A batch of 107 was sold to an enterprising expressman yesterday for $1. About 8,500 fish were brought in during the day by fishing boats. The fish peddlers came down in force and loaded up their wagons and started back up town singing: "Fresh fish here! Five for a nickel!"

The fish, which for the past two weeks have been playing in schools around in the bay, are now beginning to go up the river and the creeks. Their meat on this account is not as good as it has been heretofore. Fishermen say they will soon disappear up the streams, and the silver salmon will put in their appearance. Two or three of the boatloads brought in yesterday were caught in the channel of the Puyallup river. The difference in the meat of those and the meat of the ones caught out in the bay could be plainly seen. The meat becomes whiter and is less firm.

The silver salmon in turn give way to the hideous dog salmon, which will not appear for several weeks yet.—Tacoma Ledger.

Millions of Toiling Little Ones.

Factory inspectors know that child labor is one of the factors on which our captains of industry count in their calculation on cost of production; that the employment of children increases, notwithstanding statutory regulations intended to check it; that avenues for this employment are multiplied with every evolvement of genius perfected in an improved machine, and as the magical machine and the child are brought together so in geometrical [illegible] is increased the number of unemployed adults. With the effects of its labor upon the child we are sadly familiar. The census of 1880, the last yet available, gave the number of wage earning children at 1,118,258—a child in every 16 robbed of its birthright of playtime, of physical growth, of mental training. It is probable that at the present time not less than 2,000,000 children under 16 years of age are in workshops and factories.—A Factory Inspector in Chicago Record.

Lo, the Poor Red Man!

Very few people know anything about the Indians in western North Carolina—the Cherokees. There are 1,200 of them and they are increasing in numbers. They own 73,000 acres of land, and very fine land it is. Their new chief is Stillwell Saunooke. He cannot speak English at all. There are some native preachers and four schools, the government maintaining the latter. There are other Cherokees, but these are not included in the 1,200, as they live elsewhere than on the reservation.—Baltimore Sun.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

TRACING ONE'S ANCESTRY.

Genealogy Appears to Be a One Sided and Partial Thing.

A conversation among a group of people the other day, all of whom were of good New England families, brought out some curious admissions. Only one of the party could trace his descent, in the line of mothers, farther than to his grandmother, though several could trace it very much farther in the paternal line, and even in what they called the "maternal line," which meant of course the mother's father's family. All present could tell the maiden name of their mother's mother, but only one could tell the maiden name of her mother. Of course many in New England among those genealogically careful people who can tell you the names of all their 16 great great grandfathers and grandmothers can do this, but these are comparatively few. And those who cannot carry back the line of mothers more than three generations include the representatives of some of the most aristocratic families in New England, whose line of paternal descent is unbroken to the settlement and beyond.

Let us think for a moment what this question involves. Suppose you write down your own name. Then write down on one line just above it the names of your father and mother—the father's name first on the left, the mother's second on the right. You perceive that these two people had an equal interest in your being. There is at least a chance that you are like your mother in important physical and mental respects.

Now, set down on a line above these two names the names of your grandfathers and grandmothers, beginning with your father's father and ending with your mother's mother. These two couples again had as much interest in your father and your mother as your father and mother had in you, and there is in you as much of your mother's mother as there is of your father's father. Now above this line write down the names of your eight grandparents—which you should surely be able to do if you are a Yankee. Each one of these eight had an equal interest in you. Now you perceive that you have a pyramid standing on its apex. You are the apex. The left hand edge of it is your line of fathers, and on the right hand of it is your line of mothers.

In all likelihood you derive rather more of your characteristics from the right hand edge of the pyramid than you do from the left and while in all probability, if you are from a good New England family, you can go on stretching out the left hand edge of the inverted pyramid you cannot go on with the right hand edge any farther, and this means that your genealogy is a one sided and partial thing.—Boston Transcript.

He Rode the Broncho.

Some one at the hotel told the fat man, who had a week's holiday, that horseback riding was the finest exercise in the world for reducing the flesh, so the gentleman with the surplus tissue rented a horse for a week—a tough, wiry buckskin broncho—and started in.

Every morning at 9 o'clock precisely he mounted his steed in front of the hotel, but no one ever saw him come back. He was never at midday dinner, but he appeared at the supper table, always looking worn out and dejected.

"How are you making out?" asked his adviser one night.

"Oh, pretty fair. Lost 20 pounds."

"That's good. Keep it up and you'll have a shape like the Apollo Belvidere."

"Can't keep it up. That's the trouble. I never was much at walking, or running either, for that matter."

"Walking? You don't need to walk when you go riding."

Then the storm burst.

"Walking! I guess you never rode a bronco, did you? Well, you want to try that one, and you'll learn something. The first day I went out on him he carried me as far as the bridge in the woods. Then he dumped me off in the mud. I chased him two miles, then I gave it up and walked home. The next day he took me half a mile further before he set me down. I went to the stable and kicked about it. The man asked me if I went riding for my health. I told him yes. He said that was just the horse I wanted and that he kept him specially for that purpose. Seventeen fat men had offered to buy him, but he wanted to be generous and give every one a chance."

He leaned his head on his hand wearily.

"I'll have to give it up, I guess. Here I've been crawling in the back door of this hotel for four days. It has cost me $1 a day to have my clothes cleaned, and it'll take me a year to recuperate. It's no use. I'm willing to stay fat if them blisters on my feet will only let up. Come inside and let me spend my last night in wild hilarity.—New York Herald.

A PAINFUL ACCIDENT.

J. V. E. Wyatt Thrown From a Wagon and Severely Injured.

John Wyatt is laid up with a badly sprained ankle, and is counting himself fortunate that he hasn't a broken leg to take care of.

As was noted in the last issue of the JOURNAL, he started on Wednesday afternoon the 18th inst. to drive to Mentor with a coffin for the remains of Miss Robinson. When about half way, while Dave Robinson was driving, one of the wheels of the vehicle dropped into a hole in the road, and Mr. Wyatt was thrown out and fell between the wheel and the box of the wagon, with his left foot caught in the spokes. He managed to grasp the box with his hands, and hung on until he extricated his foot and was thrown on the ground. When he gathered himself together he found that his foot was twisted at a right angle to where it ought to be, and taking the injured member in his hands he twisted it into shape, the bones going together with a report that made him think his leg was broken for sure.

Robinson started for the nearest house, where he found Harry Norrie and John Freeborn, who hitched up a team and took the injured undertaker about 17 miles to Miss Pollard's, where he stayed until the train came along next day, and the train men being notified at Mentor they stopped the train opposite Miss Pollard's and took him on board. When brought to the city and examined by Dr. Dunlop, it was found that a small bone in his heel was broken; and although the injury was very painful, it is a consolation to him to know that he will recover the use of his leg again.

The coffin was found about 100 yards from where the accident occurred, and John Freeborn took it to Mentor and procured the remains of Miss Robinson, bringing them to Crookston next evening on the train. From here the body was shipped to the mother of deceased, who lives in Vermont.

Robbed.

A young Englishman named Alfred Shields, who has lived around St. Vincent and Hallock for the past three years, came down on the train last Thursday, with a ticket for Seattle in his pocket, intending to go to the coast. On the train he had been drinking, and when he arrived here he was pretty well under the influence of liquor. While in this condition, he says he was taken out on the prairie by three men and relieved of all the money he had, about $10, and some valuable papers, which showed that he was a graduate of St. Thomas' hospital, London, where he had studied medicine. He intended to practice medicine in a physician's office in Seattle, but as his papers and money were gone, he decided to return to Hallock, which he did Saturday morning.

The Smugglers.

Of the play to be presented at the Grand next Monday night, the North American of Philadelphia dated Jan. 31st, 1893, says: The large audience thoroughly enjoyed the play and marvelous scenery. Miss Maymie Sheridan, the heroine of the piece, won a liberal share of applause for her creditable work.

The principle is to heat by rapid circulation rather than by radiation. A fuel saver would indeed be a blessing to the people of the northwest, and a fortune to its inventor.

Sauk Centre Avalanche: Mrs. F. E. Barnum received a telegram on Tuesday, conveying the sad intelligence that her youngest brother J. C. Webb, Jr., had died the day previous at Allegheny, Pa., of typhoid fever. The deceased was but 23 years of age and besides leaving an aged father and mother and three sisters and a brother, a young bride of but six months is left to mourn his death.

* * * The freight traffic on the Great Northern road at the present time is something immense. Extras going both ways are not unusual sights, and the fact that grain, cattle, sheep and hogs are being shipped to eastern marts explains this encreased traffic. * * * Very few farmers have any grain unthreshed, and nearly all rigs have been stored until next fall. The average yield for this vicinity is about eight bushels of wheat to the acre, or what the avalanche predicted before the threshing machines commenced to run out the staff of life. * * * Potatoes are being offered freely in this market, and as the price paid is 35 cents per bushel, farmers find them a more profitable crop than wheat at 46 cents a bushel.

MECHANISM OF A WATCH.

A Wonderful Little Machine That Took Hundreds of Years to Perfect.

Open your watch and look at the little wheels, springs and screws, each an indispensable part of the whole wonderful machine. Notice the busy little balance wheel as it flies to and fro unceasingly, day and night, year in and year out. This wonderful little machine is the result of hundreds of years of study and experiment. The watch carried by the average man is composed of 98 pieces, and its manufacture embraces more than 2,000 distinct and separate operations.

Some of the smallest screws are so minute that the unaided eye cannot distinguish them from steel filings or specks of dirt. Under a powerful magnifying glass a perfect screw is revealed. The slit in the head is 2-1,000 of an inch wide. It takes 308,000 of these screws to weigh a pound, and a pound is worth $1,585. The hairspring is a strip of the finest steel, about 9½ inches long and 1-100 inch wide and 27-10,000 inch thick. It is coiled up in spiral form and finely tempered.

The process of tempering these springs was long held as a secret by the few fortunate ones possessing it and even now is not generally known. Their manufacture requires great skill and care. The strip is gauged to 20-1,000 of an inch, but no measuring instrument has yet been devised capable of fine enough gauging to determine beforehand by the size of the strip what the strength of the finished spring will be. A 1-20,000 part of an inch difference in thickness of the strip makes a difference in the running of a watch of about six minutes per hour.

The value of these springs when finished and placed in watches is enormous in proportion to the material from which they are made. A comparison will give a good idea. A ton of steel made up into hairsprings when in watches is worth more than 12½ times the value of the same weight in gold. Hairspring wire weighs 1-20 of a grain to the inch. One mile of wire weighs less than half a pound.

The balance gives five vibrations every second, 300 every minute, 18,000 every hour, 432,000 every day, and 157,680,000 every year. At each vibration it rotates about 1¼ times, which makes 197,100,000 every year. In order that we may better understand the stupendous amount of labor performed by these tiny works, let us make a comparison.

Take, for instance, a locomotive with 6 foot driving wheels. Let its wheels be run until they have given the same number of revolutions that a watch does in one year, and they will have covered a distance equal to 28 complete circuits of the earth. All this a watch does without other attention than winding once every 24 hours.—Locomotive Engineer.

Effect of Lightning on the Body.

In describing the recent death of a boy by lightning a dispatch stated that an accurate picture of trees and foliage in the vicinity of the accident was made on the boy's body, which phenomenon was supposed to have been produced by the lightning in a manner similar to that of making pictures or photography.

This, however, is not correct. While such marks are observable occasionally on the bodies of persons killed they bear no relation whatever to foliage of surrounding trees, although they bear a certain resemblance to those objects. There is really no photographing of the image of the trees on the body. That the actual cause is quite different can be proved by experiment in the laboratory. When electricity is discharged at high tension, as lightning is, on the surface of a body having a poor conducting power, a luminous arborescent image is formed, showing the path of one or more of the sparks resulting from the discharge.

This was most beautifully shown in the experiments carried out with high tension currents in London by Swinburne. The current would exhibit scattered lines of light that would develop into most exquisite tracery, and take the form of plants or trees. The theory of this phenomenon is that the irregular courses taken by the spark may be due to the compression of air in the path of the discharge, or to superior conductivity of some parts of the surface of the body.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

TARIFF AND INCOME TAX.

The Ways and Means Committee Considering Momentous Problems.

The committee on ways and means, having closed its hearings and its doors, is now discussing the question of raising the revenue. The large reduction which it is intended to make in the tariff rates, and which will cause a large falling off of revenue before it goes into operation, renders it necessary to substitute some method of meeting this deficit. The Democratic members of the ways and means are not in complete accord at present as to how the revenue required shall be raised. Several members of the committee, including McMillin, Turner and Bryan, are in favor of increasing the tax on distilled spirits from 90 cents to $1.25 a gallon. They assume that this will increase the revenue on this article from $94,000,000, estimated for the next fiscal year, to $125,000,000.

They do not look favorably upon the proposition of David A. Wells, submitted to Secretary Carlisle, to double the tax on tobacco and malt liquors. His plan is to raise $64,000,000 annually from each of these items. The present tax realizes $32,000,000 on each article. These Democratic members hold that these articles are the poor man's luxuries and therefore should be taxed at a minimum rate. Whisky they claim is not a luxury, and that the producer can readily stand the increase without raising the price to the consumer. In addition, they claim that it can be collected without any increased expense.

For any additional revenue which may be required from the falling off of customs the Democratic members, with one or two exceptions, regard a graduated income tax as the most equitable method of raising revenue which could be applied. The class of the population who have incomes upward of $2,000 a year they claim can well afford to contribute to the support of the government. While they admit that there are some features which are inquisitorial and offensive, the system would readily yield the revenue required and out of a class of people who could well afford to pay. This proposition will have ardent supporters among Democrats of the committee and in the house. It will be antagonized by many of the northern and eastern Democrats in co-operation with the Republican minority in the committee and house.—Washington Dispatch.

QUITE ENGLISH, YOU KNOW.

A London Ladies' Club and the Cigarette Question.

A certain high class ladies' club is in danger of disruption over the cigarette question. A large minority of the members smoke, and therefore a smoking room is provided, but ladies who do not smoke object to this room and are agitating for its abolition. If they succeed, the smokers will probably leave the club, and the secession will be serious. According to one account, a nonsmoking lady, disliking the atmosphere of the place, is deterred from entering the room, and being conscious that it is the coziest and most gossipy room of the club is very unwilling to be shut out from the interesting talk. Her natural course would be to take to cigarettes also and brave the criticisms of home. But instead of raising the domestic question she raises the club question and wants the smoking room done away with.

The lady smokers, however, are strong in numbers, and being in possession of a comfortable privilege do not see why they should forego it. If the smoke is disagreeable to the nonsmoker, they say the nonsmoker can stay out. The Pioneer, which is one of the most prominent of the many ladies' clubs in London, wishes it understood that the story does not apply to it. Not more than 20 of its 280 members use the smoking room.—London Dispatch.

Fortunate Mortals.

Considering that bicycling in its present form is only four or five years old, the popularity it has obtained is surprising to the layman. To the crank, however, there is nothing astonishing about it. The modern bicycle offers a means of getting over ground that is at once healthful and economical. The silent steed needs no oats. A drop of oil now and then satisfies its appetite. It doesn't die. It isn't subject to spavin, ringbone or glanders. It doesn't run away, and no stable is required to shelter it. Seated on its back, the rider laughs to scorn the crowded cable cars and the elevated road. His cheeks glow with the ruddy health engendered by the exercise, and he would not exchange places with the fashionable in the dogcart whom he leaves far behind on the boulevard. It is no wonder, then, that all bicyclers are enthusiasts. They have a right to be. They enjoy advantages over ordinary people, and they are only human in showing that they possess them.—Chicago Herald.

Wise Advice.

In the "Life of Rowland Hill," by Mr. Charlesworth, published in London some years ago, there are many anecdotes of that remarkable man.

At one time when Mr. Hill was preaching for the benefit of a charity a note was handed to him, the writer of which asked whether it would be right for a bankrupt to contribute to the good cause.

"No," said the preacher after he had read the note, "but, my friends, I would advise you who are not insolvent not to pass the plate this evening, as people will be sure to say, 'There goes the bankrupt.'"—Youth's Companion.

THEY FEAR ANARCHISTS.

New Yorkers Who Hire Watchmen to Protect Their Lives and Millions.

"There are now four times as many watchmen and detectives along Fifth avenue in the vicinity of the residences of the money kings as there were a few months ago and before the anarchistic element became noisy." So said one of the watchmen I found guarding the new million dollar palace of Cornelius Vanderbilt. He told me that the owners of palaces along Fifth avenue have not been taking any chances in letting anarchists place bombs under their front stoops. He estimated that at least 500 new watchmen have secured employment since the anarchists began their recent noisy meetings on the east side. It was his fond hope that the reds would continue their harangue, as it gave employment to a good many "daycent fellers who needed a job powerfully bad."

"Since this recent anarchist talk and racket on the east side we have done a land office business," said the manager of a detective bureau. "We have supplied over 100 men to wealthy but timid New Yorkers within the past few months. One of the odd things about the rich men of Gotham is that they pretend to never fear trouble from the poor classes. I know one of the wealthiest men in the city whom I have provided with watchmen and special detectives for different purposes.

"The day after the arrest of this Emma Goldman, the anarchist, he called at the office and employed five men to guard his million dollar home up in Fifth avenue. I asked him if he feared the anarchists.

"'Oh, no, not at all,' said he. 'I am afraid of burglars, and I have recently imported a lot of valuable plate.'

"Well, after I furnished him the men one of them came to me and said he called up the entire force of watchmen and said he had reason to believe that the anarchists intended blowing up a number of mansions along Fifth avenue, and that his residence was among the number. He ordered the men to not wait to arrest any one whom they thought a suspicious character, but to shoot them down and he would stand the consequences, besides rewarding the watchman.

"He was so nervous about anarchists that he used to get up in the middle of the night and saunter out himself to see whether the men were all on post or not. Yes, he belongs to one of the families of the largest millionaires in New York, but I am not at liberty to divulge his name. I merely mention him to show you how nervous our millionaires get when there is talk of mob violence or a bomb plot.

"I have no doubt but that they have some very good reasons for anticipating trouble at the present time from the anarchistic element in the city. There is generally some crank willing to be made a martyr of for any cause. I have no hesitancy in saying that I believe some one of these anarchists who have been made so much of in the newspapers will use the deadly bomb on some capitalist's home in the near future. He will expect and be prepared for arrest, and death itself will have no terror for the crank if his fellows will only proclaim him a martyr for the cause."—New York Herald.

PROFESSIONS OVERCROWDED.

But the Supply of Mechanics Is Also Greater Than the Demand.

The learned professions are overcrowded. The cause of this unhappy crowding of the market for brain laborers is not far to seek. An immense number of persons, who in former times would have worked with their hands as their fathers did before them, are being educated to work with their heads. There is a general leveling up of the social grades, if you look at it optimistically. The son of the artisan becomes a clerk, the son of the clerk aspires to teach in school, the son of the schoolteacher aspires to go to Oxford or Cambridge. But this leveling up is not an unmixed blessing.

The result is that we have 50 times too many clerks—200 applied for an insignificant post advertised in The Times the other day—10 times too many half educated teachers, and, alas, 10 times too many university graduates turned out every year to crowd the ranks of the bar, the schools and journalism and recruit the year's crop of miserable and hopeless failures. None of these people can dig as their fathers did. They cannot make shop boys or busmen or crossing sweepers. Too many of them can only teach or starve.—London Saturday Review.

Drove a Gambler Out.

A swindling gambler was shown up during a game of poker in one of the private dining rooms of the Hotel Waldorf. A well dressed man, giving his name as W. W. Hurt, started a game of cards the preceding night in which he won several hundred dollars. One of the onlookers detected Hurt cheating and looked up his record. Hurt proved to be a professional card sharp with an unsavory past. In order to expose him the game was arranged. The play was for small stakes only, and not detecting Hurt cheating the manager of the hotel, tired of waiting for "crooked" work, stopped the game, returned the money to the players and gave them a sketch of Hurt's disreputable career.—New York Advertiser.

Mrs. McAdams and the Girls.

Mrs. Maud McAdams, nee Cox, and sisters-in-law, Misses Sarah and Nannie McAdams, living a little northwest of this place, a few days since went blackberrying, at which they succeeded very well. They left their baskets a few minutes for a stroll, and on returning observed a bear which had just made a dinner of their berries, and with clubs they compelled Bruin to leave, pursued by the dogs that had accompanied the party. The dogs had not gone far till they started up three deer and followed after them and Mrs. McAdams and the Misses McAdams joined in the chase. They shot one of the deer with a pistol. Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Montana, Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

On reading and filing the petition of J. O. Buhn administrator of said estate, setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead, of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof; the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to him granted to sell all of the real estate of which said deceased died seized.

And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary, for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate, appear before this Court, on Monday the 30th day of October, 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in the City of Crookston in said County, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said administrator to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies and expenses.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said County.

Dated at Crookston the 2nd day of October A. D. 1893.

By the Court.

WORST THIS YEAR.

WRECK ON THE GRAND TRUNK MOST APPALLING.

Many of the Bodies Recovered Were Burned Beyond Hope of Identification—List of the Dead Numbers Twenty-six, and as Many More Are Injured.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., Oct. 20.—Twenty-six heaps of charred, blackened flesh, all that remains of what, less than 24 hours ago, were men, women and children in the enjoyment of life, health and happiness, rest upon the floor in an improvised morgue in the basement of a furniture store in this city. A mile away in the city hospital are a score or more of human beings with gashed bodies and broken limbs. Add to this an engineer in jail and a conductor a fugitive from the law and the story is told in brief of the latest of railroad horrors and one of the most appalling in its character of this or of recent years.

Direct Disobedience of Orders

on the part of a Chicago and Grand Trunk engineer and conductor, both of whom had seen long service with the company and were considered model employes, was the cause of the tragedy. A Raymond excursion train filled with Eastern folks who had been taking in the sights of the world's fair, left the Sixtieth street depot of the road at Chicago at 8:15 as the first section of the night express known as No. 6. The train was in charge of Engineer Henry Woolly and Conductor Bert N. Scott, both residents of this place. All went well until the Battle Creek depot was reached. This was at 3:37. From here to the railroad yards, a distance of a mile and a half, there is a double track.

When the Raymond Special came to a full stop at the depot, the night operator handed to Conductor Scott two copies of an order for the train to proceed to the double track east of Main street, about half a mile distant, and there await the passing of the west bound Pacific express known as No. 9. This train, which was nearly three hours late, was composed of 13 day coaches and two baggage cars. Most of the day coaches had seen many years' service and were in poor condition to withstand a collision. Every one of the fated number was packed with Eastern people, the majority of whom, taking advantage of the low rates, were on their way to take in the last week of the exposition. The Pacific express was in charge of Engineer Gil Cranshaw and Conductor John Bird, both of whom had received orders at Lansing to look out for the eastbound train

On the Double Track.

After receiving his orders at Battle Creek station, Engineer Woolley pulled out on the double track, but instead of waiting until the westbound express had arrived, he continued on and entered again the single track. He had hardly gone an eighth of a mile when the headlight of the Pacific express was seen coming around the curve. It was speeding westward at the rate of fully 40 miles an hour. There was no time to apply air or reverse levers. The firemen and engineers of both trains jumped for their lives and a second later the giant locomotives that could be heard half a mile away. The shock was so terrific that the first four cars were completely telescoped, the first coach cutting through the second, and the second into the third like a flash of lightning, the roof of each passing over the heads of the sleeping passengers and sweeping them in a mass to the north end of the cars. To add to the horror the wreck took fire, and as the flames mounted up the groans and shrieks of the maimed and injured were succeeded by the heart-rending, agonizing appeals for help from the scores imprisoned by the heavy timbers. The travelers on the special, nearly all of whom had been shaken out of their berths by the shock, poured out of the cars, but they were almost powerless to render assistance to the injured. An alarm of fire was turned in and the department quickly responded, but by the time a stream of water was available the telescoped coaches were reduced to little more than the trucks remaining. The firemen then commenced the gruesome work of recovering what remained of the victims, the police taking charge of the valuables and keeping the crowd at a distance. In response to the alarm from the fire station pretty nearly the whole town had turned out and the leading residents, assisted by their wives, devoted themselves to those injured in the fourth car. These were placed in buggies and carts and taken to the Nichols Home, where a corps of physicians and nurses were in waiting to minister to their sufferings. The first body was found about 6 o'clock and a few minutes after a dozen were discovered in a heap around the stove of the second car. The task continued until 26 bodies or portions of bodies had been brought out.

Came Together With a Crash

Five More Identified.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., Oct. 23.—Five more bodies from the railroad wreck of Friday have been identified. They are those of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Saxe of New York city, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Doland of Tilsonburg, Ont., and J. J. Brown of Strathroy, Ont. This makes 18 in all who have been identified. The coroner's inquest is in progress.

Twenty-eighth Victim.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., Oct. 23.—Albert B. Bradley of Toronto, another of the injured in the Grand Trunk wreck, is dead. His demise swells the number of deaths to 28.

Dhuleep Singh Dead.

PARIS, Oct. 24.—The Maharajah Dhuleep Singh is dead.

SEEING IN THE DARK.

A Device Destined to Investigate the So Called Phenomena of Spiritualism.

A learned Italian, Signor Giorgio Finzi of Milan, is engaged in perfecting a pair of spectacles by whose means the wearer can see in the dark. The immediate use destined for these revealing lenses is the investigation of the so called phenomena of spiritualism, carried on usually in the densest darkness, hence not a little baffling to those earnest students of psychical marvels who wish to get at the truth in the chaff blown mass which a million apparently sane Americans, to say nothing of people of other nationalities, pin credence to.

With the new lenses and their electrical magic the investigator may sit down to join hands with believers or unbelievers, and slipping on these spectacles see unseen all that is going on, and while helping to dissolve humbug in the light of truth may get a glimpse of something not wholly to be classed as humbug—of phenomena on the plane of nervous revelation at least. Some examples of things as yet beyond scientific explanation have been encountered by psychical researchers in the different countries of Europe of late, as well as by Professor James and other students of these matters nearer home.

But apart from its immediate use in this department of investigation, what a pleasant prospect is opened up by the idea of seeing in the dark at will merely by putting on a pair of night glasses! Belated householders can guide the ready latchkey to its lair, doctors may mix prescriptions on their way to a sinking case, engineers can detect train robbers in the dim distance, and all the undescried terrors of lonely ways may be banished forever by the fortunate possessor of these glasses. "Lend me your ears" will no longer be such a phrase to conjure by as now; it will be "lend me your eyes," and—who can tell?—the time may come when Mr. Finzi's electrical lenses are fully perfected that if any of us are in the dark concerning any question whatever we may put on a pair of these spectacles and see our way clear before us!—Boston Transcript.

LIZZIE BORDEN'S HOME.

It Is Now Near the Fashionable Avenue of Fall River.

The new home of the Borden girls on French street is not on the best street in the town, but it is in a good neighborhood and near the most fashionable avenue. It was occupied by a man of means and good social position, who sold it because he wished to live where he could enjoy the fine prospect that is to be had from another point on the same hill. It is said that the sisters paid $11,000 for the place, and that may be the fact, though the house scarcely warrants a belief that such was a true figure. French street is a modern thoroughfare set with pretty villas, generally wooden, in open grounds with a showing of neat lawns, a few vases and flowers and plenty of shade trees. The houses are small and of the type of dwellings with which most of the smaller suburbs of this city are built up. The new Borden dwelling is a yellow and brown frame house, with a little pointed tower on one corner of the roof and a porch in front and partly on one side. The house might have cost $3,000 or $4,000 to build. It is not as fine as several neighboring cottages. It is said that the sisters employ only one servant, as they did in the old house down town.

Lizzie bears up extremely well after her remarkable experience; indeed she appears to be as well as she ever was and stouter and better looking. The case is different with the older sister. The family affliction, the horrors of the murders and the long strain during Lizzie's trial were more than her nerves could endure, and she is nothing like the woman she was. Her health is far from robust, and she frequently has to give up, or rather to break down.—New York Sun.

Lynchers and Lynching.

The report of the killing of many lynchers by the military force called out in Virginia shows that there is one region in the south alive to the importance of this, and with the resolution to teach the bloody lesson that we fear alone can be effective. Unfortunately, however, even in this case the display of resolution was only transitory, and the lynchers claimed their victim within 24 hours. But while all this is said it would be wrong to omit a word as to the imbruted character of the portion of the population of the south with whom these lynchers undertake to deal. Nothing can excuse their act, and it is a fearful mistake in every point of view. But the disregard of life on the part of many of the colored men of the south and the savage passion they evince in other respects are social evils that call also for serious attention. In addition to the crimes against women there, it is a terrible fact that there are negroes who murder constantly for money, even in small sums, and appear entirely destitute of moral sense. One has to be in the south to know the extent to which this prevails; few at the north realize it. There is a call for missionary work among this class that is louder than that which comes from any other heathen on the globe, and the more intelligent colored people themselves may well turn their attention to it.—Boston Herald.

Dublin's Mayor and City Politics.

The lord mayor is fine looking, about 50 years old, rather stout, has curly hair just turning gray, mutton chop whiskers and mustache, a ruddy face, and wore a dark suit. He is here as the guest of Chicago and the fair commissioners. Said he: "I have visited your city two or three times heretofore and admire it greatly. I had hoped to call upon your mayor today, but we got in too late. No, I have never had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Gilroy, though he came from County Donegal, so I am informed, while I was born in an adjacent county. I presume politics do not figure to any great extent in your municipal government," queried the lord mayor innocently.—New York Times.

HOW TO SEE THE WORLDS FAIR.

Suggestions as to the Most Convenient and Economical Method.

When you go to the World's Fair do not take a trunk with you if you can possibly get along without it, but pack your few necessary traveling articles in a hand bag or grip and carry it along with you. You will never know what a lot of annoyance you have been spared in this way. Then get your tickets from Crookston to Chicago and the greatest Fair the world has ever seen, reading via St. Paul, and thence via "Northwestern Line" to Chicago. The Northwestern line runs three superbly equipped trains from St. Paul to Chicago, leaving St. Paul at 8:00 a. m. daily, 6:25 p. m. daily except Sunday, 8:00 p. m. daily, making quicker time to Chicago than by any other line. When you arrive in Chicago you will find World's Fair omnibuses at the Northwestern line depot which will take you to the Van Buren street station of the Illinois Central road, where trains for the Fair leave every three minutes, and where World's Fair steamers can be taken for the Fair every ten minutes, or you can take a steam ferry from the depot of the Northwestern line direct to the same place via the Chicago river and making connections with the famous whaleback steamer Christopher Columbus for the Fair for 25 cents. When you arrive at the Fair you will find a number of first-class hotels within a stone's throw of the main entrance and dozens of good restaurants where meals can be had to accommodate the most modest purse.

By following these simple directions your trip is bound to be a pleasant one. See that your ticket from St. Paul reads via the Northwestern line, and remember that by this route you will obtain the best service, the greatest luxury, the most complete comfort. Be sure and buy your tickets at starting point.

As Long as You Live

You will regret it, if you fail to see the World's Fair at Chicago. Every one who has visited it says it is the grandest and most beautiful display of the products of science, art and industry that mankind has ever seen, and beside it all previous "world's fairs" sink into insignificance. It represents an expenditure of two hundred millions of dollars, and we shall not look upon its like again in this generation. Only three short weeks remain in which you will have the opportunity to visit it. To see, even for a week, this World's Fair, is to supplement your education, no matter how good it may have been, with invaluable information. Rates of fare are very low, and you can live in Chicago as cheaply as anywhere in America. You cannot afford to miss the Fair. Get ready to go soon, and then ask your home ticket agent for tickets reading via "The Burlington," the great scenic, vestibuled, compartment car, free reclining chair car and dining car line, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

HEART DISEASE 30 YEARS.

GRAND ISLAND, NEB., April 8th, 1892.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I had been troubled with HEART DISEASE FOR THE LAST 30 YEARS, and although I was treated by able physicians and tried many remedies, I grew steadily worse until I WAS COMPLETELY PROSTRATED AND CONFINED TO MY BED WITHOUT ANY HOPE OF RECOVERY. I would have very bad sinking spells, when my pulse would stop beating altogether, and it was with the greatest difficulty that my circulation could be started, which would bring me back to consciousness again. While in this condition I tried your NEW HEART CURE, and began to improve from the first, and now I am able to do a good day's work for a man 68 years of age. I give DR. MILES' NEW HEART CURE all the credit for my recovery. It is over six months since I have taken any, although I keep a bottle in the house in case I should need it. I have also used your NERVE AND LIVER PILLS, and think a great deal of them. Z. AVERY.

OUT OF THE JAWS of DEATH.

IT IS A STORY entirely out of the ordinary run of Serials, and portrays a class of people and a country seldom met with in romance. It is a powerfully drawn picture of

RUSSIAN DESPOTISM
NIHILIST PLOTTINGS
AND AN ESCAPE FROM SIBERIA.

With a strong and tender LOVE STORY interwoven.

THE JOURNAL does not believe in giving its readers old, cheap stories upon which the copyright has expired, and has therefore gone to considerable expense to secure the exclusive right to publish this serial here.

FIFTEENTH YEAR.

WOMANKIND.

FOR WOMEN AND HOME.

This well-known journal, a union of four leading women's papers, has won its fame because it deals with what really interests the women of America. Fashions from the standpoint of good taste and economy. Fiction of a pure and helpful kind. Music and Art suitable for non-professional tastes. Household hints written by practical women. Suggestions and aids for self-supporting women. It is a paper for women, by women, and its writers are among the most noted authors. Every line is original, every engraving a gem.

It is a paper of to-day without espousing the great questions of religion, politics and temperance, it gives all the news regarding them. It is universally quoted by the press because its views and articles are bright and unique. Send to Springfield, Ohio, for a sample copy. Formerly $1.00, it is now but 50 cents a year. Elizabeth Cherry Haire, Editor.

The Journal will give one year's subscription to WOMANKIND FREE

THE CAPITOL SITE.

The capitol commission has selected a site for the new state capitol. "It consists" says the Pioneer Press, "of about eight acres of land at the head of Wabasha, within three blocks of the present capitol, and fronting on the main electric thorughfare between St. Paul and Minneapolis. The situation, while not conspicuously elevated, is sufficiently so to give a commanding prominence to the new state building, since the city in front of it slopes downward many feet towards the south. The purchase consists of two blocks; the principal one, on which the new capitol is to be situated, is a parallelogram of 675 by 320 feet, bounded by Park, Aurora and University avenues and Cedar street. A block occupying a part of the frontage between Wabasha and University avenue is included in the purchase for obvious reasons. The prices at which this land was eventually purchased by the commissioners are nearly 50 per cent below those asked in the original offer made by the proprietors. The total cost is $256,000, and this includes the interest on its estimated valuation up to the dates several years ahead in which the payments for it can be made under the law. Its actual cost, interest aside, is a little over $200,000."

The location is undoubtedly a good one, and the purchase price reasonable enough, and from a St. Paul point of view the whole business is O. K.

But the people of the balance of the state cannot help but feel that St. Paul should have donated a site for the privilege of retaining the capitol. As good a site could have been gotten in Minneapolis free of cost, but the three-quarter mile limit in the capitol bill gave the commissioners no alternative except locate it in St. Paul, or not locate it at all.

Minnesota's capital building is not in keeping with the immensity and wealth of this great commonwealth, and it is proper that we should have a new building, but the provision in the capitol bill limiting the location of a new site to three-quarters of a mile of the present one was inserted at the instance of St. Paul real estate men and should never have gone in.

A SLIGHT DIFFERENCE.

On October 19th the Times published an article anent the corps of estimators on the Red Lake reservation. The Times claims to have made a thorough investigation, and found them to be a very bad lot. Here is the way they are sized up:

"Of the eighteen men who make up the corps of estimators, there are not more than three or four competent to fill the position for which they are selected. Further than this, a large number of them are a drunken, worthless lot of fellows, who have been sent up here by relatives, who wanted to get them out of the way and have used their political influence for that purpose. During the greater portion of the four months that they have been here, they have employed themselves laying around Crookston, Thief River Falls and other places, drinking and carousing and making themselves a nuisance to the community * * * * The chief examiner makes his headquarters at Thief River Falls, though what he does besides talking politics and having a good time, no one has yet been able to discover" etc., etc.

On October 20th, the Thief River Falls Press came out with an article in defense of these same estimators against an attack made on them by the Anoka Union. The article concludes as follows:

From a personal, intimate acquaintance with all of these gentlemen the Press has found them, with but three or four exceptions, to be men of good character, sober habits and wholly capable from much experience to perform the duties to which they have been assigned.

This is a direct, flat contradiction of the Times article, and the JOURNAL hopes that, for the sake of harmony and truth, McKenzie and Ware will get together and make their statements "jibe."

A WRONG POSITION.

The Grand Forks Plaindealer—McKenzie's paper—sneers at the idea of the farmers trying to do anything to have the freight rates on wheat reduced, and takes for a subject of sarcasm the call issued by the North Star alliance. After quoting the call by sections the Plaindealer winds up as follows:

"Bosh! It is reasonable to presume that after North Star [illegible] gets through with this [illegible] culty they will [illegible] regulating the movement of the moon and [illegible] unique, as the Plaindealer says, but its object is all right. Only by agitating, demanding and fighting for their rights will the farmers of this country receive any recognition or concession from the railroads or corporations.

This question of cheaper freight rates on wheat affects not only the farmer but the business man, the professional man, the mechanic and the laborer. Suppose the rate was reduced 8 cents per bushel, what would be the result? Every farmer in the Red River valley would realise from $30 to $300 more for his wheat and would have just that much more to spend and put in circulation. Does any one pretend to say that an extra $50,000 spent in Crookston this fall wouldn't benefit the whole community? No matter where the starting point, the money would find its way through the channels of trade and business into the pockets of the people, and every citizen would be benefited directly or indirectly.

Then let everybody help this movement along, and sooner or later some good is sure to result from it.

East Grand Forks Review: During our absence last week, Hon. Wm. Carlton, ex-representative of Polk county, made our paper a social call. We are sorry that business called us from home, but are rejoiced to know that Bro. Carlton takes deep interest in county division, and is heartily in favor of it. Mr. Carlton is a power among the people, as he has proved his loyalty to their interests. Call again, old comrade, and you will probably find us.

The East Grand Forks people are so wrapt up in their county division scheme that they imagine every person who isn't denouncing them from the housetops must of necessity be with them. Take the above for example. Editor Strong says he didn't see Mr. Carlton, and yet that gentleman is put on record as being in favor of division. The JOURNAL will gamble that Mr. Carlton is not in favor of any scheme that will saddle upon the people of this county an expense four times that of running the county in the present shape. When the proper time comes Mr. Carlton will be heard from and we have no hesitation in saying that he will be found working in the interests of the people of this county as a whole, and not in favor of a few real estate speculators and would-be office holders in the aspiring county seats of East Grand Forks, Red Lake Falls and McIntosh.

AS AN illustration of the extremities to which people are driven by the scarcity of currency, the action of a couple of South Dakota merchants forms a novel as well as a curious instance. They contracted with a St. Paul jeweler to furnish them several thousand dollars worth of aluminum money, in the same denominations as coined by the United States. Over $20,000 of this coin was put in circulation, and it was accepted the same as genuine money. As it was not an imitation of United States coin, it was therefore not a counterfeit. But certain United States officers have stopped the coining and circulation of it, and the case went to United States attorney Hay of St. Paul, who says there is nothing illegal about the circulation of these coins, and the firms who issued them have as much right to do so as they have to issue checks or orders. The people who take this money have to rely solely on the honesty and ability of the issuers to redeem them in good coin.

THOSE who are inclined to scoff at the idea of trying to get any concessions from a railroad, or who are always telling of the inability of the railroad commission to accomplish anything for the benefit of the public, should take note of the recent decision of the Supreme Court, in which the railroad commission was the plaintiff and the Great Northern was the defendant. The case, in brief, was as follows: Some grain buyers had asked permission of the railroad company to build an elevator on their right-of-way contiguous to a side-track. The request was refused. The grain-buyers then purchased some land adjoining the railroad right of way, built an elevator thereon, and asked the railroad company to build a side-track thereto. This, too, was refused, and the matter was laid before the railroad commission, who ordered the track put in. The railroad company took the matter to the Supreme Court, which body decided that the side-track must be put in.

THE Grand Forks Plaindealer tells of a Fargo business man who was tempted to drown himself in the Red River at Grand Forks, but the water was too shallow and he pulled himself out and sought a [illegible] [illegible]

—he would then be confronted with the smaller difficulty of finding sufficient water to float his boats on.

THE directory of the Northern Pacific railway has been changed, and the Ives faction has gained control. It is thought this change will be beneficial to the road. The Deutscher Bank of Berlin, whose clients are large holders of Northern Pacific bonds, is represented on the directory and it is understood that the road will have the influence and support of the Rothschilds. Two of the new men are distinctively Western. Mr. Anderson, who heads the ticket, is a resident of Tacoma, and Mr. Sanders belongs to Helena. This is in accordance with the plan of Mr. Ives to interest the people along the line.

ALMOST every article of food which we eat has been adulterated or imitated, until we wonder what they'll do next. Eggs are a product which it was thought impossible to counterfeit, but this has actually been done by a Chicago firm and a carload of them sold in Duluth, and so good is the imitation that the people have eaten the eggs without discovering the deception. Some of the consumers thought them "queer," but it was some time before the fraud was discovered. The eggs can be manufactured for 7½ cents per dozen.

THERE are several bond investment companies doing business in the Twin Cities, that have been denied the use of the mails on the ground that there is an element of chance in the manner of paying the bonds, and this brings the companies under the ban of the lottery law. The bond companies claim that the matter was stirred up by the insurance companies, and if the former are beaten in the courts they will commence action against the insurance companies to deny them the use of the mails.

IN another column will be found a gossipy, interesting Washington letter from the pen of Arthur W. Dunn, who was for many years with the Pioneer Press. It treats of matters not found in the news columns of the public prints, and can only be gotten through private correspondence. Mr. Dunn's familiarity with public affairs at the national capital, and his acquaintance with the representatives from the Northwest, make him capable of writing exceedingly readable letters for the people of Minnesota.

THE railroad accidents keep pace with the increasing travel to the World's Fair, and frightful disasters follow each other in rapid succession. A disobedient engineer, a careless switchman, a negligent operator, etc., etc., are the causes assigned for nine-tenths of these railroad slaughters. Why cannot the railroad companies exercise a closer supervision over their employes? The men who are inclined to be careless or disobedient can soon be detected, and should be promptly weeded out of the service.

GEO. T. WILLIAMS, of Ida Grove, Iowa, is about to establish a newspaper in Cass county, in the Leech Lake district, to be called The Mississippian. Mr. Williams has a reputation in Iowa as a fighting editor, having been sued fifteen times, besides having to answer to three criminal libel suits. He can now put in his time fighting Indians, until Jim Hill builds a road through that country and then he can fight the railway.

FRANCIS H. WEEKS, the great New York swindler, who escaped to Costa Rica, has been surrendered by the authorities of that country and is now on his way to New York, where he will be tried and undoubtedly convicted. Now, if F. L. Menage, the president of the defunct Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company of Minneapolis, can only be caught and given a good term in the penitentiary, it may have a salutary effect on other would-be swindlers.

A. J. BLETHEN, who formerly owned and conducted the Minneapolis Tribune, has started a new evening daily in Minneapolis, called the Penny Press. It would look to an outsider as though the newspaper field in Minneapolis was pretty well covered, and [illegible] predict that Mr. Blethen's new venture will be a success.

CHAUNCEY DEPEW and other New Yorkers gave the Chicago people plenty of taffy on New York day at the fair. Mr. Depew declared there was no rivalry between New York and Chicago, and that it was [illegible]

EDITOR MCKINNEY of the Sauk Rapids Sentinel, seems to have gotten himself disliked by a few people in his community. One individual who came in to demand satisfaction was armed with "a hatchet, an iron garden rake, a monkey wrench and a bushel basket."

LORD MAYOR SHANKS of Dublin has been visiting the Twin Cities lately, and each city has been vieing with the other in its hospitality and matter of entertainment of his lordship.

FISHER wants a loading and machinery platform, and the Great Northern has refused to grant the request. Better lay the matter before the railroad commission.

THE McIntosh Times has entered upon the sixth year of its existence, and though its proprietor hasn't made a mint of money out of it, he has published a good local paper.

At Phenomenal Rates.

The constantly increasing demand for periodical literature at once cheap and first-class has put magizine publishers on their mettle. The New Peterson for November is issued at the exceedingly low price of ten cents, or $1.00 a year, and is as exceptional in merit as it is phenomenal in price. From the outset, The New Peterson took its stand among the leading literary monthlies, and it has proved so great a success that the publishers have felt warranted in making this reduction in price. This November number is a warrant that the literary and artistic character of the Magazine will be kept up to the highest standard of excellence. Octave Thanet's complete novelet, "The Judgment on Mrs. Swift," is one of her most brilliant efforts. "The Throwin' Off o' Maggie Randall," by Ella Higginson, convinces one that Hamlin Garland is right in ranking her among the finest of our realistic writers. "The Heart of the West Indies," by Doctor William F. Hutchinson, "Women of the Salon," by Helen E. Drew, and "The English Pre-Raphaelites" by Edouard Rod, are among the attractive illustrated articles. "A Greek Baptism," by Rachel Carew, is a very novel and delightfully written. "When the British came," by Anna Vernon Dorsey, is exceedingly dramatic. "Of Elizabeth," by Robert C. V. Meyers, is the best short story to be found among the month's magazines. There are poems by favorite song-writers, and the "Fireside" is made up of stirring papers by noted essayists. All these attractions are offered for the absurdly low price of ten cents. The publishers are offering a choice selection of premiums to club raisers. Address New Peterson Magazine, 112 South Third Street, Philadelphia.

Last Chance of the Season.

The low round trip tickets to Chicago now sold by the Northern Pacific offer the best and last great inducement of this year to visit Chicago and the World's Fair.

You can now make the round trip for less than the usual one way fare. Don't miss this chance to see the greatest wonder of the 19th century.

The Best Preserves.

How to be always successful in preserving; how to make the very best jellies, jams, pickles, etc., and how, at the same time, to do it economically, can be learned from Ayer's Preserve Book. The recipes are all practical and never fail. Ayer's Preserve Book mailed free to any address on receipt of a two cent stamp by J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

VICTIMS OF COCAINE.

Bound More Securely Than by Morphine or Alcohol.

"Is the cocaine habit growing?"

"I should say it was. Why, about six years ago cocaine was 85 cents a grain. There was none of this widespread habit then. It has all grown up in recent years. Now the drug can be purchased at retail at 8 cents a grain, and three or four drug stores in this city sell it to its victims in quantities to suit. Most of the reputable drug stores will not do this, notwithstanding the fact that the trade is very profitable. They don't care to have such a class of customers about them. But the habit grows and grows and grows."

"Is it very degrading?"

"Dreadfully so. Now, here is a hypodermic syringe I recently took from a West Point graduate, the son of an old general of the army. When he was brought here, I added it to the collection there in the case. Look at that syringe! The point of the needle has been broken and filed down, because the victim couldn't get money enough to buy a new one. Why, it's enough to poison a man's entire system to inject that dirt into his blood. But this West Pointer told me the last time he used the syringe he took a penknife and gashed his arm and then stuck the syringe into the wound. That's the condition they get into."

"What is the effect of cocaine?"

"It has a local effect of numbing or paralyzing the tissues immediately around the place where the injection is made, so you can cut those tissues without the patient's experiencing the slightest pain. So it is used in small surgical operations. But in addition to the local effect it has a general effect of exhilaration. People under its influence can do a great deal of work and go without sleep. But the effect wears off in about a quarter of an hour, requiring additional injections to maintain it. Morphine, on the other hand, has an effect lasting from six to eight hours."—Interview With a Physician in San Francisco Examiner

GIGANTIC COMPLICATIONS.

The Lombard Investment Company's Troubles Only Just Begun.

Now that the Lombard Investment company has passed into the hands of receivers, its methods and the way in which it was excluded from doing business in Massachusetts will be interesting to the many people who have had dealings with the former concern. Besides investors in New England many mortgages also were taken in England and Holland, and the consul general of Holland in New York has been in repeated communication with Mr. J. Russell Reed, the state commissioner of foreign mortgage corporations (foreign meaning merely outside of Massachusetts) regarding the interests of Dutch mortgage holders in this much advertised company.

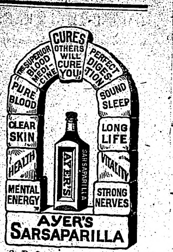
All summer there has been an effort to find trustworthy men among those interested who would take hold of the corporation and make the best of its assets for the benefit of the holders of the mortgages. About $32,000,000 in guaranteed mortgages are now in the hands of purchasers from the company on which the company had a contingent liability. It is the belief of Mr. Reed that up to the day the company was put into the hands of receivers it might have been continued if the right men could have been found to go into it.

Mr. M. B. Whitney of Westfield, who has held the presidency of the company since the forced retirement of the Lombards, regarded himself as an ad interim incumbent, put there because he was acceptable to both sides, and he did not wish to hold the place permanently. But as the necessary men were not forthcoming the receivership was brought about, and now it is likely that the business of closing up these complicated relations, where so many persons and subordinate companies are concerned, will not be ended for several years.—Boston Transcript.

Hardly to Be Expected.

"Were you calm and collected at the battle of Sedan, major?"

"Well, madam, I was calm enough, but I wasn't collected. With a leg in one part of the field, an arm in another and my left ear in a third place, collection was difficult."—Pearson's Weekly.



AYER'S SARSAPARILLA

S. P. SMITH, of Towanda, Pa., whose constitution was completely broken down, is cured by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. He writes:

"For eight years, I was, most of the time, a great sufferer from constipation, kidney trouble, and indigestion, so that my constitution seemed to be completely broken down. I was induced to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and took nearly seven bottles, with such excellent results that my stomach, bowels, and kidneys are in perfect condition, and, in all their functions, as regular as clock-work. At the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, my weight was only 129 pounds; I now can brag of 159 pounds, and was never in so good health. If you could see me before and after using, you would want me for a traveling advertisement. I believe this preparation of Sarsaparilla to be the best in the market to-day."

Light.

The grandest sentence in any book in the world is this, in Holy writ: "And God said, Let there be light; and there was light." Natural science can tell you in detail how absolutely indispensible light is to the continuance of any form of life on our globe. It is not the purpose of this paragraph, however, to discourse upon the benefits of natural light, but to present some curious facts connected with it, and the numerous artificial means of illumination, invented by the ingenuity of man. The ancients thought that objects were made visible by something projected from the eye, and it was not until about 350 years before Christian Era that men began to ask—Why can we not see in darkness? It then dawned upon somebody that light falling upon an object was what made it visible, and that the eye was only a machine for receiving the rays of light transmitting to the brain the impressions they give as to the size, shape and color of external things. The artificial light was probably first a burning brand—then a reed satuarted in oil, then the tallow dip, the candle, the oil lamp, the kerosene lamp, gas, and last and greatest, the electric light. Intellectual light is another kind—the light needed to guide our actions, and that is furnished by the experience of ourselves or others. If you want light on the subject of travel, everybody's experience is clear as the sun that the Burlington Route is the best for all travelers. For information, tickets, maps, etc., address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP.

Arthur W. Dunn Writes Entertainingly of Men and Events From the National Capitol.

Southern Democrats Stand Squarely on the Chicago Platform—State Bank Issue.

6000 Pensions Illegally Suspended by Lochren—Notes From the Present Session of Congress.

WASHINGTON, October 23.—It is really interesting to listen to the men who come before the House committee on Banking and Currency and give their views on the financial problem. That committee is at present engaged in hearing what various members of congress have to say about the bills they have introduced, and which they think will remedy existing evils in our financial system. These bills run the gamut from those introduced by gold men and bankers, down to the Populists who would have us issue millions of fiat money and who would also have the sub-treasury scheme established and have money issued on all kinds of products, or be loaned to the people on all kinds of security. It is well known that all kinds of financial vagaries are proposed in congress, but it is the interesting point to hear the men who proposes them come and advocate them. So far there have been all classes and conditions of men before the committee. The chief financial heresies come from the South, though the Kansas men have some that are fully as bad. It is the Southern men who for the most part want to wipe out the National banks. They with few exceptions ask for the repeal of the ten per cent tax on State banks, which will allow any person to issue money who chooses to do so. These Southern men in arguing the case of State banks, say that the government should have nothing whatever to do with the currency, that it should not in any way supervise or try and see that sound currency is issued. Some of them go so far as to assert that the United States Supreme Court was wrong when it upheld the legal tender qualities of the green-back; others assert that the tax on State bank circulation must be repealed. All Southerners stand squarely on the Democratic platform that the government has no constitutional authority to impose a tax of any kind for the purpose of raising revenue. It seems to be more and more apparent that the policy of the Democratic platform at Chicago was dictated by the South, and that so far as possible the policy of this congress will be dictated by the South, although it is now apparent that in money matters Cleveland will be able to hold them on a safe basis by the power of veto.

That was a very interesting acknowledgement made by the chairman of the ways and means committee the other day when he said that the tariff hearings were all one way, and only the protection side was given, hence the Democratic party did not want to circulate any of them. He had to acknowledge that although everybody was invited to come before the committee, that the evidence was all practically to the effect that protection was a good thing. The people who are taxed for protection's sake, and for whom the Democratic party has been crying for these many years, did not seem to come forward and demand that their burdens be lessened. This tariff reform theory is very pretty, but practical people have no confidence in it. It was a great cry upon which to deceive the people and secure votes, but it is becoming more and more visionary.

Minnesota members of congress are congratulating themselves that a bill which threatened to be a great job has been put to sleep for the time being, and all that is required now is for the western men to be kept from coming to the front again. It is true that none of the Minnesota men has anything to say on the subject, but they were ready to shout after the fight was won, or at least Baldwin and Boen were. It is also true that Minnesota had a member of the committee on public lands and yet a measure of great importance to the state was reported favorably without any objection, but then there were many western men on the same committee who seem to have heard nothing about it until after it was called upon for consideration. This measure is the culmination of one of the great schemes, which was worked out in an innocent little provision which was attached to a large land bill which passed the fifty-first congress. By an act of that congress there was a general change in the land laws. The bill passed in the [illegible] closing hours of the session when everything was turmoil and confusion. It was a very long bill and although I was watching it very closely I never knew that it contained a section 24, which allowed the President to reserve any tract of land in the United States that he cared to proclaim reserved and that thereafter no settler could go upon the land.

It was one of those measures that was pushed by well meaning cranks who are used by the schemers, who always use innocent fools for their own selfish purposes. It was a great scheme to reserve and preserve great forest tracts in this country and the section was readily put through, when it was threatened by the men proposing it, that if it were not allowed to go in the bill they would defeat the whole measure. The men having it in charge conceded the provision in order to have the other and what they considered meritorious features of the bill enacted into law. Since the passage of this bill there has been reserved in many western states vast tracts of lands upon which no settler dares to set his foot. The land is absolutely reserved as if it were the King's preserves under an ancient monarchy. An attempt was made to have one-third of the State of Minnesota reserved, but this was prevented by the interference of Senators Washburn and Davis. If the reservation had gone through it would have absolutely stopped all settlement in the northern part of the state, and shut off the development of the iron mines of the northern part of the state.

Now, as to the parcel of cranks that are pushing this scheme of forestry reservation. This city is the headquarters of a squad of them who call themselves the American Forestry Association. It so happens that the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land office is one of their shining lights. He is a very smooth citizen and this may be a hobby with him, and he may be now used by others who are playing upon his pet theories in order to accomplish their schemes. At all events the Secretary of the Interior thinks his Assistant commissioner is god of the forests of America, and anything that he says on the subject goes in the Interior Department. It is not strange that Secretary Smith under these circumstances recommended the legislation which was attempted to pass last week. It was found that he based his recommendation on what his assistant commissioner said. He said it ought to be passed, and if it had passed it would have resulted in sweeping every tree from the public domain.

It was this last land proposition that was to give the coal and lumber barons free sway with all the timber lands of the United States, and such coal fields as have been discovered on the seventeen millions of acres of lands which have been reserved. It is no wonder that the people from the west are ready to fight the scheme. It is surprising that the schemers who were trying to get it through did not have the bill drawn a little less plain on its face, so that the members of congress might have been deceived as to its real purpose. As the proposition stood it was a bold broad plan to denude the public lands of timber and to let the speculators get control of them. The people are now on guard, and if possible they will arrest any further attempt in this direction. Public lands that are good for anything are getting scarce and the jobbers will do most anything to get hold of them.

If Commissioner Lochren of the pension office should become a candidate for Governor of Minnesota, or should want to come to the United States Senate, it is not probable that he would want to circulate as a campaign document the statement he sent to the House the other day. It showed that from the 1st of May to the 1st of September, he had suspended more than ten thousand pensions. It also showed that of this number more than six thousand had been restored by the 7th of October. This is a plain acknowledgement that more than six thousand pensions had been suspended illegally, though as a matter of right no pension should be suspended before the pensioner has had an opportunity to present his side of the case. Six thousand illegally suspended pensions! Six thousand old soldiers and those near them made to worry and suffer in order that a record might be made for democratic reform, or rather that the general dislike the democracy has for the old soldiers might be emphasized. It makes no difference whether Commissioner Lochren was carrying out the orders of Cleveland [illegible] or of the Georgia secretary of the Interior, he was an old soldier himself and he ought to have been more generous toward them and saved them the hardship of pensions withheld. If it was the democratic plan to harass them and put them to so much trouble, they should not have been illegally deprived of the money which the government had agreed to give them while they were being put to so much inconvenience.

During the early days of the all night session talk there was a suggestion that Senator Washburn would some night take the chair, refuse to recognize a fillibusterer and put the question on a repeal, and as there was a majority the thing would be settled in the twinkling of an eye. Several people seemed to believe the yarn. It originated by some one overhearing a conversation outlining that sort of a plan to put an end to the debate, and the question arose as to whether any one would dare do such a thing and it was claimed that Senator Washburn would. It did not contain much fact, but was a tribute to the nerve of the Minnesota senator by those who know him. Senator Washburn prefers that the Democrats who have control of the Senate shall take charge of the matter of enforcing its rules.

Boen, the populist, seems to have got away with my friend McCleary in the matter of the scheme for making the water of the Red River of the North run up hill. There was more or less talk that these two gentlemen were to collaborate on a grand scheme which would connect the waters of Hudson Bay with the Gulf of Mexico, by having a canal cut across connecting the head waters of the Minnesota river with the Red River. Of course there was the little difficulty in the way of making the water of the Red River run up hill 196 feet raise from the boundary to its source, but with a populist like Boen, a little matter of that kind would not stand in the way. It was just as easy as issuing billions of paper currency and saying they were money and must be accepted the world over as money. Mr. McCleary had in view the improvement of the Minnesota river so as to restore navigation on that stream. He will probably present his bill for that purpose later. It looks as if Boen and McCleary would no longer co-operate on the grand plan of improvement first suggested.

The all-night sessions of the Senate did not accomplish anything except to show that the Senate of the United States is one of the most amusing collection of able men that were ever got together. The idea of a legislative body sitting all night and listening to Allen and Peffer, Populists' drivel about the money question. It does not so much matter whether in the present instance the silver men are right or the repealers are right, it should be the privilege of every legislative body to secure a vote when the time has arrived and when it has been debated to the full extent that reason would allow. The outcome will, of course, be a compromise or the continuation of the present law. There have been people who thought unconditional repeal would go through the Senate, simply because it ought to go in their opinion. Any person who intimated that it was impossible, was sat down upon hard. It merely shows that the people who have no knowledge of the workings of the Senate cannot appreciate the resources which a determined minority have at their command. Those who talk about public sentiment should have known that the public sentiment of the silver states, and many of the Southern States, endorsed just what has been done, and that the Senators from those states follow the public opinion of those states rather than the public opinion of other sections. There is a well grounded impression that this panic was started by the men who control money in order to get the Sherman law repealed and that they thought they could do it easily. The whole press of the country seemed to be aiding them and the panic was made more severe by the scare which followed. A great many people believe this scare was useless and that the moneyed men overreached themselves. This sort of public opinion is having its effect in stimulating the men who believe in free coinage of silver to fight the unconditional repeal bill. With a little more knowledge of the situation the metropolitan press would not have repealed the law willy-nilly.

It looks like an off year for the democrats in the election. The people have tired of the democratic rule very quickly and are ready to get back to republicanism as soon as they can. It would not be strange [illegible]

UNCLE SAM'S MAILBAGS.

When Worn Out, They Just Begin to Be Really of Service.

To see the government economically administered, go where they mend mailbags. When a mailbag is worn out, it is considered as just fit for service. A new mailbag is stiff, unyielding. When it has knocked about the world, had the starch taken out of it and its weak places discovered, it grows pliable, gives when it can't force its way and is now prepared to do business successfully. Like a human being, the mailbag has had its experience. The most active mailbags now in the service have scarcely a hand's breadth of the original fabric.

The ordinary jute mailbag is mended by women. This is one of the now few branches of the public service outside of the civil service rules. The women who mend mailbags are appointed by congressmen or public officers in the old way. A more democratic gathering cannot be found in Washington. It is dirty if not difficult work. In the numbers of women clad in their worst clothes, their heads hidden in paper fools' caps with long curtains, their hands guarded by leather bands and at work on sewing so rude that it seems like a travesty on the gentle art of the needle, it is difficult to detect from one another the delicately nurtured woman, the sturdy foreigner and the negro. They are all there working in perfect amity.

Each woman sits on a low chair. She has exchanged her street dress for her working clothes in the commodious dressing room. She receives every morning a mailbag holding 10 bags. Five of these are comparatively good; five are more or less bad. It is a mild sort of lottery, which these women experience twice or three times a day, and the element of chance is not the less exciting though it lie in the depths of a dirty mailbag.

Bad or good the women are paid 8¼ cents a bag. For the woman who cannot earn at least $1.07 a day there is no place in this room. They earn on an average about $1.80 a day, and some women exceed this amount. Each woman works with a darning needle and twine thread. Her first acquirement is the sailor's stitch. With this she can patch, darn or embroider. When she has finished the bags, they are carried to a central table, where on a bulletin board her name is scheduled. There her work is examined by one of three men and checked off accordingly.

Not all sew. Some string the bags at the neck and put on the tags and locks. One of these is a blind negress. She has not seen since a child, but she works rapidly and deftly while she tells with pride how she can embroider and sew at home.

These women from such varied walks in life work together in perfect accord. When to the foreman the dusty air and unsightly work seem to have depressed the workers, he suggests to some one, generally a colored woman, to start up some music. The wave of sound gathers until the whole room has joined in. It is usually a hymn, for hymns come most easily to women's lips.

The government is a kind taskmaster. The room is finely lighted and ventilated. The washrooms are abundantly and finely equipped with marble mounted stationary stands. At noon a tea and coffee bureau is opened, and the workers have all the tea and coffee they desire at the expense of their country. Washington working hours are easy. Vacations of a month are given, and certain sick leaves are provided for. The sweat shops of the government, where the new mailbags are made by contract, are in this city.—New York Sun.

A Perugian Superstition.

The girls of the Perugian highlands believe as firmly as any heroine of Theocritus that a person possessing a lock of another person's hair can will pain, disease and even death to the owner of the hair, and thus when maidens give their betrothed lovers the customary plaited tress it is virtually their life and all their power of suffering that they give into those trusted hands.

If the man should prove unfaithful and disease descend upon the unhappy woman, she is not, however, utterly lost, the experienced matrons of her village have means to transfer the complaint to a tree, to an animal or to cast it into running water. The patient must rise in the early dawn, touch a certain plant in a certain manner, saying, "May thou wither and I flourish again," or bind her complaint to a tree in a given fashion, taking care never to pass again before that tree lest the disease, recognizing its former possession, return to her again.—London Athenæum.

Ice Cream Poisoning.

This is a reproach to the professions of medicine and chemistry. Year after year, with mournful reiteration, there are many reports of fatal cases. The deaths from this source must immensely exceed those from hydrophobia, but Pasteur institutes spring up like mushrooms in every country, while the deaths of the victims of poisoning by the cream are passed over in silence. Would it not be well to look into this matter? Would it not be well to prove or disprove the theory of a writer that the common ice cream freezer is often an electric battery decomposing toxic products by means of the mixture acting as an electrotype?—Medical News.

A Stammering Mute.

Hobbs and Dobbs were discussing men who stammer.

"The hardest job I ever had," said Hobbs, "was to understand a deaf and dumb man who stammered."

"How can a deaf and dumb man stammer?" asked Dobbs.

"Easily enough," replied Hobbs. "He had rheumatism in his fingers."—London Tit-Bits.

MOUNTAIN CLIMBING.

The Safety of the Many Bought by the Death of the Few.

All crafts depend upon knowledge and acquired skill—knowledge of the material to be handled, acquired skill in the handling of the material. Pioneers of mountaineering had first to learn what mountains actually are like, the details of their structure, and the forces in action upon them. Rock structure, which has one meaning for a geologist, has others for a mountaineer. One kind of mountain masonry forms ridges and gullies, another forms ledges and precipices. One texture and dip makes staircases that can be rushed, another makes slabs that can scarcely be adhered to. One kind of substance is firm and trustworthy, another is friable and treacherous to hand and foot. If there was so much to be learned about rocks, snow and ice were at first far more unknown.

The anatomy of glaciers had to be discovered, the secrets of crevasse formation to be learned. There were the varied phenomena implied in the phrase, "state of the snow," to be understood. Both foot and eye had to be trained to recognize by feel and glance what the "state of the snow" at any time might be. Avalanches had to be investigated—avalanches of snow, ice and rock—when they might be expected to fall, where they were to be looked for, how far they would go. Climbers had to learn to distinguish afar off between snow and ice slopes. Moreover, the tools of mountaineering had to be invented. Many were tried and discarded; a few were retained and improved. The form of the ax was slowly evolved and its uses learned. The way to employ the rope was a yet more difficult discovery. Even now the proper form for climbing irons is only being arrived at.

Accidents, usually fatal, were the lessons wherefrom these facts were derived. The great Matterhorn accident finally demonstrated how the rope should be used and proved that large parties were a source of danger. The Lyskamm accident showed the peril of cornices. Unroped climbers met their death on many mountains. From almost every accident something was learned. The safety of the many has been bought by the death of the few.

We can now plunge into the world of snow without undue peril. We know its dangers and can guard against them; we know also when we are safe and where we can freely go. Our forerunners went aloft as neolithic navigators put to sea—badly equipped and into a misunderstood region. We are now on the footing of the modern sailor. Snow, as such, has no more terrors for us than sea for them. Ill luck may overtake us, and we may fall, as they may be drowned, but with good equipment and experience the climber and seafarer are about as safe as the townsman at home.—Fortnightly Review.

How to Learn Music.

Do not fail to take advantage of the library. Begin a course of good reading. Music is notorious for narrowing one's mind, so resolve to counterbalance your practice with library work as well.

As to your practice, I would give you this maxim, "The essential thing in practice is to see exactly what is to be done in all its details, and then do it again and again with the greatest clearness, precision and energy."

When you take up a new piece, notice the key, the harmonies, chords, scales, fingering and general effects. One of the first necessaries is "concentration." Develop self criticism. "The thing you cannot do is the very thing you should make yourself do."

In practice begin where you left off the day before. Connect your day's work. Apply all your knowledge. Do not try to do more than one thing at a time. Spend a good deal of time every day thinking about what you are doing and what you will do.—Edward D. Hale.

The Barebone Family.

The celebrated name of Praise-God Barebone was borne by a member of the Cromwell parliament called together after the dissolution of the Long parliament in 1653. The royalists called the assembly "Barebone's parliament." At the time when General Monk was in London Barebone headed the mob who presented a petition to parliament against the recall of Charles II. Of the Barebone family there were three brothers, each of whom had a sentence for a name—Praise-God Barebone, Christ-came-into-the-world-to-save Barebone and If-Christ-had-not-died-thou-hadst-been-damned Barebone.—New York Evening Sun.

Single and Married.

A native of Ireland landing at Greenock wanted to take the train to Glasgow. Never having been in a railway station before, he did not know how to get his ticket. Seeing a lady, however, going in, Pat thought he would follow her, and he would soon know how to get aboard. The lady, going to the ticket box and putting down her money, said, "Maryhill, single." Her ticket was duly handed to her, and she walked off. Pat, thinking it all right, planked down his money and shouted, "Patrick Murphy, married."—Tit-Bits.

Railway Headaches.

Those who suffer from headache and feel the fatigue of a railway journey disagreeably should take with them two leather or silk covered cushions—one for the small of the back, another to rest the neck and head. An eminent doctor once stated that this was a capital antidote to the evils arising from the jolting of the train, liable to cause slight congestion of the head in very long journeys. He furthermore advised no reading in the train to those subjected to headaches.—New York Times.

Outcome of the Religious Congress.

The outcome of the religious congress at Chicago is an organization which has for its object, to use Bacon's words, "the glory of the Creator and the relief of man's estate." No man can well decline to promote the former purpose without avowing himself an atheist, nor the latter without confessing himself to be something less than human. The new organization is called the Brotherhood of Christian Unity, and its only article of association is a statement that the subscribers "desire to serve God and their fellow men under the inspiration of the life and teachings of Jesus Christ."

Millions In Petroleum.

Fifty-nine freight steamers are now employed in transporting petroleum to foreign countries. The capital in Pennsylvania wells and lands is estimated at $87,000,000, and $65,000,000 is invested in plants for producing the crude petroleum. This is exclusive of such accessories as pipe lines, tank cars, refineries, docks, fleets of vessels, etc., and an estimate of $300,000,000 as the total valuation of all branches of the industry is not excessive.

Oh, My Heart!

Palpitation and Rheumatism.

Mr. James S. Jones
Bruce, Wis.

"From my experience I think Hood's Sarsaparilla will do everything it claims and more too. It is surely entitled to my heartfelt thanks. I think it is the best medicine in the world. For 25 years I have suffered with palpitation of the heart and rheumatism. I tried everything I could hear of, but none of the medicines did me any good, in fact I grew worse all the time until for three years

I Could Not Labor Any.

I read about Hood's Sarsaparilla and thought I would try it. I have taken four bottles, and I feel like a new man. I have improved so rapidly

SILVER COMPROMISERS CAN'T GET SIGNATURES

Sufficient to Justify Them Introducing the Measure They Had Prepared—Republicans Refuse Aid in the Matter.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—Those who were expecting to see the Democratic compromise bill introduced into the senate Monday and speedily passed through that body, found that they were more than likely to be doomed to disappointment, and as the day wore on the indications in that direction became still more marked.

The opinion is now very general among senators who will discuss the question at all that the compromise bill, over which senators were so sanguine Saturday, will never be introduced in the senate. The reason for this change in the situation is found in the fact that the compromisers have been unable to get a sufficient number of pledges to guarantee the passage of the bill in case it should be introduced, and they have said from the beginning that they would bring in no bill unless its passage could be Assured Before Introduction.

Statements differ as to the exact number of Democratic senators who have signed the agreement, but the best authority obtainable places the number at 39, or four less than a majority. These four they have thus far found it impossible to obtain on the Democratic side of the chambers and all overtures to Republicans have so far been repelled, without excepsion. It can be definitely stated that members of the steering committee have made individual appeals to a great many Republican senators, but have been rebuffed alike by repeal and silver senators.

CONGRESSIONAL.

In the Senate.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—As soon as the journal was read, objection to it was made by Mr. Dolph (Rep., Or.) because on roll calls it did not show the presence of two senators, Mr. Allen of Nebraska, and Mr. Kyle of South Dakota, although they were in the chamber and although he had called attention to that fact. A discussion immediately sprung up on this point, a number of senators participating. Mr. Sherman then took the floor and denounced the obstructive measures used to defeat the repeal. He was followed by Mills of Texas.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—The senate met at 10 o'clock a. m. and as soon as a quorum was obtained (15 minutes afterward) the discussion was resumed on the question that occupied the time of the senate Tuesday, that of the amendment to the journal. Several long speeches were made.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—The senate met at 10 a. m., but the discussion of the question of the amendment of the journal, the subject which has been before the senate for the last two days, was not taken up till 11 a. m., when Mr. Stewart took the floor. The intervening hour had been taken up in waiting for a quorum and in reading of a report from the treasury department as to the financial aspect of the government for the current fiscal year. The summing up of the document is that, if the present conditions continue, there will be a deficit of $50,000,000 at the end of the year.

At the conclusion of Mr. Stewart's speech Messrs. Call and Butler argued against any proposed change in the rules. When the latter closed his remarks Mr. Palmer was about to address the senate, when Mr. Teller withdrew his motion to amend the journal, disposing of the question before the senate.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Senator Voorhees gave notice of an amendment to the rules when the senate convened. It provides that when a bill or resolution pending in the senate as unfinished business shall have been debated 30 days, any senator may move to fix a time for the taking of a vote thereon.

The senate then went into executive session. It was devoted wholly to the consideration of nominations, and there were about 100 taken up and passed upon. The only one of them which created more than passing notice was that of Mr. Van Alen to represent this government at Rome.

The senate opened its doors at 3 o'clock. The house bill to suspend for the year 1893 the law requiring $100 worth of labor to be expended or improvements made on each mining claim was passed, after an amendment excluding corporations from its benefits. A conference with the house was asked.

The repeal bill was then taken up and Mr. Peffer offered a substitute. It proposes free coinage of gold and silver under the provisions of the act of 1837 and revives the act. Mr. Peffer then addressed the senate on the repeal bill, yielding at 5 p. m. to a motion to adjourn.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 23.—The day's session of the senate was remarkable for the lack of interest displayed and the dullness which characterized the proceedings. Frequent conferences constituted the noticeable feature on the Democratic side of the chamber, and at one time Vice President Stevenson took a seat on that side and engaged in what was obviously an earnest consultation with Senators Voorhees and Faulkner. The time was occupied by three advocates of silver coinage, Messrs. Jones and Stewart of Nevada and Teller of Colorado, and but little attention was paid to either.

In the House.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—The house resumed the consideration of the bill for the better control of [illegible] Mr. [illegible] opposed the measure [illegible] do no good and might do much evil. The house agreed that the previous question should be considered as ordered at 3 o'clock on the bill and amendments, and then the floor was parceled out in very small parcels to various members. The bill was passed without revision.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—No bills of importance were reported from the committees, and the house proceeded to the transaction of routine business. A bill was passed amending the statutes relating to the fees of the United States marshals, clerks and commissioners.

The New York bridge bill was then called up and passed and the house resumed consideration of the printing bill.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—Mr. Outhwaite, from the committee on rules, reported a resolution making the bankruptcy bill a special order for Monday next. Agreed to.

The house then resumed consideration of the printing bill. Without disposing of the measure public business was suspended and the remainder of the session devoted to eulogistic addresses to the memory of the late William Mutchler of Pennsylvania.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Mr. Sayres (Dem., Tex.), from the committee on appropriations, reported an urgent deficiency bill and it was passed.

The house then went into committee of the whole and Mr. Bynum (Dem., Ind.) called up the joint resolution to remit half the duties on goods exhibited in the world's fair and sold by the exhibitors. After a long discussion the resolution was adopted and the house resumed consideration of the printing bill.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 23.—The debate on the bankruptcy bill has begun in the house. There is a great deal of determined opposition to the measure, led by some of the ablest lawyers in the house, like Culbertson of Texas, Stone of Pennsylvania and Boatner of Louisiana. It is directed generally against the policy of a national bankruptcy law in view of past experience with substitute laws, and particularly the involuntary clause at this time, when so many business firms in close straights might, under its operation, be forced to the wall.

TAUBENECK'S PREDICTIONS.

Populists Will Sweep the Country in '94 and Elect a President in '96.

TOPEKA, Oct. 24.—H. F. Taubeneck, chairman of the national executive committee of the People's party, is now in Kansas to make speeches for the Populists. He claims to believe that the People's party will sweep the country in 1894 and that in 1896 it will elect the president. He predicts it will carry Virginia, South Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado and all the mining states in the West, and in Iowa it will have the balance of power in the legislature.

FELL INTO THE RIVER.

Nearly a Score of Bridge Builders Killed and Injured at Eldon, Ia.

OTTUMWA, Ia., Oct. 19.—A terrible accident occurred at Eldon, 12 miles southeast of here, resulting in the death of one man and the fatal injury of three others besides seriously injuring 12 persons. The men were working on a bridge that is being built across the Des Moines river at that place.

New Wisconsin Road.

GRANTSBURG, Wis., Oct. 21.—Grading and tracklaying on the St. Croix and Duluth is completed for the season. The road is being built by the Empire Lumber company of Eau Claire and will give an outlet to 100,000,000 feet of pine lumber that heretofore has been looked upon as worthless.

To Stop the Fight.

BROOKLYN, Oct. 20.—The mayor of Brooklyn and sheriff of Kings county met and decided to prevent the Corbett-Mitchell fight from taking place in the Coney Island Athletic club in December.

Sport Versus Amusement.

Mr. Herbert Spencer recently put very neatly the distinction between sport as an amusement and as an occupation. Dropping in at his club, he met a young friend, who invited him to play a game of billiards. The philosopher led off and left the balls in a good position for his opponent, who dexterously ran out, not allowing his companion another shot. Then the young expert naturally looked at the philosopher for the customary compliment, but the loser of the game said, very seriously, after depositing his cue in the rack, "Sir, a certain proficiency in such a sport as this is a sign of a good education of the eye, the nerve, the hand, but the mastership of billiards which you have exhibited could have been acquired only by an ill spent youth."—London Life.

Cherokee Strip Indian Names.

In civilizing the Indian into a plug hat and English terminology we all too quickly forget to perpetuate him in the geographical nomenclature of the land he once so graphically christened. Of the seven new counties in the Cherokee strip, but one bears an Indian name. The others have names which are wholly commonplace, which are not associated with any incident to give them meaning, and which partake not in the slightest degree of the local tone and color of a region which has a rude but picturesque history and abounds in romantic traditions which ought to be preserved in the names of its towns and counties.—Kansas City Star.

He Was Floored.

A little 4-year-old boy said to his father, "Pa, can God do everything?" "Yes, my son." "Could he make me a 2-year-old colt in two minutes?" "He would not wish to do that, my son." "But if he did wish to do it, could he?" "Yes, in two minutes." "Well, then, the colt wouldn't be 2 years old, would he?" The father was kind of floored and carried the youngster to bed and made him say his prayers.

A Tower [illegible] Feet High.

A tower designed to attain a height of 150 feet greater than that of the celebrated Eiffel tower of Paris is in course of construction at Wembly park, near London. The foundation of the tower has been completed, and the superstructure has attained a height of 62 feet. The tower is erected under the auspices of Sir Edward Watkin. The plan of the tower was the result of an advertisement three years ago, in which architects were invited to send in designs in competition for substantial prizes.

A Will Four Feet Long.

The will of Charles T. Inslee, who died at 111 Cambridge place, Brooklyn, is written on a four foot roll of foolscap pasted together and folded in a complicated manner. This explanation is given at the foot of the document:

"This is badly folded, but I did not do it. C. T. I."

The estate is valued at $48,000, and with the exception of a few minor bequests goes to Caroline Inslee, the widow, and Charles Frederick Inslee, the dead man's son.

CAPITAL AUTOCRATS.

OFFICIALS IN WASHINGTON WHOSE ONLY LAW IS THEIR WILL.

A Striking Example Is the First Comptroller of the Currency, Whose Decisions Cannot Even Be Vetoed by the President, Who Has the Power of Removal.

Among the most remarkable features of this government by the people is the extraordinary authority vested in certain subordinate officials at Washington. For instance, no man in the United States wields such power in money matters as the first comptroller of the currency. He is entirely independent of the secretary of the treasury, and even the president has no means of coercing him, as the following story shows:

When Grant was in the White House, First Comptroller Taylor refused to countersign a warrant for the payment of a big claim out of the funds of the treasury. The president summoned him and said:

"You must sign."

"I will not, Mr. President," replied the recalcitrant official.

"Then I will compel you to do so," said General Grant.

"You have not the power," rejoined the comptroller coolly and respectfully.

"We will see about that," said the president. "I will consult the attorney general."

The attorney general, on being consulted, stated that the comptroller was right—he could not be forced to countersign the warrant. Next day the president summoned Mr. Taylor and said:

"I find that I cannot compel you to countersign the warrant. However, I can get another first comptroller."

"Very well, Mr. President," replied the officer. "You can have my resignation, but not my signature."

In fact, the only way in which the president can override a decision of this powerful official is by dismissing him and appointing another man. All of the accounts of the government, except those which relate to customs and the postoffice department, are settled by warrants countersigned by the first comptroller. Without his signature the payments cannot be made.

There are two autocrats in the postoffice department. One of them is the assistant attorney general. It is his function to decide whether matter offered for mailing is immoral or not. He acts as censor for the people. Whenever a postmaster in any city is doubtful regarding the morality of a publication that is sought to be mailed, he forwards a copy of the suspected work to the third assistant postmaster general, by whom it is referred to the assistant attorney general.

Very likely the latter may be too busy to investigate the subject personally, in which case he turns it over to one of his clerks, who peruses it and marks any passage which he considers indecent. Thus the law lord has simply to glance over the selected tidbits of impropriety and pass on them. The assistant attorney general also determines what mail matter shall be considered fraudulent and be excluded as such from the post.

The third assistant postmaster general is himself an autocrat. He has authority to exercise his own discretion in depriving periodical publications of the advantage of second class postal rates. Publications intended for advertising purposes primarily are not allowed those rates. On account of the "Kreutzer Sonata" a whole series of books, of which it was one, was shut out of the mails.

Publishers commonly get out volumes in series, because in this shape they go second class as periodical publications so long as they are issued at least four times a year. The decision against that work did not actually exclude it from the post, because it could be, and was sent at first class rates, sealed, so that nobody could lawfully open the package and find out what was inside.

The autocrat of the department of agriculture is the chief of the bureau of animal industry. He has authority to kill any animal he may choose anywhere in the United States. When one of his inspectors reports that such and such cattle are afflicted with an infectious disease, he orders them purchased and slaughtered. The value of the beasts is judged by two appraisers, one chosen by the owner and the other by the bureau. If they cannot agree, they appoint a third person to decide. In case a man refused to have his live stock thus disposed of, the police and United States marshals would be summoned.

The payment adjudicated is made by check. The chief of the bureau's authority in such matters is absolute over the territories and District of Columbia. For operations in any state he must have the consent of the governor, but the governor's consent cannot be withheld because he is in a position to coerce the state. If he chooses, he can quarantine the state, preventing all animals from going into or coming out for an indefinite period.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Wire as a Strengthener.

The method of strengthening copper steam pipes by means of coiled metal wire has been quite generally adopted in the Italian navy. The practice is to serve the tubes with one or two layers of wire wound under tension. The method is not considered applicable to other than straight tubes. The wire is of sufficient strength to carry the full load of steam, and the tension used in winding is about [illegible] tons per square inch. The wire is put on in two or three independent spirals and the ends of each are independently fastened to the flanges. [illegible]

Kitchen Extension.

University Extension is good, but Kitchen Extension is better. Wider knowledge of better cooking processes means better health and comfort for everybody. Science can never do us better service than by the multiplication of the cooking schools which make healthful means and methods available for even the most modest home.

Cottolene

The vegetable substitute for lard, is science's latest gift to the kitchens of the world. Every woman who has ever cooked a meal, knows that lard is disagreeable in use and unhealthy in its effects.

Cottolene is a most satisfactory substitute—clean, delicate and far more economical. At your grocers.

A. CHABOT.

'Round Home.

Several inches of snow fell on Monday.

Lew Freeman returned from the great World's Fair on Monday morning.

Graham Munch returned this week from a pleasant trip to the World's Fair.

John McFee, the foreman of the Lockhart farm, is ill with typhoid fever.

C. C. Rolston has accepted a position in Chas. Misner's tonsorial parlors.

J. P. Marcum, wife and son were enjoying themselves hugely at the World's Fair last week.

Mrs. A. A. Miller was out to McIntosh Tuesday visiting Mrs. C. F. Page and returned Thursday.

G. M. Barber disposed of his boot and shoe stock to Carl Reidesil last week, and left the city for his old home in Wisconsin.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Vine and family left last Tuesday for Canada, where they will spend the winter. They will spend a few days at the World's Fair.

Fertile Journal: George Candee has gone to Crookston where he has secured a position as engineer in the flouring mill at that place.

Mrs. A. McAvoy and Misses N. and C. McAvoy, of Angus, were registered at the Commercial, Sunday, returning from the World's Fair.

Mrs. H. E. Cooke arrived on Monday morning from a four weeks visit to the old home in Michigan. She spent a few days at the great World's Fair en route.

J. S. Nichols, of Fertile, came home on Monday morning from a visit to the World's Fair. He brought along some pure bred fowls for use upon the farm. His wife and the children remained for a visit with her brother in Illinois.

Rev. R. H. Battey attended the Y. P. S. C. E. convention in Minneapolis last Friday and delivered an address on behalf of the visiting members and delegates. The Pioneer Press of Saturday printed a fairly good cut of the reverend gentleman.

The names of the two men now confined in the Polk county jail charged with being implicated in the Halstad bank robbery, are Albert Thompson and Tom Teback. They were sent here by Norman county to await their trial at the November term of the district court.

Rev. Battey: The Christian Endeavor meeting in St. Paul last Friday and Saturday was the largest and most successful meeting of the kind ever held in the state. There were about 1400 young people in attendance, and I think about 1000 of those were delegates.

On Thursday November 9th, the Congregational church at Mentor will be dedicated by Revs. J. C. Huntington of Minneapolis, R. H. Battey and J. G. Smith of Crookston. On the 10th these gentlemen will hold a platform meeting at Fertile, and on the 11th and 12th they will conduct a Sunday School Institute in this city.

T. J. McAdam of East Grand Forks was in the city Tuesday on his way to the Red Lake country for a hunt. While his team was standing in front of the St. Louis hotel, they became frightened and ran away, smashing the wagon considerably.

Another one of those pleasant old-fashioned dime socials was given last Friday evening by the ladies of the Congregational church at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Durand. There was a good turn-out, an enjoyable evening spent, and a snug sum realized by the ladies.

A reception was given L. W. Squier of the First M. E. church last Friday evening by his congregation in honor of his return from Chicago, and his re-appointment for another year. The reception was held in the Sunday School room of the church.

Dr. Just was summoned to Fertile Sunday evening to attend H. O. Vidden, who had been upset out of a wagon and had one of his ribs partly broken. Mr. Vidden is an uncle of the Christianson Bros., of this city. The doctor left him on Monday morning doing very nicely and on the high road to recovery.

'Tis said a county commissioner—whose district isn't a thousand miles from Crookston—while playing the national game one evening lately, dropped about $68, and now he is of the opinion that "one of his legs—is longer than—it really ought to be," to quote from a popular air.

The state Y. P. S. C. E. held its annual session at the central Presbyterian church in St. Paul. Addresses of welcome were given by Governor Nelson and Mayor F. P. Wright, responded to in behalf of the convention by Rev. R. H. Battey, of this city. Donald Grant was elected president for the ensuing year and Rev. R. H. Battey was made a member of the executive committee.

It is said of a certain populist attorney of this city that he is more superstitious than an African heathen—believes in hoodoos and all that sort of thing. The story goes that a week or two ago, while en route for the World's Fair, he secured a berth between St. Paul and Chicago, but when he came to occupy it, to his utter horror he found it to be the cabalistic No. "13," and he raised a royal kick, but it was no use, as there were no vacant berths to be had on the train. But the idea of occupying the "fatal 13" was not to be thought of, so this prominent Polk county official was obliged to "pound his ear" in an ordinary smoking coach with the common herd, as it wouldn't do at all to occupy a berth with that unlucky number, according to his creed. Someway the Tribune, whose presiding genius ought to know more about this than anybody else, has been strangely silent on the subject, but everybody seems to be [illegible] just the same.

A. D. Chase left for [illegible] Sunday night.

Tom Morris got back from the Fair last Friday.

Miss Helen Halverson is off for a visit to the World's Fair.

Mat Cornelius is among the Crookstonites at the World's Fair.

Albert Gobb of Fergus Falls, was visiting friends in this city this week.

Lawyer Watts and wife returned from the World's Fair on Wednesday morning.

Assistant postmaster Miss Ollye Halverson went to the World's Fair last week.

W. L. Palmer received the sad news of the death of his daughter, Gertrude, last week.

Register Hugh Thompson of the United States Land Office, visited the World's Fair last week.

Northern Pacific railroad is selling first class tickets Crookston to Chicago at $14.77 until Nov. 1st.

C. W. Palmer is having his lots on the corner of Robert and Ash streets graded and leveled up.

Dr. W. A. Robertson: The choral club is getting along nicely. The membership now numbers over 20.

There will be a basket social Friday evening in the Swedish Lutheran church. Everybody welcome.

It is "Chief Rauch" now. At the last business meeting of the fire department Fred Rauch was unanimously elected chief.

Rev. R. H. Battey's mother is visiting him at present, having arrived last week from Nebraska. She will remain all winter.

C. Smith's wife and Al. Vine's wife accompanied Chas. Vine and family to Niagara Falls where they will visit during the coming winter.

W. O. Wilson, John Bergquest and Knute Austin left for the World's Fair on Wednesday evening by the Northern Pacific route.

A. Sture is going out of the boot, shoe and dry goods business and will sell this line so low that it will be to the public's advantage to call.

Will Peterson was receiving the congratulations of his friends last Friday on the arrival of a son and heir in his household, Friday morning.

Conductor Casper Sands was in the city this week for the first time since August, at which time, not feeling very well, he took a lay-off and went out to the farm where he was taken down and had a long siege of illness. He hopes to be all right soon.

A gang of men, under the supervision of Engineer Arnold, are at work repairing the broken sewer under the railway track. According to a resolution passed at the last meeting of the council, they will tunnel under the track and connect the brick sewer with the outlet. It is practically the same work as was done last spring, and grave doubts are entertained as to whether it will be lasting or not. Should the track slide any more, the sewer would again be broken and the labor be in vain. The present operation will cost probably $500.

I. B. Welter the prosperous Beltrami farmer, was in the city Tuesday, doing some trading. His crops were very good this year, and he has got no kick coming except on the United States senate and the price of wheat. He is going more into mixed farming, and next year will grow less wheat than usual and more oats, barley and potatoes. He is going to raise more hogs, and fatten them on barley and potatoes. His sheep did well this year, and he got about $2.25 worth of wool off of each one. It would be well for other farmers to watch Mr. Welter's smoke.

A Land Contest Case From Marshall County Decided in Washington.

A land contest case from Marshall county has just been decided by the Secretary of the Interior. John H. Woolhaupt was the claimant to a homestead near Warren, which was contested by Mari Steiner. The local land office decided in favor of the latter, and an appeal was taken to the commissioner of the general land office, who reversed the decision of the local office. The case then went to the Secretary of the Interior, who affirmed the ruling of the land commissioner, thus giving Woolhaupt possession of the property. Ed. George acted as attorney for Woolhaupt, and J. G. McGrew and D. Hatlestad for Steiner.

Killed by the Cars.

Wm. Judson, a son of L. H. Judson was killed at Kittson last Monday morning. He was driving a team and attempted to cross the railroad track in front of a Great Northern train, and was struck by the engine and instantly killed. When the engine was stopped his body was found on the pilot. An inquest was held here Saturday.

CORONER'S VERDICT.

An inquisition taken at Kittson and in the city of Crookston, in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 20th day of October, 1893, before Henry Shepard, coroner of said county, upon view of the body of William Judson lying there dead, by the oaths of the jurors, whose names are hereto subscribed, who being duly sworn to inquire in behalf of the State of Minnesota, when, how and by what means the said William Judson came to his death, upon their oaths do say: That the said William Judson came to his death at Kittson Station, on the Great Northern railway, in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 20th day of October, 1893, by being struck in the head while crossing the track of the Great Northern railway, at Kittson crossing, near and north of the elevator at that place, by engine 71, L. Hutton, engineer, at that time running a wild freight train at unusual speed in passing stations, and we, the jury, in our opinion attach all blame to the engineer and train crew of said train by negligence on their part. In testimony whereof, the said coroner and jurors of this inquest have hereunto set their hands the day and year aforesaid. Signed

A Historic Name.

The last Minnesota legislature appropriated $50,000 for the erection of three monuments on southern battlefields to the memory of the heroes of the Second Minnesota regiment, with their names engraven thereon. On the one erected at Chickamauga there appears at the head of the list of names on one side of the monument the name of Col. Jas. George, who was the officer commanding the Second Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, who occupied such a conspicuous position in that memorable battle. Col. George was the father of our esteemed townsman Mr. Ed. George, who is justly proud of the fact that his father's valor and heroism in behalf of his country has thus been remembered in this enduring manner by his state.

From the Century Magazine for Oct. 1893.

Some weeks still remain in which those who have not seen the World's Fair may yet enjoy that never-to-be-renewed privilege. In the general astonishment at the beauty of the housing of the Exposition perhaps not enough has been said concerning the contents. That these are well worthy the attention of the student of every or any department of human enterprise goes without the saying—though in some departments much more than in others the truly instructional method has been observed.

It still remains true that the greatest feature of the Exposition is the architecture and the landscape gardening, including in these all their sculptured and painted decorations and adjuncts. In these the deepest pleasure and the deepest instruction are to be found as well as the largest and longest benefit to the country.

If the visitor can only be a single day at the Fair or a single night it is worth any sacrifice to enjoy this alone. And if it were to be a question between the daylight or the illuminations at night we would advise the latter, for surely no eyes now opened on this world are likely ever again to behold any sight so nobly beautiful [illegible] Over 15 million people have already visited this Greatest World's Fair and you should not fail to see it before it closes forever on October 30th and remember in going from Minneapolis and St. Paul you will secure the best service, the greatest luxury, the most complete comfort if your ticket reads via "The North-Western Line."

For excursions tickets at lowest rates call at 159 East Third street, St. Paul; 13 Nicollet House Block, Minneapolis and 405 Messaba Block, Duluth. [27-28]

Three Great Plays.

Three dramatic entertainments next week by the Rice, Walford and Sheridan combination. Monday night the great nautical drama, "The Smugglers," will be given; Tuesday, the famous New York success, "Shadows of a Great City;" Wednesday, the beautiful Southern romance, "Mystic Mountain." Special prices have been made; 25c, 35c and 50c. With a strong company, good plays and cheap prices the Grand should be filled to overflowing at each entertainment.

If you wish to secure a certain and speedy result, when using Ayer's Sarsaparilla, be careful in observing the rules of health, or the benefit may be retarded. A fair and persistent trial of this medicine never fails, when the directions are followed.

Algiers Has a Stream of Natural Ink.

In Algiers there is a small stream which the chemistry of nature has converted into real ink. It is formed by the union of two rivulets, one of which is very strongly impregnated with iron, while the other, meandering through a peat marsh, imbibes gallic acid, another ingredient in the formation of ink. Letters and manuscript matter are satisfactorily written with this singular natural compound of iron and gallic acid.—Exchange.

Warning to Bicyclists.

H. B. Walker of Brooklyn started to ride on his bicycle to Red Bank, N. J., where he intended spending Sunday with his wife, who had gone by train. He was riding along Bay street at a rapid pace when he ran into a rope stretched across the street to prevent travel when repairs were in progress. The rope caught him under the chin and hurled him backward from the wheel. He turned a somersault and struck on the back of his head. An ambulance was summoned and he was taken to the Smith infirmary, where he died a few minutes after his arrival. His skull had been fractured.

What Chauncey M. Depew Reads.

The sum of the whole matter is that the railroad man as a rule takes all the newspapers, reads about everything there is in each of them, acquires a facility for doing it very rapidly, and then peruses the leading editorial in the paper of opposite political faith to tone him up and the one in the journal of his own faith to tone him down. No practical journalist knows more of what is in a newspaper than a practical railroad man.—New York World.

Farmers Meeting.

The farmers meeting, called to consider the matter of a reduction in freight rates was held at the court house in this city, on Wednesday, of last week, and very lightly attended, considering the importance of the subject. A communication was read from Gov. Nelson promising to co-operate with any committee the farmers might appoint to present the matter of reductions in freight rates to the board of railway commissioners. A communication from President Hill of the Great Northern railway on the subject of freights was read. Speeches were made by Judge Ives, Senator L. C. Wood and others all in line for liberal reductions in freights. The committee on resolutions reported in favor of selecting a state executive committee to consist of nine persons, to whom [illegible] would be entrusted the duty of presenting the matter to the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners. It is a matter of surprise that this meeting was attended by such members as to render standing room at a premium—but it was not.

A Correction.

To Messrs. H. E. Cooke and W. A. Hammond, publishers of the "POLK COUNTY JOURNAL," Crookston, Minn.

You are hereby notified that an article published in the "POLK COUNTY JOURNAL" on the 7th day of September, 1893, entitled "Labor Day Thoughts" which article occupied the fifth column and part of the sixth column of the first page of said paper in the issue of said September 7th, was false and defamatory in some of its statements in regard to the undersigned, the Millers and Manufacturers Insurance Company, and your attention is called particularly to the following statements in said article continued viz:

1. The sentence in the second paragraph which reads as follows: "The fact that nearly all these policies were void being issued on risks which the company would not recognize and in violation of the rules of the company and provisions of the policy, such as insuring a farm dwelling having a stove-pipe through the roof, and without chimney, placed the farmers who had given their notes in the position of having to pay without receiving anything in return, or without any chance of collecting in case of loses is false and defamatory.

2. The last sentence in the said second paragraph of said article which sentence describes certain policies of this company as "worthless policies" is false and defamatory.

3. The next to the last sentence in said article, being the sentence which reads as follows: "Should not an inquiry be made into these matters, and this company deprived of its charter for so seeking to further its own interests by such attempts at prostitution of justice," is false and defamatory.

The entire article taken as a whole from beginning to end is false and defamatory.

And you are hereby notified that the undersigned Millers & Manufacturers Insurance Company, formerly known as the Farmer's Mutual Insurance Company, will hold you responsible in the courts of this state for the article above referred to and for each and every one of the false and defamatory statements therein contained.

Dated October 9th, 1893.

MILLERS & MANUFACTURERS
INSURANCE COMPANY,
By Robert Baxter & Sweet
Its attorneys,
Oneida Block,
Minneapolis, Minn.

On receiving the above demand last week, we made some investigation of the matter referred to, and find that Mr. Montague has been mistaken in his information, and justice and right constrain us to make the retraction called for, and we therefore freely publish the above demand of the Millers & Manufacturers Insurance company as a retraction of the matter alluded to in their demand.

We published Mr. Montague's article in good faith, believing that he knew the statements made to be true. The matter stated in it has been talked of a good deal in this county, and we presumed the object of the writer was that it might be published for the benefit of the people of the county. Mr. Montague claims he wrote the article in good faith, and we published it just as it was given us with his signature to it.

R. S. Ovens Dead.

DEAR JOURNAL:—It may interest many of your readers to know that a former citizen of Crookston, Mr. Robt. S. Ovens, died of typhoid fever at his home five miles north of Larimore, N. D., on Sunday morning Oct. 22nd. The funeral occurred the following Tuesday, the Rev. J. H. Keeley, of the Methodist church at Larimore, preaching the sermon and the Odd Fellows conducting the services at the grave. Mr. Keeley writes that the deceased was known there "as a very worthy and exemplary man and citizen." His wife and brother and a large circle of friends mourn his loss.

Catarrh in the Head

Is undoubtedly a disease of the blood, and as such only a reliable blood purifier can effect a perfect and permanent cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best blood purifier, and it has cured many very severe cases of catarrh. Catarrh oftentimes leads to consumption. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla before it is too late.

Hood's pills do not purge, pain or gripe, but act promptly, easily and efficiently. 25c.

The wisest course in politics is to vote for the best man, and you cannot be mistaken. So in the use of blood-purifiers, can't be mistaken if you take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, because all parties agree that it is the best—the Superior Medicine. Try it this month.

"I consider Chamberlain's Cough Remedy a specific for croup. It is very pleasant to take, which is one of the most important requisites where a cough remedy is intended for use among children. I have known of cases of croup where I know the life of the little one was saved by the use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy." J. J. LaGrange, druggist, Avoca, Neb. 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. For sale by F. L. Durand.

For the cure of headache, constipation, stomach and liver troubles, and all derangements of the digestive and assimilative organs, Ayer's Pills are invaluable. Being sugar coated, they are pleasant to take, always reliable, and retain their virtues in any climate.

Perhaps some of our readers would like to know in what respect Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is better than any other. We will tell you. When this remedy is taken as soon as a cold has been contracted, and before it has become settled in the system, it will counteract the effect of the cold and greatly lessen it's severity, if not effectually cure the cold in two days' time, and it is the only remedy that will do this. It acts in perfect harmony with nature and aids nature in relieving the lungs, opening the secretions, liquefying the mucus and causing its expulsion from the air cells of the lungs and restoring the system to a strong and healthy condition. No other remedy in the market possesses these remarkable properties. No other will cure a cold so quickly or leave the system in as sound a condition. For sale by S. A. WALLACE.

The World's Ruler.

Napoleon Bonaparte was a philosopher as well as a soldier. He said that the pit of the stomach rules the world. When you have something ail you for a great while, and cannot eat, you soon see how weak you are when the stomach goes back on you. When your appetite comes back, and you eat your first hearty meal, you feel like a prisoner liberated from his chains. Then you understand fully the value of a good digestive apparatus. However a good deal depends on the kind of food you put into this digesting machine. If it is half-cooked, or ill-cooked, poor in quality, or insufficient in quantity, the stomach will rebel, and you will have a monkey and a parrot sort of time with it. And nowhere will your comfort depend more on the condition of your stomach than when traveling. The Burlington, knowing that well-fed passengers are easily taken care of, attaches to its through limited trains, at convenient hours, dining cars, which from the excellence of the menu and the completeness of the service, are called "peerless." For tickets and any information apply to any agent of the Burlington Route or connecting lines, or address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

The comptroller of currency's statement on the condition of Minnesota banks outside Minneapolis and St. Paul shows loans and discounts, $15,247,845; money on hand, $1,858,007; individual deposits, $12,582,548; average reserve held, 30.16 per cent. This is a falling off of $2,000,000 in deposits, also a reduction in loans and nearly 4 per cent increase in reserve.

A dispatch from Sleepy Eye says the man McCormick, who gave himself up to the village marshal at Lake Crystal as the murderer of Editor Penrose of Butte, Mon., is the same fellow who got a few days care and attention at Sleepy Eye as the self-confessed murderer of one Callihan at Salt Lake City. The fellow is a fraud, pure and simple, and it is now known that he has worked innocent country constables and sheriffs in this same way for months past.

Merriam Not Sued.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., Oct. 31.—The telegram sent from here was in error in coupling the name of ex-Governor Merriam with that of Elliott and Mather, who have been sued by General Mullen in connection with the West Duluth Water company sale and the Everett, Wash., land deal. Ex-Governor Merriam is president of the Superior Water company, of which Mather was general manager, and that led to the error of coupling Merriam's name with the suit, when, as a matter of fact, no other defendants are named in the complaint except the two specified.

SOMETHING GAVE WAY.

Remarkable Story of [illegible] Bullet Accomplished [illegible]

A remarkable story is recalled by the exposure through a landslide at Fort Tulerosa, N. M., of the skeleton of a man who was buried there three years ago. His name was Richard Delong, but he was known among his associates as Long Dick. When the Mexican Central railroad was first constructed, Dick was employed by the company as a carpenter, and the wages being rather good he rapidly accumulated a stake of several hundred dollars. This done, he started back for the States, and as luck would have it was in a train that was held up by bandits. That is to say, a number of bandits boarded a train at a station and started through the cars, two to each car, to rob the passengers.

Dick had been in Mexico long enough and under such circumstances as to acquire a violent prejudice against the ordinary inhabitants. It riled him greatly to have one of them get the drop on him, and he sat with his hands up under the muzzle of the bandit's revolver as pale as death. When the thief who was taking the valuables came to his seat, he noticed Dick's pallor, but mistook it for a sign of fear, and so, having been very successful so far, he lost his caution for a moment and turned his head to call the other bandit's attention to Dick.

That was a very bad mistake for the bandit. The moment he turned his head Dick's big fist caught him under the ear. Dick was as strong as on ox, and the blow killed the bandit—broke his neck, they say.

Nevertheless, in falling, the thief's revolver was discharged, and the bullet struck the seat and glanced thence into Dick's side. But Dick was game, and picking up the revolver opened fire on the bandit who was on guard. That sent the rest of the gang flying off the train, and then the passengers gathered around Dick. A surgeon found the bullet was lodged somewhere in the muscles of the back, but had no instruments to cut it out. So he dressed the wound, and by the time Dick got up the road to Sorocco, where he intended to stop, he felt so well that he decided not to have the bullet cut out at all. He eventually recovered, to all appearances, and coming to the Talorosa region became a cowboy.

He had been here a few weeks when a man came along breaking bronchos for the cow outfit. Dick watched one man through two mounts and then said he could break one of its desire to pitch in less time than the professional could and backed his offer with $5.

Both men mounted at the word, and both got a good shaking. The two ponies pitched as only plains ponies know how to do, but both were conquered in spaces of time so nearly equal that the contest was declared a draw and a new mount for each man called for. But Dick was out of the game. He had downed his pony's spirit, but when he had done so his head was rolling from side to side because of dizziness, and he was groaning with pain.

"Something gave way," he said, "and it must have been the lead of that infernal Mexican."

He was right in his diagnosis. He got off his pony, but soon fell to the ground and in a short time died. A surgeon who examined the corpse said that the bullet had lodged near the main artery there and the wound had not fully healed. He was of the opinion that it would have killed the man sooner or later, no matter how he cared for himself, but the tremendous jolting while trying to break the pony had broken down the wall of the artery, and death soon followed. He was buried in the soldiers' cemetery near the fort.—Exchange.

She Did Not Drop.

"Delia!"

"Yes, ma'am."

"I am very tired, and I am going to lie down for an hour."

"Yes, ma'am."

"If I should happen to drop off, call me at 5 o'clock."

"Yes, ma'am."

So my lady lies down, folds her hands, closes her eyes and is soon in the land of dreams. She is awakened by the clock striking 6 and calls indignantly:

"Delia!"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Why didn't you call me at 5 o'clock as I ordered?"

"Shure, ma'am, ye tould me to call ye if ye dropped off. I looked in on ye at 5, and ye hadn't dropped off at all! Ye was lyin on the bed in the same place, sound asleep!"—Good Housekeeping.

Such a Proposition!

A certain philanthropic woman has proposed the establishment of "marriage service" classes for coaching matrimonial aspirants in their prospective duties and obligations. One critic says that this would wipe out the last clinging vestige of romance in marriage. "Imagine Edwin," says he, "whispering tenderly in the moonlight to Angelina, 'Do I understand that you have passed with honors in the marriage service exam?' and Angelina responding, with modest pride, 'Yes, Edwin, with distinction in modesty, pastry and milk puddings,' and the delightful rejoinder from Edwin: 'Modesty, pastry and milk puddings! Angelina, be mine!'"—New York Sun.

Ants With Human Habits.

It has now been ascertained beyond a doubt that there are ants which not only have regular military organizations, but that they wage systematic warfare, keep slaves and carry on agricultural pursuits. Nineteen species with these habits have so far been discovered. Among the slaveholding ants there are individuals which act as overseers and a second class which work a part of the time only.—St. Louis Republic.

HUMAN NATURE.

SAVAGE INSTINCTS STILL COAT ITS VENEER OF CIVILIZATION.

The World's Road Remains Unaltered So Far as Cruelty Goes, Except That an Educated Minority Has Shifted the Scenes of Action and Classes.

The first of modern historians, Thucydides, remarks that his study of events in Greece will illustrate human nature "as long as the nature of man is the same." It is tolerably clear that in his opinion human nature will always be the same, and every one who reflects at all must often ask himself, Was Thucydides right? The great political and social changes of the world do not disprove his theory. They only show a change in men's views of their own interest—a change in organization.

Again, nothing is more common or apparently more just than the assertion that we must judge the people of the past by the current morality and practice of their age. It is added that morals and practice have altered and have improved immensely. The two chief points insisted on by advocates of the notion that human nature has altered are the idea of cruelty and the idea of honor and good faith in politics. Yet even in these obvious matters it is most difficult to come to a conclusion.

Take the case of cruelty: You have Assyrians, Romans, red Indians, massacring and torturing their captives taken in war. Assyrians, civilized men, and Pawnees, uncivilized men, are on a level of abominable wickedness. David of Israel was as bad (he could not be worse) according to sacred history. The Roman treatment of prisoners—"How cold are thy baths, O, Apollo!"—turns us chill with horror. The middle ages show an improvement here. Captives in war are held to ransom and are treated with courtesy.

But were the middle ages less cruel than Pawnees, Hebrews, Romans or Assyrians? Obviously the mediæval tortures inflicted on political prisoners, witches and heretics were as nefarious as any known to ancient or savage conquerors. Nothing is changed but the victims. Then you find Covenanters torturing witches, Episcopalians in England or Scotland torturing Jesuits, wizards or Catholics at large. You find Covenanters burning naughty little boys alive; you find William and Mary just as ready with the "boot" as James II was. Then the burning of witches slowly dies out as the educated class becomes skeptical.

But the hangman still flogged men and women through the streets, and the pillory endured. As late as Moliere's day it was a holiday to see a criminal put to the question. The cruelties of the French revolution prove that the rack might have gone out, but human nature had not become milder. Then think of the horrors of our jails and Australian penal settlements. These abominations and those of American slavery do not suggest that man is really of milder mood. Here, too, came humane reform; the pillory, the flogging of negroes, the rack, the disemboweling of political opponents, are all extinct for the moment, but mobs still occasionally burn a negro criminal alive.

Then consider the records of the Society For the Protection of Children. These awful pages prove that human nature is now rather below the Pawnee or Assyrian level. The facts about bullying at school are unfit to be told. One is reluctantly driven to believe that there is only a thin veneer of humanity, that the brute in mankind is what he always has been. An educated minority has shifted the scene of cruelty, has removed some classes of victims, captives in war, poor old women, political adversaries, from the sweep of the whip, flame of fire, from the torture pole and the rack.

So far, well, but it does not follow that men's hearts are altered. The gladiatorial games would be as popular today as before the Monk Telemachus died if it were not for the sensitive minority who preach and print and palaver in parliament. After all, one would liefer see a Zulu fight a Maori in a circus than scald or beat or starve a poor little child, as many do. The Zulu and the Maori would enjoy the contest; so would the spectators if only they had the chance. The great fond of human nature is really unaltered as far as cruelty goes. We can only do our infinitesimal best to keep altering it, as not without hope.

If we turn to political morality, we see no great cause for exultation. Take the case of Marlborough, who is generally held up as the ideal traitor. It may fairly be argued that he was merely a man of his age, who now shows worse than most, because his genius was more splendid and his opportunities were greater. He was King James' creature, his led captain, and he deliberately demoralized James' army, corresponded with James' son-in-law perhaps, or probably conspired to hand the king bodily over to his rival, certainly deserted him in the night after making profession of fidelity.

William was not firm on the throne before Marlborough was intriguing with James, probably meaning to throw him over again in the interests of Anne and of his own advancement, and after Anne was queen he intrigued with the Chevalier de St. George. As a man, a subject, a soldier, a statesman, he was false to the core, but, que voulez vous? He was not more deeply and not more often stained in falsehood than Charles II, James II, William of Orange, and beside Sutherland he seems a Bayard. But can we say, in face of the memories of Dundee, Montrose, Lochell, Wogan—nay, of the honest troopers who have left their traitor leaders with William and returned to James—that all men were traitors, that loyalty was dead? [illegible] Clearly we cannot say so. Politicians were false—and what are politicians today? Give them Marlborough's opportunities and we shall see whether or not human nature has altered.—Andrew Lang in London Illustrated News.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, October 2nd, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Robert Fenesey deceased:

On reading and filing the petition of J. O. Buhn administrator of said estate, setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead, of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof; the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to him granted to sell all of the real estate of which said deceased died seized.

And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate, appear before this Court, on Monday the 30th day of October, 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in the City of Crookston in said County, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said administrator to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies and expenses.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said County.

THE STORMY PETREL.

Some of the Curious Superstitions of Old Sailors About the Bird.

One of the best known of the sea birds is the stormy petrel. It is oftenest seen during storms, flying above the waves in search of the shellfish and other small animals that are brought to the surface by the tempest. The sailors call petrels "Mother Carey's chickens" and do not view them with much favor owing to their being constant companions of storms. Jack thinks that rough weather may be expected when he sees petrels about and is not quite sure that they do not in some way cause the tempest. When the bird is on the outlook for its prey, it seems to walk on the water. Hence the seamen of olden time, in allusion to the apostle Peter's walking on the water, called the bird petrel, from the Latin Petrellus, "Little Peter."

So far from the sailor's being superstitious as to the capture of another kind of petrel—the Cape pigeon—which is of a black and white color and about the size of a tame pigeon, I have known Jack to take a hand occasionally in capturing them as a bit of recreation during a dogwatch. In southern latitudes the Cape pigeons follow a ship in thousands. The method of catching them is peculiar. A common bottle cork is tied to the end of a long piece of thread and trailed astern so that the cork touches the water. This gives the required tautness to the thread. As the birds fly in clouds from side to side astern some of them constantly strike the thread with their wings, and the resistance is enough to turn them over it, when the thread is wrapped round the wing and the bird is hauled on board. In this manner I have seen hundreds caught in a day.

On one occasion a clipper ship, carrying passengers to India, captured pigeons by hundreds, and the surgeon by some mischance succeeded in entangling a stormy petrel.

Now the doctor was an enthusiastic naturalist and what to the sailors is known as a "landlubber"—that is, he was on his first voyage. The doctor at once took the specimen to his cabin and made preparations to skin and preserve it. In hot haste a deputation of seamen, headed by the old gray haired sailmaker, came aft with a request that the petrel be set at liberty, saying that otherwise the ship and all on board would surely suffer. The doctor, somewhat surprised, intended to set the bird free, but his enthusiasm as a naturalist prevailed over the superstitious warning, and when the sailors had disappeared the bird was added to his collection. The fact soon became known forward among the men, and the doctor was regarded with black looks by the crew for the remainder of the voyage.

In the course of time the good ship anchored in the Hugli river, and that day at dinner the doctor suddenly died.

There was a gathering of the sailors around the windlass that dogwatch, and the doctor's sudden death was attributed by the superstitious sailors to his slaughter of the stormy petrel.—St. Nicholas.

A New Wrinkle.

"Please, sir, will you give me 5 cents?"

"Give you 5 cents!" echoed the young man in surprise, for his applicant was a pretty, refined looking little girl of about 10 summers, whose clothing looked as though she were a child of fortune, not of want.

"Yes, sir. I want it to pay my car fare with. I lost the nickel mamma gave me." Of course the young man gladly gave the girl the desired 5 cents, and she fairly beamed upon him. The incident happened at Broad and Chestnut street. Not long after the young man was waiting for a car on Walnut street, and it so happened that he was thinking of the pretty face of the child.

"Well," mused he to himself, "I'm glad I happened to be there in time. Some parents are awfully careless of their children, though. Think of the little thing having to ask for money. It's a shame!"

There came a slight pull at his coat sleeve. Then a sweet, weak voice that seemed familiar said, "Please, sir, will you give me 5 cents?"

The young man turned as if stung. He could hardly believe his own eyes. "You see, sir"—began the sweet voice again.

"Yes, I know all about it. You lost the money your mother gave you for car fare."

It never phased the little one. She smiled divinely and answered, "Yes, how did you guess it?" But the young man had caught a passing car, and the look on his face set several of the passengers wondering.—Philadelphia Press.

How Frauleins Are Wed.

German weddings are conducted on an entirely different plan from American ones. In the first place, an engagement is not considered binding until after it has been announced in the papers. Then the fiances devote a day to driving about among their acquaintances. Cards are sent to all the out of town friends of the families. Both fiances wear rings on their left hands, and after marriage on the right. The bride provides all the linen, glass and furniture, except the appointments for her husband's office or study.

The wedding ceremony is a double affair, the civil contract taking place in the registry office early in the morning and the religious one several hours later in church. At the early ceremony the bride wears black, but at the later one she is adorned with all customary bridal finery. There are rarely any bridesmaids. The bride and bridegroom enter the church together, and the guests all wear full evening dress. A wedding breakfast follows the ceremony, but wedding cake is an unknown delicacy.—New York World.

Empty Stomachs the Safer In Battle.

Surgeon General Sternberg of the army and Dr. A. C. Bernays of St. Louis had flocked together and were discussing gunshot wounds in the lower part of the body. Dr. Bernays greatly interested Surgeon General Sternberg by a proposition he laid down that when a man is shot in the abdomen shortly after eating a hearty meal the danger is much greater. "A case of that kind should be operated upon in every instance," said Dr. Bernays. "If the bowels are empty or nearly so, the same wound may be treated without operation."

"Applying that theory to soldiers?" remarked the surgeon general tentatively.

"I would say they ought to do their fighting before breakfast," put in the specialist.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Siamese Spectacle.

The king of Siam has a fine idea of the picturesque. On the night of the fighting at Bangkok he ordered his chair of state and shielded by the gigantic royal umbrella made a midnight inspection of the troops, followed by his bodyguard and making an imposing show. As they marched along barefooted—we read in the letter of a correspondent at Bangkok—their footfalls scarce disturbed the quietness of the night. One flaring pine torch cast its light upon the figure of the king and added to the solemnity of the scene as its light faded away into the distance, growing fainter and fainter as the troops, silent as death, passed in long lines.—London Globe.

May Find the Rent Hard to Pay.

A most curious rent audit takes place yearly on Nov. 11 at Breitemberg castle, near Itzehoe. Long ago a Count Rantzam while hunting nearly sank into a morass. He was rescued by a peasant, whom the count rewarded by the gift of a boggy piece of land upon the condition that he be paid a rent of one Danish penny every year. The land, arable now, goes by the name of "Penny meadow." As Danish silver pennies are becoming very scarce, the peasant's descendants will probably some day find it difficult to pay the tribute.—Green Bag.

A Wily Photographer.

"Oh, well," said a Hartford photographer to a pickpocket who pulled his hat down over his eyes and averted his face, "it doesn't make any difference to me whether you are photographed or not. I get paid just the same." "Is that so?" exclaimed the fellow as he looked up in surprise. The photographer never got a better picture of a crook than the one he caught that moment.—New York Times.

The World's Ruler.

Napoleon Bonaparte was a philosopher as well as a soldier. He said that the pit of the stomach rules the world. When you have something ail you for a great while, and cannot eat, you soon see how weak you are when the stomach goes back on you. When your appetite comes back, and you eat your first hearty meal, you feel like a prisoner liberated from his chains. Then you understand fully the value of a good digestive apparatus. However, a good deal depends on the kind of food you put into this digesting machine. If it is half-cooked or ill-cooked, poor in quality, or insufficient in quantity, the stomach will rebel, and you will have a monkey and parrot sort of time with it. And nowhere will your comfort depend more on the condition of your stomach, than when traveling. The Burlington, knowing that well-fed passengers are easily taken care of, attaches to its through limited trains, at convenient hours, dining-cars, which from the excellence of the menu and the completeness of the service, are called "peerless." For tickets and any information apply to any agent of the Burlington Route or connecting lines, or address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Mr. Stead's Idea of a Civic Church.

The Civic Church is the spiritual counterpart of the town council, representing the collective and corporate reponsibility of all the citizens for the spiritual, moral and social welfare of the poorest and most neglected district within their borders. It is an attempt to organize the conscience of the community so as to bring the collective moral sentiment of the whole community to bear upon the problems which can only be solved by collective action. The work which lies before such a federative centre is vast and varied. Vast and varied though it be, it is surprising how much of it is beyond dispute. Men may differ about original sin, they agree about the necessity of pure water; they quarrel over apostolical succession, but they are at one as to the need for cleansing cesspools and flushing sewers. It is in the fruitful works of righteousness, in the practical realization of humanitarian ideals, that the reunion of Christendom, and not of Christendom only, is to be brought about.—From W. T. Stead's article on "A Civic Church," in October Review of Reviews.

Edwark Bok receives one of the largest personal mails in the country. A year's mail consisting of over 20,000 letters. Three-fourths of these letters are from women. No part of this huge mail reaches Mr. Bok directly; it is opened by a private secretary and distributed to assistants for answer. Every letter, however, receives a reply. One of Mr. Bok's editors on The Ladies Home Journal, Ruth Ashmore, who writes to girls, receives over 5000 letters during a year.

Dullness In the Theatrical Business.

In theatrical affairs at present the extremes of adversity do not meet, but, on the contrary, they lie a whole continent apart. California and the New England states are the hoodoo vicinities this year. In the small towns of New England the situation is deplorable. Thirty dollars were the gross receipts which several good combinations have earned in towns of from 10,000 to 25,000 inhabitants. In fact many of the local managers are canceling their dates in sheer despair. After all it is the local manager who is the biggest loser in a frost of this sort. The manager of the combination usually gets as his share 85 per cent of the gross receipts. Out of the remainder the proprietor of the theater has to pay the expenses for light, fuel, paper, etc. The theatrical manager cuts down the salaries of his company, but the lessee of the theater can't adopt such methods [illegible]

HEADACHE, SLEEPLESSNESS, NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Gentlemen: I take pleasure in informing you of the very beneficial results which have followed the use of DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE in the case of myself and wife. For a year I was subject to a distressing pain at the base of the brain and upper portion of the spinal cord. I lost flesh and was greatly troubled with sleeplessness. Your Nervine was highly recommended to me. My case had been so obstinate that I had no confidence in the efficacy of any medicine. Yet as a last resort I consented to give it a trial. Much to my surprise, I experienced marked benefit; my sleeplessness disappeared; my headache was removed; my spirits and general health greatly improved. I soon GAINED TWENTY POUNDS. ALL THIS OCCURRED AFTER LEARNED AND WELL KNOWN PHYSICIANS HAD FAILED. My wife is taking the Nervine with the best of results. LOUIS D. VANDERVERE.

WOMANKIND.
FOR WOMEN AND HOME.

This well-known journal, a union of four leading women's papers, has won its fame because it deals with what really interests the women of America. Fashions from the standpoint of good taste and economy. Fiction of a pure and helpful kind. Music and Art suitable for non-professional tastes. Household hints written by practical women. Suggestions and aids for self-supporting women. It is a paper for women, by women, and its writers are among the most noted authors. Every line is original, every engraving a gem.

It is a paper of to-day without espousing the great questions of religion, politics and temperance, it gives all the news regarding them. It is universally quoted by the press because its views and articles are bright and unique. Send to Springfield, Ohio, for a sample copy. Formerly $1.00, it is now but 50 cents a year. SILVER AND WHEAT.

The Norman County Index makes the following observations on silver and wheat:

"Of all the fallacies advanced by the Populists, the claim that the continued wholesale coinage of silver will have the effect of advancing the price of wheat, is the most nonsensical. There is not enough sense connected with the assertion to warrant discussion upon the point, but as it is actually believed to be true, by some of our readers, we venture to once again call attention to the facts. In 1890 silver was in circulation in the world to the amount of something like $1,700,000,000; now we have over $400,000,000 in circulation. In the United States the silver in circulation has gone up up from practically nothing in 1878 to something like $600,000,000 at present. This vast amount of silver is being added to at the rate of over $50,000,000 a year. Now we want to ask our Populist readers if wheat has gone up in price as a result of this wholesale coinage of silver? Are we getting better prices for wheat than we did back in the '70's or for that matter the '80's? Is it not a fact that wheat has gradually gone down in price while silver coinage has been carried on by the wholesale?

Now it can readily be argued that this wholesale coinage of silver money has not been a factor in the decline of wheat, and it is probably not the cause, further than the loss in price occasioned by the present financial distrust; but it is ridiculous for our Populist friends to argue that if a few hundred millions more of silver were dumped into circulation wheat would go up in price. Experience clearly proves that if silver coinage has any effect upon wheat prices it is responsible for a fall of at least 50 per cent."

THE Times young man sees that he has been altogether too fresh in the matter of the pine-land estimators, and, as usual, tries to tuck it all off on the JOURNAL. He brings a wholesale charge of malfeasance in office and calls that an independent expression of opinion, when it is only a bit of scandal retailed with ghoulish glee—after the manner of nearly all of his editorial (?) opinions. If what that little man thinks he knows could only be bound in a book a man would have to mount the Ferris wheel to see the top of it, but the only trouble is that Mac cannot convince the average mortal that he knows anything at all.

SOME anarchistic crank in Chicago last Saturday night, went to the residence of Mayor Harrison and deliberately shot him down in cold blood and then went to the police station and gave himself up. His excuse was that the mayor had promised him the position of corporation counsel. It is said by some that he was insane at the time while others doubt it. Probably no one would have mourned had he been permitted to stretch hemp at once and investigated his mental condition afterwards.

THE inspectors caused a flutter of excitement among the dealers in butterine when they seized a lot of that stuff which they found, in the possession of hotel and resturant keepers in Minneapolis. The complaints are loud and emphatic, but the kicking will avail naught for the dairy inspectors seem to have law on their side.

THE Senate having at last passed the repeal bill it went back to the House for concurrence, but to the surprise of everybody, instead of passing upon it at once the House deferred action till Thursday (to-day.) It is however confidently expected that the bill will pass as soon as action can be had upon it, and is probably a law at this writing.

THE art building on the World's Fair ground will be saved and used as a permanent museum. Field gives one million dollars for the museum and Pullman $100,000. It is proposed to make it the finest museum in the world.

THE World's Fair beat the Paris Exposition both in attendance and in amount taken in. The Paris Exposition issued no free passes while over 6,000,000 were issued by the World's Fair managers.

IT is said that the great Ferris wheel will be taken down and taken to Coney Island, N. Y., and put up—to break somebody's neck by and by.

DUNN'S BUDGET.

Interesting News and Gossip from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, October 31st.—I don't know of any man who has come out of the fight in the Senate with any more glory than Senator Washburn. He has been consistently in favor of unconditional repeal from the first. There have been times when the stupidity of democratic leadership discouraged him about getting early action, but at the same time he insisted that repeal must come because under the existing conditions it was the only thing to do. But Senator Washburn has done more than to be a consistent repealer, he has worked for the bill from the start, and has insisted, among his friends that the only thing to do was to pass the bill with as little delay as possible. He was one of the first men to point out the fallacy of the proposed democratic compromise. He showed that the proposition to coin an alleged seignorage of silver in the treasury in order to make up a deficit was dishonesty, and if a private individual should do the same thing he would be sent to the penitentiary for it. There may be those who think that Senator Washburn was not right in his silver views. But the repeal of the silver purchasing law was the only thing to do. I never did believe unconditional repeal was possible in the Senate until the day before the democratic breakdown. I believed that the solemn pledges made by the democrats to the silver men would be lived up to. But the democrats went to pieces and that of course ended the hard fighting. Senator Washburn knew them and felt sure they would be compelled to weaken in time.

It might be proper to remark just here that Grover Cleveland seems to be something of a boss himself. The manner in which he has broken the democrats is something shameful. He wanted them and he got them.

The other day the printing bill was under consideration. Buck Kilgore, the celebrated kicker, voted against it. Boen, of Minnesota, rushed over to him and asked why he voted against the bill. Kilgore said that it was easier to vote against the bill than to explain to his constituents why he voted for the bill, if anything disagreeable turned up in it. Boen followed his lead and voted against the bill also.

Uncle Loren Fletcher has returned and shed the light of his countenance in the House after an absence of several weeks. He is ready for the long pull next winter. Fletcher is a mighty good member for Minnesota.

My friend Kiefer will not be able to get through a bill increasing the cost of the St. Paul public building. It is an outrage, for St. Paul is entitled to a much better appropriation than has been made. Several cities, not nearly so important as St. Paul, have received much larger sums.

Representative Hall has a trade mark bill that he has been trying to get through for the past two congresses, but it does not seem to excite enough interest to get time for consideration.

Prof. McCleary has been absent for a short time, but the interests of of the Second District have not suffered meanwhile.

It would seem that every man in the House of Representatives was a protectionist. Every man that has any industry in his district that is now protected has been to some member of the Ways and Means committee and insisted that it still be protected. They all want free trade in something that will not affect them. When the late Gen. Hancock said that the tariff was a local issue he was getting closer to the truth than some people are aware of. There is to be a monkey and a parrot of a time when the tariff bill gets into the House and is considered.

I have just learned that the Mille Lac settlers will have to run another gauntlet before they are left undisturbed in possession of their lands. It is claimed that they are pine land gobblers and that they are not entitled to the relief sought in the Washburn resolution. This is an explanation why there has not been anything done about the lands in the House.

One Minnesota man holding a good position in the government is not yet disturbed by the democratic administration. Gen. [illegible] Grant, Assistant Secretary [illegible] [illegible] bill [illegible] there is no effort to get him out. There are plenty of applicants for his place, but none [illegible] seem to have [illegible] the qualifications of Dan Lamont and Grover.

I am inclined to think that the bankruptcy bill which has been under consideration in the House is a very bad measure and never ought to become a law. I do not believe that the people outside of the large business centers want any such legislation. Besides this is a bill of many pages, which is full of language that no one can understand. It is too much of a bill to be popular.

Bob Maxwell, who cuts off the heads of Republican fourth-class postmasters, will not allow any man to see the list of postmasters in his state unless that man is a democrat. My friend Haugen, representing the 10th Wisconsin district, wanted to find out something about the postoffices in his district, upon the request of some of his constituents and he was not allowed to see the book with the list of officers because he was a republican. It is said in this connection that when a democrat cannot be found in a community to take the postoffice, it is either abolished or removed; there being one instance where the office was moved ten miles to find a democrat.

(World's Fair Letter, Oct. 14th, 1893.)

"The committee which compiled statistical information relating to American railways were high in their praise of the manner in which the great roads prepared facilities in caring for the enormous traffic occasioned by the World's Fair and while all the Chicago—St. Paul lines were commenced in favorable terms. "The North-Western Line" was especially commended as between Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis. This adds another laurel to those already gained by Minnesota as "The North-Western Line"—C., St. P., M. & O. Ry.—is one of the recognized roads of the North Star State."

Fall Fashions for Ladies Season 1893.

The McDowell Fashion Journals always present to their customers the only correct and refined styles adopted by the gentlewomen of Paris, which is acknowledged to be the fountain head of fashions. These magazines include, besides practical lessons on dressmaking, which are invaluable to professionals as well as amateurs. Moreover, in the pattern department connected with these artistic publications, Messrs. McDowell reproduce all designs from any source whatever, in the form of made up Paper Models with additional flat patterns, the usefulness of which cannot be overestimated by either dressmakers or those who wish to do their own dressmaking in the most stylish and economical plan. "La Mode de Paris" and "Paris Album of Fashion" cost only $3.50 a year, each, or 35 cts a copy. "The French Dressmaker" is $3.00 per annum, or 30 cts a copy, "La Mode" costs only $1.50 a year, or 15 cts a copy, which makes the most economical family Journal of fashion in existence. Women In Medicine.

At the beginning of 1893 the number of women who had entered their names in the British medical register amounted to 158, of whom nine have died since registration. About 50 are in practice in India and other parts of the east, chiefly as medical missionaries; some of the younger women—perhaps 20—are still engaged in study at various schools and hospitals, chiefly on the continent, and the remainder are in practice in various parts of Great Britain, more than half of these having settled in London. The number of posts thrown open to medical women increases every day and the demand for their services in various directions is still considerably in excess of the supply.—Medical Magazine.

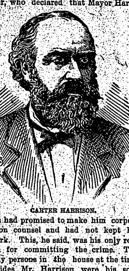
ASSASSINATED.

MAYOR HARRISON, OF CHICAGO, SHOT DOWN.

A Crazy Crank Fires Three Bullets Into the Body of Chicago's Mayor. He Then Immediately Gave Himself Up to the Police—The Whole City Plunged In Deep Mourning For Its Chief Executive.

CHICAGO, Oct. 29.—Another crazy crank has done his deadly work, and Carter H. Harrison, five times mayor of Chicago, and one of the best known men in the West, lies dead in his own home, 231 South Ashland boulevard, about a mile and a half west of the postoffice. Three bullets entered his body, two of them making wounds sufficient to cause death.

The murder was committed by Eugene Patrick Prendergast, a paper carrier, who declared that Mayor Harrison had promised to make him corporation counsel and had not kept his work. This, he said, was his only reason for committing the crime. The only persons in the house at the time besides Mr. Harrison were his son, William Preston Harrison, 25 years of age, and the servants.



CARTER HARRISON.

Shortly before 8 o'clock Prendergast rang the door bell at the Harrison residence and asked to see the mayor. Mr. Harrison was in the dining room, and upon hearing his name spoken walked toward the hall to meet his visitor, whoever it might be. When the assassin caught sight of his victim he advanced a few steps and began firing. Three shots were fired, all of which took effect, one in the left hand, one in the abdomen and one just above the heart. He died about half an hour later.

As soon as Prendergast began to fire Mr. Harrison turned and walked rapidly toward the dining room and passed into a butler's pantry opening off the room, where, weakened by loss of blood, he fell to the floor.

Pendergast did not follow up his victim or make any attempt to ascertain how deadly his aim had been. He placed his revolver in his pocket with the same deliberation that had marked all of his actions, and started toward the door. He went directly to the Desplanies street station and gave himself up to Sargeant Frank McDonald. The only reason he would give for the shooting was that Mayor Harrison had promised to make him corporation counsel and had failed to keep his word.

ALL CHICAGO MOURNS.

Assassination of Harrison Casts a Gloom Over the City.

CHICAGO, Oct. 30.—Chicago is overwhelmed with sorrow and shame over the terrible taking off of its mayor. Her citizens mourn for the man who stood closer to the people's hearts than any other who has lived or died within her boundary lines or has been in any way connected with the city's growth and progress. The feeling of shame is that just at the close of the grandest and most glorious period of her municipal history; just at the dawn of a brighter period than she has ever before experienced, the should have a red blot on the record. It was a thing no man could prevent, a calamity that no human intellect could foresee; but the crime is done, and the stain and the disgrace of having her chief executive shot down is part of her history. The act of a maniac, or at least a weak-minded youth, has plunged Chicago into grief and mourning just at the period of her greatest triumph.

From all ranks and conditions of men there comes but one voice and it is that of grief. If Chicago's spirit soared too high, if her ambitious soul reached out beyond those things to which mortal man may aspire—and her daring hand was ever at the edge of the universe—it has been temporarily checked. The blow was heavy and it Struck Chicago to the Heart.

Carter Henry Harrison was without question the most popular man among the residents of Chicago. He was the most widely known and best beloved of all Chicago's sons. Political enemies have time and again sought to read the riddle of his popularity. They have sought to decry his fame and wean his friends from his side. They utterly failed in all. There is a touch of nature beyond what humanity knows, and it is called genius. This Carter Harrison had in his dealings with his fellowmen. He drew them to him and he held them to the last by the force of his genial nature and the undiscovered something which all men felt who came in contact with him. His enemies were as bitter as his friends were warm, but they were the not the foes of his personality. He had within his frame more of the condensed spirit of audacity, endurance and activity that is characteristic of Chicago than any other man. He was nearer the embodiment of the Chicago spirit than any other man. The people knew this and held him closer in their embrace than they have ever held another, and it will be long before another man usurps the place that Carter Harrison held in the heart of Chicago.

The feeling of personal sorrow which all citizens feel is not stronger than the mortified civic pride which burdens them down. Her man of men, the one whom she honored most, was foully slain, and the great city which has done so much, and which for six months has been the most popular place on earth, was utterly helpless. There may be for Chicago days of greater pride, of higher glory than any she has yet beheld. The can never be a day of deeper grief, of more poignant sorrow.

Funeral Arrangements.

CHICAGO, Oct. 30.—The arrangements for the funeral of the murdered mayor will not be made until after the special meeting of the city council. It has, however, been decided that the obsequies will take place Wednesday. The body will be placed in a vault at Graceland cemetery and the interment, which will be private will occur later. Mayor Harrison's body will lie in state for at least a day in the city hall.

Formally Indicted.

CHICAGO, Oct. 31.—Murderer Prendergast was formally indicted by the grand jury. Police Inspector Shea was the only witness. Prendergast was quietly smoking a cigar when told by a jailer of the indictment. The prisoner took the cigar from his mouth and remarked "Well!"

ENDED IN MOURNING.

Closing Festivities at the World's Fair Were Dispensed With.

CHICAGO, Oct. 31.—The official life of the world's fair has ended. Last evening was to have been one of gaiety and dazzling brilliancy, but the death of Mayor Harrison changed all that. The meeting at Festival hall during the afternoon was brief. The audience was detained just long enough to hear a prayer by the Rev. Mr. Barrows, a few explanatory remarks regarding the change of programme by President Palmer, the reading of an appropriate speech by President Higinbotham and the resolutions of sympathy concerning Carter Harrison's untimely end. These resolutions were read by H. N. Higinbotham, president of the World's Columbian exposition, who began in a clear, firm voice, which for a moment with emotion when a certain passage in the resolutions was reached. Mr. Harrison and Mr. Higinbotham had long been associated.

The fair was declared closed by Thomas W. Palmer, president of the national commission, in the following words: "It was intended to close this fair simultaneously with the sound of this gavel, the firing of artillery and the lowering of the flag. All that has been changed by the sad circumstances which brings us together now. I announce that when the sun sets the closing will be marked only be a salute and the hauling down of the flag. When that takes place I declare, in obedience to the act of congress, the exposition is officially closed."

Attention

In time to any irregularity of the Stomach, Liver, or Bowels may prevent serious consequences. Indigestion, headache, nausea, biliousness, and vertigo indicate certain functional derangements, the best remedy for which is Ayer's Pills. Purely vegetable, sugar-coated, easy to take and quick to assimilate, this is the ideal family medicine—the most popular, safe, and useful aperient in pharmacy. Mrs. M. A. BROCKWELL, Harris, Tenn., says:

"Ayer's Cathartic Pills cured me of sick headache and my husband of neuralgia. We think there is and have induced many to use it."

"Thirty-five years ago this Spring, I was run down by hard work and a succession of colds, which made me so feeble that it was an effort for me to walk. I consulted the doctors, but kept sinking lower until I had given up all hope of ever being better. Happening to be in a store, one day, where medicines were sold, the proprietor noticed my weak and sickly appearance, and after a few questions as to my health, recommended me to try Ayer's Pills. I had little faith in these or any other medicine, but concluded, at last, to take his advice and try a box. Before I had used them all, I was very much better, and two boxes cured me. I am now 80 years old; but I believe that if it had not been for Ayer's Pills, I should have been in my grave long ago. I buy 6 boxes every year, which make 210 boxes up to this time, and I would no more be without them than without bread."—H. H. Ingraham, Rockland, Me.

CHAPTER I.

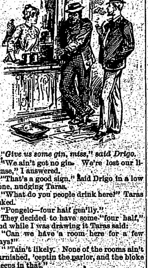
AT THE MARINER'S JOY.

I was lazing on the rotten balcony before the busy front of the Mariner's Joy when I first saw Taras. He came from Ferryboat alley, the passage running between the Joy and Baxter's wharf and leading to the steps where the old ferry used to ply, between that part of Shadwell and Rotherhithe, and another man was with him named Drigo. Taras was a fine, big man, fair, with a long, tawny mustache and a short beard. He was dressed like a workman in a dark gray suit, a flannel shirt and a blue handkerchief for a tie, but he didn't look like a workman for all that—at any rate not such as you see down Shadwell way. He was too clean and active for that. Drigo was not a bit like him, being middle aged, meager, with a stoop in his shoulders, and having a yellow face, with high cheek bones, a sparse black beard and slanting eyes. Men like him are common enough about Wapping and the Highway.

They walked down to the stairs, and Drigo pointed across toward the Commercial docks, but I could not make out what he said. Taras nodded, and they turned round and looked attentively at the Mariner's Joy and then at Baxter's wharf on the right and Johnson's yard at the left, Drigo talking with great earnestness in a low voice all the while and Taras listening gravely as he smoked his pipe and replying only with a word or a nod of his head from time to time. I couldn't make out what they found to interest them, for Baxter's wharf was shut up—and had been shut up for years—and there was nothing in Johnson's yard but a great heap of rusting boilers and old iron. As for the Mariner's Joy, with its broken windows, the gaping planks of its bay front and the rotten balcony projecting over the muddy foreshore, there was nothing in that to attract attention. They saw me, and Drigo made a joke at my expense, I believe, for he chuckled as he stared at me, but Taras smoked on gravely and never smiled.

At length they quitted the steps and came up Ferryboat alley, and a minute or two afterward I heard them open the door in Sweet Apple lane and enter the sanded bar. I went in through the bar parlor to serve them.

"Give us some gin, miss," said Drigo, speaking with an odd accent.



"Give us some gin, miss," said Drigo.

"We ain't got no gin. We're lost our license," I answered.

"That's a good sign," said Drigo in a low tone, nudging Taras.

"What do you people drink here?" Taras asked.

"Pongelo—four half gen'lly."

They decided to have some "four half," and while I was drawing it Taras said:

"Can we have a room here for a few days?"

"'Tain't likely. None of the rooms ain't furnished, 'ceptin the parlor, and the bloke sleeps in that."

"Where is the bloke?"

"Gorned out."

"When will he be in?"

"Don't know. Preaps five minutes, preaps not afore shuttin up time."

All that I know now has been acquired since that time. Then I spoke like a savage and was little better than a savage in any way, having lived from my earliest days friendless and utterly neglected.

Taras and Drigo spoke together in a tongue unknown to me, and that gave me an opportunity of looking at them more closely. Taras was about 32 then, and as I have said a fine, large man. There were resolution and strength in his chin and nose, but great kindness in his mouth and clear, deep blue eyes. I could see then that he was to be loved and feared as well. Not so Drigo. There was nothing to love in his face. His deep sunk black eyes were crafty, his mouth was brutal; his mustache was clipped, and bristling out added to the ferocity of the lower part of his face. Two front teeth were missing, and the rest were black. His face was deeply marked by the smallpox. That type of man was not unknown to me.

"I suppose we may wait here till the—the bloke returns?" Taras said.

"You ken if you like."

"Is he your father?" asked Drigo, seating himself on the bench facing the bar.

"No."

"Your husband?"

"No."

"What then?"

"What's that to you?" I replied.

"What is it to any one?" I asked myself as I made my way through the bar parlor to my former place on the balcony. "What does it matter to any one who I am or what I am? A homeless dog would find more friends than I, a drowning cat would get more pity. What good am I to any one? What good is life to me?"

Such thoughts as these were passing through my mind as I lolled upon the wooden handrail of the platform, looking out at the thick, dun water that sluggishly lapped the slimy shore, when feeling the presence of some one I turned my head and perceived Taras standing near with a notebook and a pencil in his hands. He had found his way out there by the passage and was amusing himself by sketching me, leaning against the wall with his pipe in his mouth. I thought he [illegible] coarse jest and heartless sarcasm to heed another shaft, more or less, even from one who seemed less brutal than the rest—but I had no desire to add to the amusement of my natural enemies.

"Do you mind standing as you stood just now?" he asked.

"Garn aw'y," I replied, turning on him spitefully. "Who d'ye think y're a-gettin at? D'ye think I don't know yer game? D'ye think I'm going to stand for you to make fun of me? I'm as ugly as sin and not so pleasant—there y'are. I know what I am."

"Ugly!" he said, with an accent of astonishment.

"Yes, ugly. Else why do they call me the kipper?"

"The kipper? That is the fish with warm, reddish brown color—the color of your hair."

"No, it ain't. They call me 'goldin surrup' and 'treacle' when they're gettin at the color of my hair, and they call me 'kipper' because I'm so skinny and flat. They can call me anything they likes to lay their tongue to—I don't mind, but I ain't goin to be drawed and stuck up for all the lot to laugh at—not me!"

Just then I heard the front door open, and going into the bar I met the bloke—Putty was his name—who had returned. He was all right—quite sober—for a wonder. I gave him the money I had taken, and nodding at Drigo said:

"These parties is a-waitin to see you."

He had not yet noticed Drigo, who sat up in a dark corner watching him as if to find out what sort of a man they had to deal with. Putty now examined him in the same way, and then turning to Taras, who had entered from the passage, treated him to a long stare.

"We want to know if you can let us have the use of a room for a few nights," said Taras.

"For a private purpose," added Drigo, rising, and dropping his voice as he came closer said, with a wink, "unbeknown to outsiders, you understand."

Putty nodded, and addressing me said, "Hook it," as he took down a pot and drew himself some beer. Taras gave me a pleasant nod as I slunk out by the front door. That altered my destiny. It was not an uncommon thing for me to be sent out of the way when Putty had business affairs to talk about with his customers across the bar of the Joy, and I never troubled myself even to wonder what his secret dealings were, but that kindly look in the face of Taras excited a strange feeling of interest in my mind, which made me curious to know what business he had to transact with such a rascal as the bloke.

I slipped down Ferryboat alley to the shore, climbed up the rotten timbers on to the balcony and edged myself into the bar parlor, where I could hear pretty distinctly all that was said in the bar.

Drigo was speaking, but his broken English and the low, crafty tone of his voice made what he said unintelligible to me. It seemed to perplex Putty also, for presently interrupting him he said with irritation:

"Here! It's no manner of use your being so cussed sly over this here business. I must know all the particlers straightforard afore I go into it. Here, I likes your looks better 'an what I do your pardner's, mate. Lemme hear what you've got to say."

"The matter's simple enough," replied Taras. "Three friends have left their country for certain reasons. To do so they engaged themselves as sailors on board a vessel bound for London. Their contract binds them to return with the ship to their country, and they cannot openly break the contract without rendering themselves liable to be taken back by force. But they intend to desert, and our object is to provide a place of refuge to which we may convey them by night from their ship as soon as it arrives, and where they may change their seagoing clothes for the dress we shall have in readiness for them. We chose this inn for that purpose because it is conveniently near the dock and is not open to observation. If you do not choose to let us use your house, we must find another. That is the whole matter."

"Now I tumble to it right enough," said Putty. "I see you're a gen'leman, sir, and I allers likes to deal with gen'lemen. But you will understand, sir, that all this here is agen the law, and I lay myself open to lose my license and get a month or two of hard even for lettin of parties into the house after closin hours."

"I will pay you for your risk. How much do you want?"

"It's more risky than what you think. It looks a dead and alive hole, as no one comes anigh once in a blue moon, but the coppers keep a bloomin' sharp eye on us all the same. When do you expect this here vessel?"

"Tomorrow. But it might be delayed till Saturday."

"That means a sittin up on the lookout two or three nights. Of course the job would be pulled off when nobody much ain't about?"

"Between 2 and 3 in the morning, if possible."

"That'd do." Then after a little consideration Putty said: "Here, I'll tell you what I'll do with you. You shall have the use of my room for a dollar a night while you're on the lookout, and you shall hand over five quid the night the job is pulled off and your mates get clear. Now I can't say fairer than that, can I?"

Taras accepted these terms, and after some further discussion he and Drigo left the Joy, saying they would return the following afternoon.

I slipped out of the Joy by the way I had entered it and hurried round to the front, impelled, I think, by some unrecognized hope that Taras would nod to me again. I know that I sank down on the steps of Baxter's wharf disconsolate when I saw him in the distance turn the corner of Ferryboat alley and disappear without looking back.

I had been sitting there in dull apathy, my elbows on my knees and my chin in my palms, a quarter of an hour or 20 minutes, when I heard a step in the alley and turning my eyes saw Drigo coming back [illegible] an evil, wicked look in his face. There was treachery in his furtive glances, in the very stoop of his shoulders. Why had he come back alone? What further business had he with the bloke which he could not have done when Taras was with him? These questions aroused my faculties into unwonted energy. Once more I slipped round to the back of the house and up the balcony into the room behind the bar.

Drigo was talking to Putty, but in such a low key that I could make nothing of the sounds that reached me. I caught a glimpse of them through the crack of the door—their two villainous heads close together over the bar—and drew as near as I dared, yet still I could distinguish no words.

"But what are you going to do with him then?" Putty asked, and his voice, though low, was distinct enough—perhaps because I was more used to it.

"I could not gather the reply, but, raising his voice to give emphasis to the offer, I heard this clearly:

"He offered you £5; I'll give you double, and you can betray us to the police if we don't pay up."

"And a tenner won't pay me to be a haccessory to murder"—

Drigo silenced him with a long "hist," and stepping sideways to cast a glance into the parlor he caught sight of me. He gave the alarm to Putty in a hurried tone of terror, and the next moment a pewter pot flew at my head. I was quick enough to duck and avoid the missile, but I only escaped falling into the savage hands of the bloke by flinging myself over the balcony and falling into the mud below.

"Don't let me get nigh you this side of next month, you ——, or I'll pull the weazand out of you," he cried, shaking his fist down at me as I slunk off around a stranded barge.

CHAPTER II.

A MYSTERY.

I lodged in Baxter's wharf. There was a hole in the side of the wall, under the stairs, for ventilating the cellars, closed with an iron grating. One of the bars was gone, and through the narrow opening I could just manage to squeeze—thanks to being a kipper. Once inside I had the whole run of the warehouse. It was quite empty, but on the top floor some old sacking had been left, and this served me for a bed. It was dry and good enough for an outcast like me, who knew nothing of comfort and still less of luxury. I slept there that night, and the next morning I was lucky enough to get work (sail mending) at a ship chandler's in Cable street, for which he gave me my dinner and tea and paid me sevenpence halfpenny into the bargain.

It was dark when I left there between 7 and 8, and feeling safe with regard to Putty I hurried down to Ferryboat stairs as quickly as I could—running part of the way. I was anxious to know what was going on at the Mariner's Joy. I had been thinking about it all day long—feeling a strange emotion within me such as I had never felt before, accompanied with a yearning to see Taras again—to get another kind look from him. I resolved if I could to tell him of Drigo's second visit to the Joy and all I had overheard, that he might be warned against the treachery which it seemed pretty clear his companion intended.

Putty was lounging against the doorpost of the front door of the Joy, in Sweet Apple lane, under the flickering light of the gas lamp at the corner of Ferryboat alley. He had a long clay pipe in his mouth, and I judged he was looking out for Taras and Drigo, who had not yet arrived. I waited in the shadow of an archway until he knocked the ashes out of his pipe and turned into the house, yawning and scratching the back of his head. Then I slipped down the alley to the stairs.

There was no light to be seen at the back of the house. The passage door was shut, and the rickety shutters of the bay window were closed also for the first time in my remembrance. Under the stairs I found a dry timber where I could sit secure from observation, and there I waited for Taras. He was not likely to come for five or six hours, having fixed the hour for the escape of his friends at 2, but I didn't mind that. It was a mild, still night. I had nothing else to do after dark but to think, and I might just as well sit there and dream as anywhere else. I heard Putty put up the shutters about 11, and when I went up the alley an hour later I saw by the glimmer of light through the dirty fanlight over the side door that he was still sitting up.

A little after the clock had struck 2 I caught sight of a boat coming across the river from the Rotherhithe side. As it drew in to the steps I made out one man at the oars and two men in the stern seat. Then my heart beat quicker, for I felt that Taras was there before I heard his voice.

"We shan't want you any more tonight," he said as the boat ran ashore, "but you will be at the same place tomorrow at the same time."

"I'll be there master; no fear. Good night, gentlemen."

"Good night."

The boatman pushed off, while Taras and Drigo groped their way up the dark and slippery steps over my head. I knew the other was Drigo by the sound of his harsh, guttural voice cursing as he stumbled.

As soon as I dared I slipped from my hiding place and ran up the stairs like a cat. When I reached the top, I saw their figures standing up sharp and black against the light farther up the alley—Taras, square and erect; Drigo, with his head buried in his shoulders. They stopped at the side door of the Joy and rapped lightly. The light from within fell upon Taras' fair beard as the door opened. A few words were interchanged in a low tone, the door closed, and the two men went on, turning the corner under the gas lamp into Sweet Apple lane. I did not attempt to follow them, dreading to pass the door where Putty might still be standing, but stood there with a feeling like the craving for food in my breast until the impulse to overtake Taras and speak to him, even though Drigo were still with him, overcame my fear. Then I ran swiftly up the alley and along the lane, straining my eyes with mad desire to see him again.

They were gone; the lane was empty. When I reached High street and stopped there panting for breath not a soul was to be seen to the right or left, not a sound broke the dead silence. I gave up the pursuit in despair and returned slowly in dejection. The light was out in the Joy when I passed. I crept into the cellar, felt my way through the storerooms to my corner in the loft and lay down to sleep, comforting myself with the reflection that I should certainly see Taras again the next night. [illegible]

When I looked out in the morning I saw Drigo and Putty on the balcony, giving directions to a carpenter who was patching up the window shutters. When that job was done the man put some screws in the [illegible] door. Drigo and Putty [illegible] I might not be seen from the Joy. When the carpenter had done his work, they all went in by the passage, bolting the door after, and I saw no more of them [illegible]

As soon as it was dark I went to my hiding place under the stairs, but I was less patient than I had been the night before, and I could not control my agitation as the time drew near for Taras to come again. My teeth chattered, my body and limbs trembled and shook with feverish excitement, yet I knew not why. As the clock struck 2 the police boat passed by. About five minutes later another boat came out of the murky distance and drew toward the stairs. As it pulled into the stairs I counted five men packed in the stern, and I knew by the number that Taras had found his friends. My heart sank in bitter disappointment, for I had made up my mind to speak to him if he came alone with Drigo. Now, there was no pretext for speaking to him—he was not in danger. With his three friends he was more than a match for Drigo and Putty, supposing they had evil intentions toward him.

They landed, and having discharged the waterman groped their way up the dark stairs to the landing above, where they stopped, talking together in a low voice and in their own tongue. Eventually Drigo left them and went up to the Joy to see that the road was clear. Meanwhile, made reckless by my unsatisfied yearnings, I had left my place, and following them noiselessly up the steps stood now, almost within arm's reach of Taras. I distinguished the profile of his face quite clearly against the faint light beyond as he turned to speak a few cheering words to one of his friends—the bold, handsome outline of his aquiline nose, the curve of his mustache and his short, pointed beard. Almost I fancied I could see in his face the expression of happiness in having rescued his friends. I was envious of that kindly regard bestowed upon another, and drawing a step nearer, by an instinctive impulse, raised my hand and laid it timidly on his arm. The act was not intentional. I could not help doing it.

The movement was seen by his companion, who started with a stifled cry of alarm. Taras, seeing me, spoke a few low words of remonstrance to his friend that seemed to say: "What are you afraid of? It's only a poor, miserable waif." Then, recognizing me at a second glance, he exclaimed softly in English:

"Ah, it is you!"

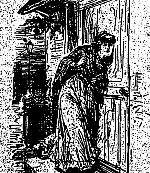
"Yes, me—the kipper," I tried to say, but my voice was thick with feverish agitation and my words unintelligible.

"You have come to tell us that it is all right," he said, adding, after he had given this explanation to his friends, "it's very good of you," and he nodded at me again with that kind smile that had wrought such a mysterious effect upon my nature.

Just then Drigo whistled softly from the side door of the Joy, and Taras hurried his friends forward, leaving me there with more happiness in my heart than I had felt in the whole of my life.

I waited on the landing until they had all filed into the Joy. Then I slipped past the closed door and ran across to the archway in Sweet Apple lane opposite the house. I knew that there was no accommodation for the party in the Joy, and that as soon as the escaped men had changed their clothes they would come away. As there was no other way but through Sweet Apple lane they must pass me, and I should see Taras once more.

I had stood there not many minutes when I heard a glass crash in the Joy, and the next moment there was a deep thud as if some one had thrown himself against the door; then there followed a stifled cry, the shuffling of feet and the sound of heavy blows. These sounds left me in no doubt as to what was going on in the bar of the Joy. In Shadwell one hears the noise of fighting every night. But I could hardly believe that Drigo and Putty were the attacking party. The latter I knew to be a coward and feeble as well, being sodden with drink. Taras, I felt sure, could defend himself against half a dozen such men as he, and timid as his friends might be it was not likely that they would stand aside and make no effort to aid him. I had no fear for him, but rather a savage exultation in the belief that he would thrash his enemies and punish them according to their deserts. It occurred to me that he had discovered Drigo's treachery and was now giving him a lesson not to be forgotten, and with a burning desire to hear him howling for mercy I ran across the road and put my ear to the door.



I ran across the road and put my ear to the door.

The fight was over already. I could hear no sound save a faint whispering and occasionally the shuffling of feet, and even these indications of movement within ceased after awhile, leading me to believe that the whole party had retired into the room behind the bar. I could not make it out. There was no swearing, no altercation, nothing but silence. It was the strangest way of concluding a fight or a quarrel that I had ever heard. What did it mean? Had Taras killed Drigo by some terrible blow of that strong arm and were they all silenced by the fear of alarming the police? That seemed to me the most plausible explanation.

I betook myself hurriedly to the dark archway as I heard a grating of the lock in the side door of the Joy, and almost immediately afterward I saw the three escaped friends of Taras come up from Ferryboat lane. I recognized all three as they passed the archway. They walked in haste. I thought then that they might be in search of a doctor, but they never returned. After a time I ventured down the alley. There was no light to be seen through the fanlight of the side door, and all was silent as the night. I hung about the place in vague perplexity, unable to leave it, expecting every minute some further development of [illegible] o'clock, when it was broad daylight, the front door of the Mariner's Joy opened and Putty came out and took down the shutters. He had not a scratch on his face. While he was thus engaged Drigo appeared, and he also showed no sign of having been in the fight. He spoke to Putty and then walked off along Sweet Apple lane. Putty went in and reappeared, sweeping away the fragments of broken glass. Then for the first time a terrible fear that Taras had been killed in the fight took hold of me and shook me like an ague. But I did not know what to do. I was like one paralyzed—incapable of action. I never thought of going to the police. What use if Taras was dead? Besides, from the earliest days of my recollection, I had regarded the police as my natural enemy—the enemy of all outcasts and homeless wretches like me.

But after a time I caught sight of Drigo returning down Sweet Apple lane with a loaf under his arm and other provisions in his hands. Then, desperate with this newborn fear, I stepped into the road from the doorway where I had been crouching and stopped him.

"Where is he—the big man with the fair beard?" I asked.

"Why," said he in his broken English, and with a grin on his hateful face, but not a sign of embarrassment or surprise, "he went away with his friends hours ago."

"That's a lie," said I; "only three men have come out of the Joy in the night, and those are the three who went into it with you and the man with the fair beard."

"I won't contradict a lady, but if he didn't go away with his friends he is in the house now, and if you are still in doubt you had better come in and see."

The words I have underlined he whispered with such a fiendish grin that there was no mistaking his meaning. If he had said plainly, "Come in and share the same fate as the man with the fair beard," the threat would not have been more obvious.

"Will you come, Beauty?" he added with a sneer.

I made no reply, and he went on to the Joy with a derisive chuckle.

It was not the fear of death that made a coward of me; my life was too wretched and hopeless to be cherished. It was just the dread of personal violence and physical suffering; that's all. But in the course of the morning I grew apathetic under the sense of weariness and dejection. "If the man with the fair beard is killed," I said to myself, "I may as well be killed, too, and be done with it for good and all."

And with this thought I crossed the lane and pushed open the swing door of the Joy.

LONG BATTLE OVER.

UNCONDITIONAL REPEAL PASSES THE SENATE, 48 TO 32.

Closing Day of the Great Struggle One of Intense Excitement—Senatorial Courtesies Forgotten In the Heat of the Debate.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31.—At 7:28 p. m., by a vote of 48 to 32, the senate, after one of the most remarkable and memorable parliamentary battles of a generation, passed the bill unconditionally repealing the purchase clause of the Sherman silver law. The end was reached at the conclusion of a continuous session of 14 days, after 61 days of debate, during which five volumes of The Congressional Record had been filled with speeches amounting to, in the aggregate, about 20,000,000 words, a stream of talk that would stretch in could type from the seaboard 1,600 miles into the interior.

The Closing Day.

The closing day of the great struggle for the repeal of the purchase of silver was one of intense excitement. The galleries were packed to the doors, every seat in the senate was occupied and the walls were lined with representatives from the lower branch of congress. The ægis of senatorial courtesy was no protection in the last moment. Grayhaired men did not spare each other. Senator Morgan fairly heaped his denunciation on Senator Voorhees, the leader of the administration forces, and Senator Wolcott, the Colorado hotspur, concluded a fierce phillipic against Senator Carey with the Spanish proverb of Sancho Panza that it was a Waste of Lather to Shave an Ass.

The Democrats were hot and anry at the desertion of some of their colleagues that made their defeat possible; the Republicans warned the senate that the doom of silver was the doom of the old parties, but there was something tragically pathetic in the despairing cry of the silver senators. It meant, they said, ruin and destruction and desolation to the silver producing states. Senator Jones, with an emphasis that will never be forgotten by those who heard him, warned those about him that the end of the fight marked but the beginning of the battle that would be waged before the people. In tones deep and tragic he repeated Dundee's famous defiance of Gordon:

> There be hills beyond Pentland,
> And friths beyond Forth:
> If there be lords in the Lowlands,
> There be chiefs in the North.

Stewart Last, of Course.

Senator Stewart had the last word, and when the white-bearded Nevadian, looking like an ancient patriarch, sank back in his seat, Vice President Stevenson for the last time announced that the bill was before the senate for amendment. He paused. Senator Voorhees, the Tall Sycamore of the Wabash, arose. The decisive moment had come. The vice president flashed his eye about the chamber. The galleries leaned over. The chamber was still as death.

"If there are no further amendments," said the vice president, slowly and solemnly, "the clerk will call the roll."

Roll Call Begun.

"Mr. Allen," began the clerk. The suspense was over. The Rubicon had been passed. The roll was at last being called on the final passage of the bill. From all over the chamber came a sigh of relief. Mr. Sherman and Mr. Voorhees, facing each other bolt upright, did not move a muscle. Mr. Peffer stroked his beard. Mr. Mills and Mr. Cockrell paced impatiently up and down in front of the vice president's chair. Mr. Hill sat in the front row talking to his late antagonist, Mr. Butler. It took 10 minutes to call the roll and arrange the pairs. When the vice president announced the vote Mr. Voorhees straightened up to his full length. It was a personal victory for him.

"I now move," said he, with a tone of triumph in his voice, "that the senate adjourn until 12 o'clock."

The long battle was over.

THE DAY IN DETAIL.

Silverites Make a Hard Fight Against Repeal.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31.—When the senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. and entered upon the 13th week of the present extraordinary session, a roll call showed the presence of 52 senators.

When the consideration of the bill to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman act was resumed, Mr. Hunton (Dem., Va.) in a few words defined his position, saying he would vote for unconditional repeal, and then stand ready to join with the friends of silver for a fight for that metal.

Mr. Cameron (Rep., Pa.) then read a statement as to his position and views on the repeal bill, and was followed by Mr. Morgan (Dem., Ala.). Mr. Morgan paid particular attention to the president's alleged acts of coercion to force the passage of the bill. He concluded his remarks by saying that he left the subject with the knowledge that the die was cast. The senate, the house and the president had determined that the pending measure should prevail. There was nothing now to look to, so far as he could see, but some vague promises made in the senate which were entirely incapable of being realized.

Vest Sympathises.

Mr. Vest (Dem., Mo.) followed Mr. Morgan. He expressed his sympathy with the people of the silver states and said no czar or kaiser would desolate an insurrectionary province as congress was about to desolate the silver states of the West.

Mr. Cockrell (Dem., Mo.) followed Mr. Vest. He reviewed the history of the repeal bill in the house and the senate, showing that it was reported to the senate by two Democrats, Messrs. Voorhees and McPherson, and four Republicans, Messrs. Allison, Aldrich, Morrill and Sherman—a non-partisan measure, the partisanship all being on the Republican side. Mr. Cockrell closed with the statement that if the repeal of the Sherman law failed to restore prosperity the Republican party must bear the responsibility.

Mr. Carey (Rep., Wyo.) defended his position on the bill and said he would vote for unconditional repeal although he favored a compromise.

Mr. Dubois (Rep., Ida.) regretted that the senator from Wyoming did not represent his people, but he knew the senator was following his conscience in doing what he thought was right.

Mr. Jones of Nevada, at 5:20 p. m., resumed his speech begun some days ago. He spoke for about an hour and concluded by saying: "This may be regarded by some of my conferees as the doom of silver; but, sir, it is only the commencement of the fight. We who favor this policy and we who are against constantly increasing value in the unit of money propose to go to the American people and see that every man, woman and child in the United States understands fully the meaning of what we intend to do next."

Peffer Takes Another Turn.

Mr. Peffer said he desired to occupy 15 minutes before the vote was taken, as he would not feel that he had done his duty did he not enter another protest against what he considered the crowning infamy of the present century.

Mr. Harris (Dem., Tenn.) declared that the passage of the repeal bill meant unmistakably the utter demonetization of silver as a money metal.

Mr. Stewart (Rep., Nev.) rose, and his first sentence, "The die is cast," caused a ripple of laughter to roll over the galleries. "The surreptitious and fraudulent act of 1873 demonetizing silver is ratified and confirmed," said he. "The gold kings are victorious, the labors of their champion, the senator from Ohio (Sherman), are crowned with success."

Mr. Stewart's last words were: "Let the vote be taken; let the object lesson be given. We will abide by the result."

Repeal Bill Passed.

At 7:20 the vice president put the question on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of bill, which was agreed to without division. The vote was then taken by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill as amended. The vote resulted, 48 yeas, 32 nays. So the bill as amended was passed. The vote in detail follows:

Yeas—Aldrich, Brice, Caffrey, Camden, Carey, Cullom, Davis, Dixon, Dolph, Faulkner, Frye, Gallinger, Gibson, Gorman, Gray, Hale, Hawley, Higgins, Hill, Hoar, Hunton, Lindsay, Lodge, McMillan, McPherson, Manderson, Mills, Mitchell (Wis.), Morrill, Murphy, Platt, Proctor, Quay, Ransom, Sherman, Smith, Squire, Stockbridge, Turpie, Vilas, Voorhees, Washburn and White (La.)—43.

Nays—Allen, Bate, Berry, Blackburn, Butler, Call, Cameron, Cockrell, Coke, Daniel, Dubois, George, Harris, Irby, Jones (Ark.), Jones (Nev.), Kyle, Martin, Pascoe, Peffer, Power, Perkins, Pettigrew, Pugh, Roach, Shoup, Stewart, Teller, Vance, Vest, Walthall and Wolcott—32.

The following pairs were announced, first named being affirmative:

Allison and Mitchell (Or.), Chandler and White (Cal.), Wilson, and Colquitt, Gordon and Morgan, Palmer and Hansbrough.

Aid For Schools of Mines.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31.—The senate passed the bill providing for the assistance of schools of mines by the general government in Western mineral states to the amount of $12,000 annually from the proceeds of the sale of mineral lands.

Won by Clifford.

CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—Clifford won easily in the sweepstakes one and a quarter mile race in which he, Yo Tambien and Lamplighter fought for the $8,000 prize. He went under the wire in 2:07 3-4, with Yo Tambien 15 lengths away and with Lamplighter 20 lengths behind the mare.

WILY HETTY GREEN.

PECULIARITIES OF A WOMAN WORTH $60,000,000.

She Is Old Fashioned In Appearance, Severely Plain In Dress, but the Personification of Shrewdness When Financial Transactions Are Involved.

Not a small part of the fame of Brooklyn can be laid to the credit of the remarkable women who have lived and live now within its borders—women who have taken rank and honor in almost every walk of life. It is a well known fact that a very large proportion of the real estate of the city is held in the names of women. It is not a widely known fact that the woman who is reputed to be the richest in the United States lives in the City of Churches and right in the classic section known as the heights too. Her wealth is variously estimated at from $40,000,000 to $60,000,000, and her name is Mrs. Hetty Green. Her name and personality are more familiar to Wall street than they are to Brooklyn society. That is because Mrs. Green has chosen to devote all her time to the manipulation of her fortune and has society get along without her. Mrs. Green at an Ihpetonga ball would create a sensation indeed, but it is not likely that such an occasion will ever be recorded by society writers.

Hosts of people have brushed elbows with a shrewd and rather calm faced woman, apparently 50 years old, rather short, wearing a plain, old fashioned shawl and a bonnet so far beyond fashion's pale that no one would ever suspect it had been in it, even years ago. Nobody ever saw her with a dress which was not severely plain, and seldom has she been noticed when she did not carry an old style and well worn black satchel. Her appearance would never cause the uninitiated to think that she was anything more extraordinary than an old fashioned woman of moderate means and simple tastes, who was on her way to the corner grocery or the bakery on the block below. Yet, if money is power, this same staid looking person is one of the most powerful human beings in the country.

In an old fashioned house on a corner in Pierrepont street Mrs. Green and her daughter Sylvia have lived for several years. The modest apartments they occupy are hired from a pleasant faced woman, who keeps the house and who has an admiration for Mrs. Green, which she does not conceal. The richest woman in the United States has a son, who has been spending some time in Florida seeking to improve his health. Mrs. Green has been a widow for many years, and her daughter is about 20 years old. Since the death of her husband Hetty Green has become a financier of unusual shrewdness. She has indicated by her actions that she has small faith in brokers, and that if she wants anything done the best way is to do it herself.

The weather beaten satchel has carried securities representing millions of dollars. It has knocked about New York and Brooklyn and other big financial centers with precious burdens, and Hetty Green has always had a tight grip on it. She does dot believe in spending her money on things she does not want, and as she wants very little she spends but little. Her children and her fortune are the sole objects of her solicitude. Mrs. Green is said to be very anxious to have her daughter become one of the leading actors in the famous Four Hundred of Manhattan island. Something of an obstacle in the way of this is the daughter herself, according to report. Miss Green is credited with caring as little for the dazzle and newspaper notoriety of a social career as her mother. She is a girl whose tastes are quiet and to whom dress is a matter of little consideration.

Mrs. Green, by way of a foundation for her daughter's social debut, some time ago settled a large sum of money on that young woman in government bonds. The amount is stated to be $5,000,000.

Incidents in the career of this remarkable woman have stamped her as a bold yet cautious operator in stocks and securities. When the financial panic of 1884 occurred, Mrs. Green had a large deposit in a firm of Canadian bankers named Cisco & Co. of New York. Information reached her that the bank was in an unsafe condition, and without waiting to hear more she went to the institution and withdrew her entire deposit. The firm had no alternative, and after paying her her money was compelled to suspend and finally failed completely. Hetty Green is the largest property owner in the city of Chicago. She holds title to block after block of land in the business section, and her son assists in looking after her interests there. For many years she lived in the western metropolis, and she spends much of her time there when away from Brooklyn.

Her characteristic bargain with ex-Judge Henry Hilton is fresh in the minds of financiers. The money which the judge wanted so badly is generally conceded to have been used in buying out the interest of his son, Henry G. Hilton, in the dry goods firms of Hilton, Hughes & Co. and Hilton Bros. He went to Mrs. Green, or his lawyers did, and made a request for a loan of $1,250,000 in cash. Mrs. Green was willing to lend, but insisted on having a mortgage on the marble palace at the corner of Broadway and Chambers street, New York, the Stewart building, which with the land is supposed to be worth $3,000,000. She would take no other security, and after a two months' search of the title the largest mortgage ever given on a single piece of property in New York was recorded. But Judge Hilton needed the money before the search had been concluded, and after he had placed in the hands of Hetty Green the deeds representing $1,000,000 worth of property [illegible]

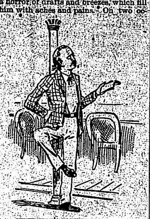
AN AWKWARD NOVELIST.

Mr. Stevenson's Diction Is More Graceful Than His Attitudes.

Robert Louis Stevenson had an annoying but ludicrous experience on a recent trip from Apia to Honolulu. He made the voyage for the benefit of his health and brought along a bright eyed Samoan boy as a bodyservant and nurse. Mr. Stevenson intended to spend but a week in Hawaii, but fate so ordered it that his servant got the measles and was quarantined at Honolulu, and the great writer had to change his role from patient to nurse and prolong his visit to suit his servant's convenience.

A passenger on the Mariposa, the vessel on which Mr. Stevenson made his journey, says the novelist remained in his stateroom most of the time, having a horror of drafts and breezes, which fill him with aches and pains. On two occasions, however, he took part in the cabin entertainments of the passengers, giving them readings from some of his own works.



STEVENSON'S PICTURESQUE POSE.

"Stevenson," the passenger said, "is at all times a striking figure, but as he stood twined about a stanchion in the saloon of the Mariposa he was really picturesque. His long slender legs were incased in a pair of tight fitting black trousers, held in place by a narrow red sash. A white flannel shirt, cut low in the neck, and a short jacket completed his attire.

"The dark coat set off the ghastly pallor of a face lighted by the flash of a pair of black eyes. It is an intellectual face, long and narrow, with a broad white brow, around which his damp brown hair hangs in wavy masses. Of whiskers he has none, but sports a tender, drooping mustache and a tiny goatee. His reading was given with a dramatic power that held the interest of the audience.

"There were times, however, when Mr. Stevenson's legs proved the greater attraction. This was when he planted his right foot above the kneecap of his left leg, hooking it in position with the heel. In this graceful posture he would read a few moments and then switch off to the other leg, to the great amusement of the spectators. At no time during the reading did he have both feet on the deck at the same time."

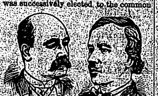
A GUBERNATORIAL CANDIDATE.

The Interesting Career of Frederic Thomas Greenhalge.

In 1850, when William Greenhalge, an expert engraver, came from England to Massachusetts and obtained employment in one of the mills of Lowell, he brought with him his son, Frederic Thomas Greenhalge, who is now the Republican candidate for governor of Massachusetts. The boy was then about 8 years of age and immediately entered upon a successful educational career in the Lowell public schools, wherein he achieved the distinctions dear to the boyish heart and fitted himself for Harvard, where he matriculated in 1859.

He did not graduate, however, for during his sophomore year his father died, and he was compelled to leave college and take care of his mother and sisters. He began by teaching school in Chelmsford and began to study law, but allowed the hope of military glory to interrupt his studies for five months, during which he was attached to the commissary department at New-Berne, N. C. From there he was sent home very ill, and after his recovery went back to his Blackstone and was admitted to the bar in 1865.

Soon he went into politics, and identifying himself with the Republican party was successively elected to the common council, the school committee, the mayoralty of Lowell and the state legislature, in each of which positions he served two terms. Next he was made city solicitor, and the same year was elected to the Fifty-first congress, where he distinguished himself as a member of the elections committee. He is or has been connected with the management of many of the business, literary and benevolent institutions of Lowell, still holding the presidency of the City Institution For Savings, the History club and the People's club, an organization formed 20 years ago for the benefit of the working people of Lowell. He is also a trustee of the Rogers Hall school for girls, the Westford academy and the Lowell General hospital.



MR. GREENHALGE IN 1893 AND IN 1863.

'Round Home.

Mr. Burr has moved to Grand Forks.

Look out for Dickson on Monday evening.

W. J. Murphy was up from Minneapolis early this week.

Dr. Chapin and Bob Teal were in from Euclid on Saturday.

J. V. E. Wyatt has moved from the Odd Fellow's block to the avenue.

Mr. Mossefin is shingling the addition to the Scandinavian hotel.

Fred Durand has moved into the house recently occupied by Mr. Burr.

Geo. O. Buhn enjoyed the closing week of the great World's Fair at Chicago.

E. D. Childs returned on Wednesday from a visit to Chicago and the great Fair.

Geo. J. McManus was up from Winona this week chatting with old-time friends.

John O. Buhn came down from Mentor this week, to attend a case in Probate court.

Judge Benson went out to the farm near Erskine on Saturday and spent the Sabbath.

J. V. E. Wyatt is hobbling about on crutches this week. His injured limb is progressing finely.

Street Commissioner Dan McDonald is reported to have had a severe attack of heart disease last week.

Justice L. E. Gossman and DeForest Bucklen, were suddenly carried off last Friday—World's Fair fever.

Bro. Stevens, of the Warren Register, was in the city on Tuesday enroute home from a visit to the coast.

Frank Farnham informs the JOURNAL that he is doing a nice business at his new stand—Charlie Thompson's place.

Robert Ray, of Belmont, N. D., is moving his family into the Kistenmacher house on Main street, recently occupied by Sam Rosenthal.

C. H. Saake rejoices in the arrival of a bran new boy at his house, which important event occurred early on Monday morning.

Dr. Just has moved his office to a suite of rooms on the east side of the Odd Fellows block, on the same floor where he was located before.

Mrs. C. E. Dampier returned on Tuesday morning from a visit to Chicago and Washington after a pleasant visit of two months duration.

A. W. Foss returned from Chicago last Thursday, and left for home the same day. By the way that reminds us that the Thirteen Towns did not reach this office last issue. What's the matter boys, too much celebration?

Peter Jordan was brought in from Red Lake last Saturday, and was examined before Judge Christianson on a charge of selling liquor to the Indians. For lack of the necessary evidence the prisoner was discharged.

Judge Ives opens court in Ada next Monday.

Mrs. Chas. Misner visited friends in Warren last week.

Don't fail to read our new serial commenced this week.

Mayor Stephens and wife went to the great Fair at Chicago last week.

Dept. County Auditor Mat Cornelius enjoyed the Great Fair a few days last week.

Uncle Robert Johnson has returned from Dakota and accepted a position in the office of the county treasurer.

Farmers who have had a fair average yield of barley find it more profitable than raising wheat this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bivins Ed. Bivins and Mrs. Bugg, returned from the World's Fair last Friday morning, after a ten days visit in Chicago.

John McLean and Dr. Watts returned from Chicago on Wednesday morning after an absence of three weeks. John says Chicago is a wonderful city.

Anton Erickson is moving his confectionary store into the room adjoining the Scandia American bank, recently occupied by Loken's furniture store.

Bob Ovens, who died of typhoid fever last week at his home in Larimore, was well known in this city where he had many friends who will regret his early death.

The county dads have taken the preliminary steps toward opening the big ditch from the town of Fanny to the river. This is a move in the right direction.

An evening of thorough enjoyment can be safely promised to all who attend, Chas. Dickson and his company of players in "Incog" at the Grand Opera House next Monday, November 6th.

Now that the Great World's Fair is over what will the average daily newspaper have to talk about? About two-thirds of the press dispatches lately have been in relation to that great event.

Potatoes are a bonanza this fall. At fifty cents per bushel there is more money in them than in wheat at the ruling prices so far. The prospects are that the price will double by next spring and all who can had bette buy now, while they can be had at fifty cents.

T. G. Thompson and Alderman J. E. Morrisey resisted the fairy stories which they have heard all summer in relation to the great World's Fair until last week when they could stand it no longer and quietly took the train for the World's Fair city on Thursday night.

The management of the Grand Opera House takes pleasure to announce the appearance of Chas. Dickson in "Incog" supported by some of the best talent in the country. No better play of this kind has been written if the unanimous praise of the press which has been bestowed upon it can be believed. It should succeed in drawing a large audience to the theatre next Monday night.

Mrs. S. L. Collins returned on Wednesday morning from a visit to the World's Fair and her old home in Wabasha.

The county jail received an accession of four boarders from East Grand Forks this week. That ambitious little city seems bound to keep up with the procession in this line.

Wheat opened out on Monday morning at 51 cents and closed on Tuesday night at 48. The passage of the repeal bill by the Senate on Monday didn't seem to produce the effect many had fondly hoped for.

I. Mailloux, Oliver Mercil's genial clerk, rejoiced in the arrival of a handsome little Miss at his house on Sunday and Grandpa Beaudry illuminates the county treasurer's office with the light of his beaming countenance ever since the auspicious event.

From a passing glance at the handsome face of Dept. Sheriff Losey one would not suspect how well he can sing—but they do say that a visit to Euclid, a piano, a parlor and a pretty girl will inspire such melody as you never would dream of.

Geo. McLean, Jr. wishes us to state that he has disposed of all of his crop of potatoes that he can spare and is tired of answering letters in relation to the same. He says the JOURNAL is the best advertising medium he knows of.

Just at the present time there is not a very profitable market for oats, but the probability is, that there will be next spring. Good judges aver that there is a shortage this fall and predict better prices than last spring when oats sold for 35 and 40 cents.

Rev. S. H. Barteau preached at the Congregational church last Sabbath evening to a goodly audience of his old parishioners and friends. Mr. B. was a one time pastor of that church in this city and has many warm friends here. His home is now in Louisiana.

The fall has been very propitious for farm work, notwithstanding which fact the plowing seems to be very much behind leaving a great deal yet to be done, but if we get 10 or 15 days open weather it will be nearly all finished. Changing work in threshing is responsible for most of the delay.

Wood seems to be plenty and cheap this fall. It ranges all the way from $3.00 per cord for soft to $5.00 for hard wood. There are hundreds of cords along the Fosston line which can be bought very cheap for cash. While coal is quite high wood bids fair to be correspondingly low.

Ezra Clark, a Stevens county farmer, is looking Polk county over this week. Says our crops seem to have been better than they had in his county. His wheat yield was four bushels No. 2 Northern. Mr. Clark is visiting his brother Ira who has been employed on the farm of Aaron Cooke for the past summer and looks so much like him that a stranger could not tell t'other from which.

The Rice, Wolford & Sheridan Co., presented "Smugglers" at the opera house on Monday evening. The play was greeted by a full house and seemed to give satisfaction, although aside from the scenery there isn't much in "Smugglers." "The Mystic Mountain," put on Tuesday night is a stronger play and was really well rendered in most particulars. Specialty work has become so much a part of dramatic entertainments that it is expected as a matter of course and is missed when omitted as in this case. The scenery this company carries is unexcelled and their work is conscienciously and faithfully done in every particular.

Among the leading Polk county farmers, whose names appear in World's Fair awards on wheat we note farmer Sam Rosenthal, farmer A. Chabot, farmer Ole Hanson farmer Barney Faren, farmer A. D. Stephens, farmer Louis Fontaine, farmer S. L. Collins, farmer Frank Creamer, farmer C. E. Dampier, etc. What's the matter with farmer Frank Gravel? He don't show up. Among other farmers who took first premium on wheat exhibit are Jake Ide, Ole Hoven, Helmich Bros, E. D. Childs and F. Bivins & Son of Crookston.

The story of "Incog," which will be produced at the Grand Opera house on Monday, Nov. 6th, is a story of a young man being driven from home by his father for refusing to marry his ward, and persisting in his determination to marry the ward's companion, determines to return incog so as to be near the [illegible] disguises himself so as to resemble a photograph which he has picked up [illegible] twin brothers who cannot be distinguished from each other, one of whom [illegible] wife and the other a sweetheart living in the same house.

Dave Miller was in from Angus on Wednesday.

Henry Horn was in from Keystone on Wednesday.

Mrs. George Bunby was in from Mentor, shopping, this week.

Ed. Schreader has fitted up a neat office in one corner of his stables for use in his veterinary business.

John McLean and Dr. Watts returned from Chicago yesterday, having spent three weeks at the Fair.

A. A. Miller returned Wednesday from St. Paul, where he had been arguing a case before the supreme court.

Ed. George left last night for St. Paul, and expects to argue the Beauchaine vs McKinnon case before the supreme court to-morrow.

November opened lowery and threatening. The farmers are all hoping for ten days open weather yet.

By using Hall's Hair Renewer, gray, faded or discolored hair assumes the natural color of youth, and grows luxuriant and strong, pleasing everybody.

It would seem that there is some building going on this fall, judging from the business being done by the A. M. Stewart Lumber Co. They sold lumber for three houses on Wednesday.

J. P. Marcum, wife and son returned from Chicago last week. He escaped from prison—Libby prison, all right, through the famous tunnel, and managing to avoid the dungeon arrived home in safety to the delight of his many friends.

A. M. Stewart this week sold a bill of lumber to parties at Minnewaukan, N. D. They had prices from every lumber concern on the line in Dakota and as far east as Fosston in this state. This fact shows conclusively that Stewart's prices are all right.

The freeze up last week interferred with plowing somewhat, causing the most of the farmers to quit for two or three days, though a few stopped for one day only. The kind of plowing that could be done, however, is wholly undesirable, as the soil was frozen too solid to turn well.

An Enterprising Justice.

The Minneapolis Evening Journal says: "A Crookston papar prints an account of the arrest of one John Larson, a farmer, for passing a counterfeit $10 bill in that city. The prisoner was tried and fined $10 and made to redeem the bill by Justice Gossman. The trial of a counterfeit money case in a justice court is something rather unusual and the local treasury authorities here are inclined to think that the case is entirely out of the jurisdiction of the justice. It should have been made a United States case and the prisoner tried before the United States grand jury. The treasury department may look into the matter.

Raphael.

Raphael experienced temptations to suicide. He himself says: "I tied the fisherman's cords which I found in the boat eight times around her body and mine, tightly as in a winding sheet. I raised her in my arms, which I had kept free in order to precipitate her with me into the waves. * * * At the moment I was to leap to be swallowed forever with her, I felt her pallid head turn upon my shoulder like a dead weight and the body sink down upon my knees."—New York Times.

The greatest naval review of modern times was by Queen Victoria in 1854, at the beginning of the Crimean war. The fleet extended in an unbroken line for five miles and comprised 300 men-of-war, with twice that number of store and supply ships. The fleet was manned by 40,000 seamen.

"A chemical success and medical triumph," so speaks an eminent physican in reference to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral; and the eulogy was none too strong. No other medicine is so safe and efficacious in all diseases of the throat and lungs.

"Nothing succeeds like success" and nothing will more quickly insure success than true merit. For fifty years, Ayer's Sarsaparilla has maintained its popularity as a superior blood-purifier. It stands upon its own merits and never fails to give satisfaction.

Low Rates to the Coast.

The Northern Pacific railroad has just put into effect a series of low round-trip rates to Pacific Coast points. These California tickets are good until April 30th, 1894, and are good for stop over points under certain conditions.

These rates will enable those desiring so to do, to spend the winter in Southern California or to visit the Mid-winter Fair to be held at San Francisco. This latter event will undoubtedly be second only to the World's Fair just closed, and will repay a visit as it will exhibit the resources and capabilities of California.

St. Paul, Minneapolis & Duluth to Northern Pacific coast points and return $65.50; to San Francisco and return to Missouri river $80.50; to Los Angeles and return to Missouri river $90.00.

REPUBLICAN VICTORIES.

Iowa, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, South Dakota and Kansas

Give Rousing Republican Majorities at the Elections Held Tuesday.

The Great Issue in most of the States was Protection vs. Free Trade

And Protection Has Had an Overwhelming Victory.

The elections of Tuesday proved an overwhelming triumph for Republican principles and clearly indicate that the masses are already weary of Democratic misrule. Ohio, the home of protection, gives McKinley, the great champion of protection, a rousing majority of over 80,000, New York goes Republican by 100,000, Massachusetts by 30,000 and every other State except Virginia is safely in line, even Kansas, the great Populist stronghold has seen the error of her ways and comes into line right royally. The sober second thought of the American people has found expression and clearly indicates a return of prosperity under Republican rule.

Wheat Sixty Are Cents.

That's what it is at the JOURNAL office from now till Dec. 1st, in payment of all back subscriptions that are at least three years in arrears. Here is a chance for all who wish to be honest with us, to pay up this fall and save money by so doing. Remember the offer holds good until December 1st, 1893.

Mr. W. M. Terry, who has been in the drug business at Elkton, Ky., for the past twelve years, says: "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy gives better satisfaction than any other cough medicine I have ever sold." There is good reason for this. No other will cure a cold so quickly, no other is so certain a preventive and cure for croup, no other affords so much relief in cases of whooping cough. For sale by S. I. O. G. T. BANQUET.

The Good Templars Give A Public Installation and Banquet.

Last Tuesday night was a gala occasion for the Good Templars of Crookston.

On that evening occurred the public installation of the officers of the Crookston Lodge for the ensuing year, which was followed by a banquet, with toasts, speech-making, music, etc.

The Odd Fellows had kindly given the Templars the use of their handsome hall for the evening. Over 100 guests were present and the evening was one of pleasure to all in attendance. At 8:30 Chief Templar Squier called the gathering to order, the Grand Chief Templar's Installing Deputy, A. A. Lommen, conducted the installation exercises and delivered his charge to each of the officers elect. The following are the officers who took the obligations:

Chief Templar—Rev. L. W. Squier, Vice Templar—Miss E. E. Page, Supt. of Juvenile Temples—Mrs. R. H. Battey, Secretary—Mrs. Alfrida Thune, Financial Secretary—Miss Anna Thune, Treasurer—Mr. John Watts, Chaplain—Miss Irene Harris, Marshall—Miss Frankie Bearns, Guard—Miss Anna Cornelius, Sentinel—Mr. Kroog, Assistant Secretary—Fred J. Tousley, Deputy Marshall—Miss Sadie Walker, Past Chief Templar—Rev. R. H. Battey.

After Prof. Mayne had rendered the solo "Out on the Deep," the guests adjourned to the banquet hall, where an elegant spread had been prepared, and to which ample justice was done. Those who had the supper in charge received many compliments upon the excellence of the spread and the manner in which it was served, and it was universally pronounced one of the finest suppers ever given in Crookston.

After all had been feasted to their utmost capacity, the program was again taken up and a well-rendered quartet by Mrs. Slocum, Mrs. Adams, Mr. Sisson and Prof. Mayne preceded the speech-making.

Rev. Squier acted as toastmaster, and proved he was no novice in this roll.

"The Economics of the Liquor Traffic," was responded to by Mr. C. E. Sawyer, who discussed the question from a financial standpoint. The gentleman was too conservative in his estimate of the amount annually spent in this city for liquor. If he had said $150,000, instead of $50,000, he would have been nearer the mark.

"The Church vs the Saloon, Why?" was ably answered by Mr. R. G. Woodham, who dwelt particularly upon the closing of the saloons on Sunday and made an earnest plea for the enforcement of the law in regard to the selling of liquor on Sunday.

"Our Schools and the Temperance Reform" was responded to by Prof. C. M. Titus, who outlined the work being done in our schools in the interest of temperance, and showed that the work of instilling temperance principles into the minds of our children was one of the safeguards of our country. Mr. Titus, who has but recently come among us, is a very pleasant speaker to listen to, and made a good impression upon his hearers.

"The Home and the Temperance Question," brought to his feet Mr. A. P. Hanson, that gentlemen argued that the home should be the nursery of temperance, and that upon the parents devolved the responsibility of creating a temperance or anti-temperance spirit in their children. And it is not sufficient to teach the children to be temperate, but the most important point of all was to set the children a good example.

To R. H. Battey was assigned the the closing toast "Good Templary in Crookston," and that gentlemen briefly outlined the history of the temperance movement in this city, and the organization of the present lodge, which he emphatically declared has come to stay. There isn't a drone in the lodge, or any who were afraid to show their colors, and this good turnout to their first public meeting showed that the people were in sympathy with them and he felt more encouraged than at any time since the organization of the lodge. Mr. Battey is one of the most zealous of temperance workers and has given much valuable time to the cause.

The entertainment closed with a solo by Prof. Mayne [illegible] 'Twas Running [illegible] Prof. Mayne's well cultivated baritone voice, and his solos are always enjoyed.

THE COUNTY BOARD.

Proceedings of the Last Meeting of the County Commissioners.

At their October meeting the board of county commissioners allowed Judge Ives the sum of $15 per month for rent of room for court chambers.

The petition of Eric Raff and others relating to organizing a new school district from territory detached from district No. 70 was granted the new district to be No. 72.

The auditor was authorized to provide for the expense of sending Frank Warner from Crookston to Albert Lea.

School district No. 39 created from portions of No. 56 and No. 77.

The proposition of McKnight to furnish books and records for the county, defeated.

A new school district No. 212 was created consisting of sections 24, 25, 30, and 36 and half of 19 township 150 range 48.

Petition of Buchanan and others relating to organization of school district was laid over till next meeting. Petition of Peter Nelson rejected.

Application of Judge Benson for clerk hire laid on table, as was also a similar one from the clerk of the court.

The county auditor was instructed to hustle up the seed grain delinquents and prosecute all who fail to settle before November 15th.

The usual grist of bills were allowed and bill from Crookston Furniture Co., Adolph Bydal, Crookston Plumbing Co., John Ling and Brown, Treacy & Co. laid over.

The following resolution relating to the big ditch was passed unanimously:

Resolved: That whereas said matter having come on for a hearing at a special meeting of the board of county commissioners of said county held in and for said county at the court house in the City of Crookston in said county on the 27th day of October, A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m. in accordance with the notice heretofore had in said matter.

And it appearing to this board that notice of said hearing had been duly given, they proceeded to hear the same, and thereupon found that the viewers report herein was, and is made, and filed in accordance with the laws of said state in that behalf, and having found said proposed ditch to be of public utility, conducive to public health, and of public benefit and convenience and having found from the face of the report and the evidence before them, that the estimated benefits to be derived from the construction of said work is greater than its total cost, including damages awarded, and that such benefits exceed such costs and damages in a sufficient amount to warrant the construcion thereof; and there being no adverse appearance, and no objection having been made, filed or presented to the said board in any manner whatever, to the construction of said ditch or the granting of said petition, except the objection of R. J. Montague, as attorney for one Peter Truax, filed herein. Therefore, be it resolved by this board that said petition be and the same is hereby granted and all the proceedings heretofore had, herein be and the same are ratified and approved and it is therefore and hereby ordered by this board that the said proposed ditch be and the same is hereby located and established in accordance with and is specified in the viewers and surveyor's report herein.

Looks Like Murder.

On Sunday afternoon the body of an unknown man was found lying by a log in the woods, on the point at East Grand Forks. A revolver lying near the left hand and a bullet hole through the head of the corpse seemed to indicate suicide. The coroner was summoned and on Monday morning an inquest was held and the facts elicited seemed to plainly indicate that a foul murder had been committed and the verdict was to that effect. The man was a stranger and not a scrap was found to identify him. He had a tussock containing wearing apparel and a Swedish testament, and a bottle of alcohol was found near the remains. Coroner Shepard says he has seen the man in Crookston once, but does not know who he was. It is said that he was seen in the woods with two men on Saturday near the spot where the body was found. The remains were buried on Tuesday.

RESULTS OF ENVIRONMENT.

How a Philosophical Discourse Was Born of the Timidity of a Backwoods Couple.

It did not take a close observer to see that they were from the country. His tall and lean figure was adorned with an ill fitting suit of clothes, and his large, clumsy boots were still covered with the dust of country roads—a sight so keenly appreciated by the courteous bunko steerer.

She had rosy cheeks and was plump of figure. Had she worn other than a red dress and not an old fashioned bonnet with green ribbons, she might have been termed real pretty.

They stood in front of the Astor House looking about them in a dazed sort of way. Evidently their desire was to cross the street, but the long line of trucks and wagons, the cable cars with their incessant clanging and the noise generally caused them to hesitate.

Presently she clutched him by the arm and anxiously, even nervously, looked into his face.

"Mercy, John, let's go back ter hum. This noise is too much."

"Yer right," replied John. "Can't stand it myself."

She clutched his arm, and with hurried steps they proceeded down Barclay street.

A party of gentlemen on the steps of the Astor House had been watching the couple and overheard the remarks passed between them.

"That shows you what effect environment has upon people," said one philosophically. "They were brought up in the country, where probably no murmur of the business and commercial world ever found its way. To them the lazy wind sighing among the branches of the trees, the singing of the birds and the running waters of the brook form an important part of their daily life. They would be unhappy, even in the grandest palace, without this simple yet beautiful music of nature.

"Yet how different it is with me, add undoubtedly with you all! I tire of the country in a few days. To me the scene before us now is as inspiring and beautiful as any I ever saw elsewhere. The rumbling of the vehicles over the pavement, the clanging of the bells, the hissing of steam, the hurrying feet and the unceasing noise of bustle and business all combine to make one grand symphony that my ears never tire of hearing. I can work and think the better for it, but were I banished to some rustic scene work would cease, inspiration would leave me, and I would even be unhappy, longing for the busy environments of a city like New York.

"As it is with individuals, so it is with nations, with kingdoms, empires and republics. Their characters, their traits and their nationalities can all be traced to their surroundings, and I believe there is nothing in what we call human nature that is not a result of environment. Change the universe, the customs and manner of living, and, mark my word, you change human nature."

The philosophical gentleman looked proudly at his listeners, and with the bow of an orator retiring from the platform he sauntered into the lobby of the Astor House.—New York Herald.

A Genuine Philanthropist.

One of New York's philanthropic merchants spends thousands of dollars each year in aiding the poor, but none of his beneficiaries ever gets a cent in cash. His idea is that money giving demoralizes the recipient. He will buy groceries and pay rent for a distressed family and secure employment for the wage earners. Once they are at work he tells them that he considers it a moral obligation for them to refund, at any convenient season, the sum he has expended. If they do, he regards the case as a triumph of self respect. If they don't, he finds some excuse for them in his own mind and keeps right on at his self appointed task. Last winter he hired a hall in the Hebrew district down town, engaged a competent teacher and provided a number of Jewish girls with free instructions. No proselyting was attempted. Indeed not a word was said about religion. The girls became greatly interested, and their brothers begged for and obtained admittance. Similar classes are to be established this winter. The merchant allows himself an income of $3,000 per year. All the rest of the money he makes is devoted to the aid of others.—New York Sun.

Tricoupis and His Dog.

M. Tricoupis, who may be regarded as the foremost statesmen in King George's dominions, and who has repeatedly held the office of premier, is distinguished for the store set by him on canine friendship. One day when he was crossing from the Piræus to Constantinople on board an English steamer, his dog fell overboard. Tricoupis, who was not in office at the time and a stranger to the captain, entreated the latter to stop the vessel in order that he might rescue the hound.

"Impossible!" replied the Englishman. "My orders are very strict. I dare not stop, even were it a man instead of a dog drowning."

"Good!" laconically answered the Greek, and at the same time he sprang over the ship's side and swam toward his dog, although sharks abound in those waters. The sequel may be guessed. The English captain could not resist such a spectacle of pluck, and in spite of his strict orders to the contrary he stopped the ship and saved both man and dog.—New York Tribune.

OUT OF THE JAWS OF DEATH

CHAPTER III.

A STRANGE VOICE.

There was no one in the bar of the Joy, but I heard the low murmur of voices in the room beyond; so, my courage holding out, I went behind the bar counter, right up to the open door, and looked in. The shutters were still closed, but by the light that came in through the bar windows I saw Drigo and Putty sitting face to face at the dirty table, with pipes in their mouths and a can of drink between them, playing cards. The air was thick with smoke, but it was clear enough that no one, dead or alive, was in the room but those two.

Without looking at me Putty, sorting his cards, asked me what I wanted, embellishing the question with a few foul words. His calmness astonished me.

"I want to see the fair man," said I suddenly.

"Then you'll have to wait till he comes back."

"He ain't gone out, and you know it. I ain't took my eyes off the door since he came in this morning at half past 2."

"Oh, very well. If he isn't gone out you'd better look about here and find him. Two for his bloomin nob," he added, addressing Drigo as he turned up a card.

On the ground floor there were but those two rooms—the bar and the parlor. To find Taras I must look in the rooms above. My retreat would be cut off if I went up stairs, and if Taras was murdered and lying there I knew well enough that I should never be allowed to tell the tale. But I took Putty at his word without hesitation, and prepared for the worst made my way down the side passage to the stairs, and after assuring myself that the cupboard under the stairs was empty, save for a little coal piled in one corner, and that the passage itself contained nothing, I went up to the story above with a faltering step, quaking with the double terror of finding Taras dead and of hearing the stairs behind me creak under the pursuing feet of his murderers. I passed from room to room, laying my hand against the wall for support, my heart ceasing to beat whenever a rotten board creaked under my foot.

The three rooms that composed the flat were absolutely empty; there was nothing above but the cockloft. To reach that I had to ascend a ladder and creep through the trapdoor. But I did it, though I expected never to come down again.

The loft was empty and thick with the unstirred dust of years. I descended the ladder and went down stairs, too bewildered by this mystery to reason upon it. The two men were still playing in the den behind the bar; they had not troubled themselves to follow me.

"Well, ha' you found him?" Putty called out, hearing my step.

"He ain't there," I answered stupidly.

"Preaps he's made o' glass, as you didn't see him along of his friends and can't see him nowheres about the house."

"I wouldn't give him up," sneered Drigo. "Come and sit down with us till he comes back."

"Oh, if you're a-goin to stay, you ken give the bar a bit of a clean up. There's all them pots"— Putty broke off short as if he had received some silent admonition from Drigo.

I went behind the counter and began to put it in order mechanically, for my thoughts were now occupied in solving the mystery of this disappearance. I asked myself if at any time during my watch I had given away to fatigue and dozed. No; I had sat down only for a few minutes, and certainly I had not lost consciousness then. I felt that it was an impossibility for Taras to have passed me without my perceiving him. Had they thrown his body in the river? No! In the silence of the night I should have heard the door in Ferryboat alley open a second time as I had heard it the first, nor could a heavy body have been carried down the alley without the scuffling of feet being audible. Besides, the risk was one which Putty, I knew, had not the courage to run. And their composure now was not consistent with their having done a dangerous deed, though Drigo might very well have counseled Putty to assume indifference in order to avert suspicion which might have led me to communicate with the police.

The most reasonable conjecture I could form was that Taras had actually left the Joy with his friends and had turned down to the water instead of accompanying them into Sweet Apple lane. He might have ordered the waterman to return, and so got away. If this were really the case, he might return as Drigo had intended—not that his word was to be taken in earnest; his whole tone was ironical and indicative of double meaning. But the hope that Taras still lived and might return put new life into me, and I went about my work behind the bar with such alacrity that I think the men inside conceived I was trying to make amends for my misbehavior. At any rate, after a long silence, in which they cast furtive glances at me every now and then, their suspicion relaxed, and they entered heartily into a dispute over some trick which one had played with the cards while the other was not watching, and this led to their devoting more attention to their game.

I had a row of washed glasses on the bar and was standing in front of the parlor door wiping them when my sense of hearing gradually took recognition of a sound which did not come from the men at my back. The silence of my occupation allowed me to listen and yet continue working. The sound was very faint. Its regularity attracted my attention. One does not notice the single chirp of a sparrow, but if the chirping is continued persistently for any length of time it never fails to excite attention. It was just the same with this sound, which I noticed after awhile occurred in this way, with regular intervals between:

"Tap, tap, tap—tap, tap—tap, tap—tap, tap—tap, tap—tap," and so on over and over again.

I looked round the bar for an explanation. I saw no vibrating bottle on the shelves such as the sound seemed to indicate. There was no wind to shake the yellow curtain against the front window. It seemed to come from the old disused beer engine before me, and I touched one of the handles to see if it was loose. The rattle it made under my hand was answered almost immediately by a similar rattle, and then the engine itself seemed to be whispering with a human voice.

The glass nearly slipped from my hand, but I recovered my presence of mind in an instant and went on polishing the glasses till a new dispute arose within over a false cut. Then I touched the handle again and again the rattle was echoed by another, and as I strained my ears I heard the whispering sound once more. The engine was articulating words, but so faintly that I caught but the last three, and they were:

"——for God's sake!"

My hair seemed to crisp up on my head as I listened. The voice was awful to my ignorant, superstitious mind. I thought the dead was speaking to me. Then on a sudden my reason suggested a natural explanation of the mystery—the voice came through the pipes from the cellar.

I had not before thought of the cellar, for the simple reason that I had forgotten its existence. Five years before it had been closed, for a motive which I shall presently explain, and since that time no one had entered it. The beer was no longer drawn from the cellar, but from the casks set up behind the bar, and the trap between the entrance and the bar, through which the casks used to be let down into the cellar, had been screwed down and formed part of the floor over which we walked daily.

Now I recollected that the carpenter had been in the Joy the day before and had doubtless withdrawn the screws and made the flap practicable for descent. Even now, as I glanced at the floor, I failed to see any difference in its appearance or any sign of the trap having been moved. The sand with which the floor was strewn had been carefully rubbed into the cracks so as to completely conceal the opening. But Taras was down there—I felt sure of that—and, as if to confirm it, the tapping recommenced.

"Tap, tap, tap—tap, tap—tap—tap, tap, tap—tap, tap—tap."

But now the sounds seems to my excited imagination terribly loud, causing every muscle in my body to contract with the dread of being heard by Putty or the quicker witted Drigo. What signal could I make to let Taras know that I had heard him and that he was to cease tapping the pipe? It occurred to me that if I could hear his voice through the pipe he could hear mine, but I dared not approach my lips to the engine, and still less answer the whisper, for the machine was in full view of the men in the parlor. The tapping continued—still more audibly it seemed to me. I must stop it, even if I killed every hope I had raised, by replying to his signal with the handle. Going close to the engine and laying my hand on the handle to pull it down and open the valves, if it would, I said in a loud voice:

"I'm done now, bloke, and I'm a-goin. Will you give me something for a bit of grub? I ain't eat nothin today."

He had some coppers on the table that were won from Drigo, and he threw a few on the floor with some brutal words. I picked them up without a reply, but as I turned to go I had the gumption to say in a moody tone:

"I shall kum after dinner and see if he's back—that fellow with the beard. He's took my fancy awful."

I went out with the fierce determination to keep the spirit of that promise. I would see Taras, but by means they little dreamed of for all their villainous craft.

CHAPTER IV.

THE ESCAPE.

I knew more about the Mariner's Joy than was known to Putty. Years before he took the house I earned my living there, doing a drudge's work and running on errands when I was a mere child. Fly Jigger had it then; that was before improvements ruined the neighborhood. The houses in Sweet Apple lane, now mostly untenanted, were crowded with tenants, and the Joy was a favorite "house of call" for all sorts of bad characters who lived there, and for the men employed in Baxter's wharf, which was then one of the busiest stores for dry salting on this side of the river.

Fly Jigger did well by legitimate trade, but he made still more money by dishonest means and principally by plundering Baxter's wharf. For this purpose he and his crew had made a passage under the foreshore, opening at one end into the cellar of the Joy and at the other end into the cellar of the wharf. This passage was called the tub run, because, to prevent the sides falling in, it was lined with casks with their heads removed and set end to end. As soon as the house was closed at night Fly Jigger and his mates would set to work, going through the tub run into Baxter's wharf and returning with goods from the storerooms. I have seen them bring out as many as 50 hams in a night.

The secret was never found out, but when the trade went from Baxter's and the wharf was cleared out and closed the run was no longer of any service. The wharf watchman, who had been a party to these robberies, took care to close and conceal the cellar opening, and Fly Jigger masked the opening on his side with a flagstone and a barrow load of rubbish, which, trodden down, presented no difference from the rest of the unpaved floor. Previous to that, to keep the brewers out of the cellar, he had removed the beer barrels, which thenceforth he kept set up behind the bar, saying that it was more fair and squarelike for the customers to see their beer drawn from the wood than through the engine from the deuce knows where.

The closing of Baxter's wharf was a sad blow to him, but a worse came soon after; for being of a too active disposition he took to smuggling tobacco and rum from incoming ships, and being discovered by the excise was sent to prison, and the Joy lost its license. The brewers obtained a fresh license to sell beer and put Putty in to manage the house. When he came the spring tides had flooded the cellar, and seeing that it was of no use he had the trap screwed down to save the expense of putting new hinges on it. Since then, as I have said, no one had ever gone down into the cellar.

With these recollections crowding my mind and the means they suggested of delivering Taras filling my heart with a wild delight, I hurried down Ferryboat alley, and after looking about carefully to make sure that no one was observing me I wedged myself through the ventilator hole and dropped into the wharf cellar. I knew exactly where the opening [illegible] taken part myself in [illegible] raiding expeditions, and dropping [illegible] [illegible] the hole; there was not enough light to see it, but I could trace the outline plainly enough with my fingers.

But how was I to raise the heavy flag? There was no ring or anything to catch hold of, and I knew that if I worked away the rubbish sufficiently to get my hands underneath I should still be unable to lift it. I must have something to pry it up with. A bar of iron would do. It struck me that I might find what I needed among the old iron in Johnson's yard. If I had thought of that beforehand, I might have brought it in with me, but I was too impatient of delay, too eager to begin, to waste time in regrets.

Clambering up to the ventilator, I looked out. Some boys were playing on the shore. I dared not show myself while they were there. It seemed to me that they would never weary of throwing stones into the water, but at length they gave it up and went away. Then I slipped out and, pretending to be looking for odds and ends on the shore, made my way up to Johnson's yard and got in through a gap in the paling. It didn't take long to find what I wanted—a broken stoking iron looked to me just the thing. Asking myself if there was anything else I should need, it occurred to me that a candle would be necessary, the cellar of the Joy being even darker than the wharf cellar. The gates of the yard opened into Sweet Apple lane, and as they closed imperfectly I was just able to squeeze through—thanks to being a nipper.

When I had bought a halfpenny candle and a box of matches out of the money given me by Putty, the trembling of my knees and a feeling of faintness reminded me that I had eaten nothing all day, so I bought a small loaf and some cold fish and treated myself to a cup of coffee with my last halfpenny. The hot coffee set me up wonderfully, and with revived energy I returned to the yard and, hiding the bar under my dress, sneaked back to the stairs. Then after another cautious look around, finding the coast clear, I slipped the stoking iron through the ventilator and followed it almost as swiftly.

It was a harder job than I expected to move the flagstone and get it out of the way. But I stuck to it, with the perspiration running down my face, until the sensation of sickness seizing me again, I had to give over for a time till I had eaten my loaf and regained strength. At length, having worked the stone aside, about a foot out of its place, I knelt down to feel if the opening was large enough for me to pass through (for I had not lit the candle to do this work), and then to my dismay I discovered that the too careful watchman had filled the hole with rubbish. Sinking down on the ground, I could have cried with the mingled feelings of rage and disappointment, but thinking of Taras' desperation overcame these sentiments, and springing up on my knees I tore at the rubbish with my hands vehemently, like a dog in a warren, determined to reach Taras, though I had to dig my way to him through the solid earth.

Happily the rubbish was loose and yielded readily to my hands, and still more happily there were not above four or five feet of it, or I might never have got down to the tub run with all my determination. An empty box thrown down had got jammed in the hole about a third of the way down, and below that the space was empty. Nevertheless it took me many hours to get the rubbish out, having nothing to dig with but my hands and nothing but my apron to carry it up in when I got down a certain distance, and then the box, which at first sight seemed to have been set there by the hand of Providence, appeared after awhile to have been wedged in by my worst enemy, for it defied all my efforts to loosen it, until my patience and strength were well nigh exhausted, and then I had to get to the top and drag it out, which was even more difficult. Ten o'clock struck before this task was accomplished.

I had been compelled to light the candle to get the box out, and there was now not more than an inch left.

I blew out the light and put the end in my pocket. I could feel my way along the tub run, and the light would be needful when I got into the cellar of the Joy. The were iron staples in the side of the shaft placed at intervals to serve as steps. The descent was easy enough, but at the bottom a fresh obstacle presented itself. I was standing in water! If the tide was up, it would be impossible to get through the run, that part of the shore being completely under water at the flood.

Dropping on my knees, I crawled forward, entering the first cask. The thick ooze was high over my wrists, but still if they were all fairly on the same level the passage was yet sufficiently open. The ooze might simply be the earth that had silted through in the course of years left in its present condition by a receding tide. But what if it was wet with the rising tide? This question made me pause despite my impatient desire to go on. If the tide rose before I could get Taras out of the cellar, all escape would be impossible, and hemmed in we should both be at the mercy of Drigo and Putty. On the other hand, if I waited until the tide had risen and fallen again, it might be too late to save Taras.

I backed out of the run, clambered into the cellar and raising myself into the casement of the ventilator looked out. The water was certainly high, but whether it was rising or falling I could not tell. As I looked out a clock chimed the half hour past 10. At 11 the Joy would be closed. Then anything might happen to Taras. One thing was tolerably evident—the two men would go down into the cellar, if only to see if Taras was still alive. But they might have, and probably had, made arrangements with the other man to take him away from the Joy, in which case, if I waited till the tide had risen and fallen, I should find the cellar empty when I reached it.

This reflection and a belief that the tide was yet some distance below high water mark decided me to make the attempt at once and run the risk of being imprisoned by the tide. "At any rate," I said to myself, "I shall be a prisoner with him."

Without another moment's hesitation I dropped down into the run, put my matches and candle end in a part of my dress where they were least likely to get wetted, and then crawled along the run through the slush, which to my satisfaction I found came nowhere above my elbows. When I reached the farther end, I rose to my feet, and finding the irons in the wall mounted up by them till my head struck the flagstone above, and there, knowing that I should need all my strength, I paused for a minute to get breath. Then bending my head, I rose another step, and setting my shoulders against the [illegible] every muscle [illegible] my body and pushing [illegible] the stone [illegible]

[illegible] upon my shoulders, scarcely able to breathe and feeling as if my poor chest bones would be crushed in. I dared not cry for help, lest my voice should be heard by the men above, and I could only hang there gasping for breath and despairing of release. Indeed I think I must soon have fainted under the dreadful pressure, but that Taras, having listened to these inexplicable sounds in the ground in passive perplexity for some time, hearing the faint moan that escaped me when I felt that it was all over with me, groped forward, and finding the opening set his foot under the stone and thrust it right back with one strong effort.

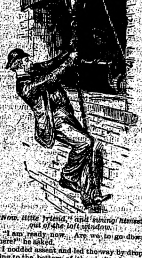
My sense of relief was indescribable. In a moment I had scrambled onto the floor of the cellar. I struck a match, and raising it my eager eyes fell upon the great figure and noble face of Taras. He did not recognize me at first, and the look of astonishment in his countenance was curious to see. And no wonder. From head to foot I was drabbled and daubed with black ooze and dirt. I could have looked like nothing human rising out of the earth and thus disfigured. But he knew me by the time I had lit the candle. He murmured some unintelligible words of gratitude, and his eyes were suffused with the tears that sprung from his sensitive heart.

"No time for jawin about that," said I, interrupting him. "We've got to get out of this afore Putty comes down and the tide comes up."

He turned round and showed me that his hands were tied behind him. The hemp was black with the dried blood from his wrists. The sight of it filled me with rage against the villains who had used him so barbarously.

"There's a knife in my waistcoat pocket," he said.

I found it and cut the knotted rope, but it was some time before he could use his numbed hands. At length life returned to them. And all the time we stood there I knew that the water might be rising in the run to prevent our escape, yet I was unconscious of alarm or fear or even of impatience. I was with him.



"Now, little friend," and swung himself out of the loft window.

"I am ready now. Are we to go down there?" he asked.

I nodded assent and led the way by dropping to the bottom of the shaft. I stood aside, and he dropped down also. Then I dived into the run, holding the light up to the top that he might see. The ooze was no higher, and we got through just as the candle end gave out, but he had to squeeze to get his broad shoulders through the ends of the casks. I sprang up the hole by the irons and at the top struck matches while he mounted.

We were safe, but to guard against pursuit I dropped the box down and Taras replaced the stone, moving it as if it were no more than a piece of board. Then I led him by the arm to the casement, and striking another match showed him the hole by which we were to get out, telling him he must pull out the remaining bars.

"Dear little friend," said he, passing his hand round the casement with a laugh, "I doubt if I could get my big head through there."

This was true, and the unforeseen difficulty dismayed me for a time. All the doors opening on to Sweet Apple lane and the river were padlocked on the outside. We were prisoners. Suddenly the means of escape came into my mind, and again taking his arm I led him up through the empty storerooms into the one at the very top, where I lodged. The door there was only bolted on the inside. I opened it, still holding his arm, for if in the dark he had taken a step forward it would have been his last.

"What is in there?" he asked, looking into the obscurity as I pushed the door back.

"Nothing is out there 'cept the open air and the river down below."

"Do you expect me to dive from here?" he asked in a tone of amusement.

"No. Do you think I want you to kill yourself? I ain't a fool. Wait a bit," said I, striking my last match. I held it up when it flamed and showed him the crane fitted in the doorway, the windlass inside and the chain hooked against the wall, telling him how I had seen great bales raised from below by this apparatus.

"If you can hold onto the chain, I'll lower you down," said I. "You can put your feet on them hook things."

"But how will you get out?" he asked.

"By the hole in the cellar. It ain't too narrer for me."

He agreed to this, saying he would wait for me below, and then, as noiselessly as we could, we pushed out the crane, got the chain down and made arrangements for the descent, his eyes becoming used to the darkness, which at first was impenetrable to them. I could see still more clearly, being used to the place and its darkness, and his silhouette stood out distinctly against the gray sky as I held tight on to the winch. I could see him quite plainly when he said, "Now, little friend," and swung himself out from the loft door on the chain.

I was more careful than if my own life had depended on the descent, and I turned the handle steadily and yet as quickly as I dared. I felt at ease until his head and shoulders disappeared, but then a horrible dread that he might slip from the chain possessed me as I thought of him swinging out of sight a hundred feet and more above the stone quay below, and fervent gratitude filled my heart when there ceased to be any pressure on the handle and a low whistle from below reached my ears.

And now, not waiting to windlass the chain or even to close the loft door, I sped down [illegible] that I might rejoin him. At the foot of the cellar stairs my foot struck [illegible] the box I had [illegible]

CONGRESS ADJOURNS.

WORK OF THE EXTRA SESSION HAS BEEN CONCLUDED.

Filibustering Tactics In the Senate Continued Until the Last Minute, the Result Being the Defeat of the Urgent Deficiency Bill In Conference—Senate Amendments to the Silver Repeal Bill Concurred In by the House.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—The extraordinary session of the Fifty-third congress, after being in session 87 days and three hours adjourned without day. A wrangle between the house and senate over an appropriation to pay the senate session employes for work done during the recess of the Fifty-first congress in 1890, caused the failure of the general deficiency bill and the bill for the payment of clerks and employes during the adjournment between now and the regular session, Dec. 4. The senate was determined that this appropriation should be agreed to by the house with the alternative of sacrificing the deficiency bill, and Senator Cockrell, chairman of the appropriations committee, sent word that would be agreed to by the senate until the house accepted this amendment which had been tacked on the deficiency bill. The final adjournment resolution had been passed and in this way the senate expected to force the house to yield. To make assurance doubly sure, the senate also placed the same amendment on the bill providing pay for session employes and clerks to members during the recess, and sent word that if their amendment was agreed to the deficiency bill would be released from conference where it was being held as if in chancery by the senate. Inasmuch as every member of the house was personally interested in the resolution to keep his clerk on the pay roll during recess they thought that they but the plan was defeated by a filibuster inaugurated by Mr. Hutchinson of Texas. He was opposed to the original resolution to pay the employes of congress during the recess, but was easily outgeneraled by the parliamentarians who opposed him. When the resolution came back to the house, however, with the senate amendment on as a rider, it was about 3 o'clock. Mr. Hutchinson saw that if he could hold the house at bay for the space of but a few minutes the adjournment would give him victory. The senate was immediately notified of the situation in the house and a resolution was hurriedly passed extending the time of adjournment to 4:30, but the effect came too late. Mr. Hutchinson, with Kilgore on his left and Boen, the Minnesota Populist, on his right, held his position until 3 o'clock, when the house, by its own previous action, was declared by Speaker Crisp adjourned sine die.

GREAT FIGHT OVER.

The House Concurs in Senate Amendments to the Silver Bill.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—The great financial fight of the extraordinary session of the Fifty-third congress is over. At 2:50 p. m. the house, by a vote of 191 yeas to 94 nays, concurred in the senate amendments, and the repeal bill goes to the president for his approval.

The Bill Signed.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—At 4:20 p. m. the repeal bill was handed to President Cleveland. There were present with him Secretary Carlisle, Attorney General Olney and Private Secretary Thurber. The president read the bill aloud and at 4:25 signed it.

FIRED ON THE FLAG.

The Stars and Stripes Insulted by Honduras Officers.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—The Herald's La Libertad, Honduras, special says: Honduras fired upon the American flag Monday morning. By the alleged orders of President Vasquez and by the express command of the commissioner of the port of Amalia several shots were fired after the Pacific Mail steamer Costa Rica, flying the stars and stripes, as she steamed away, because she refused to surrender one of her passengers to the Honduras government. United States Minister Baker was on board the Costa Rica at the time. The passenger about whom the trouble arose is P. Bonilla, who recently led the revolution in Honduras, but was defeated by General Vasquez.

Carlisle in New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—Mr. Carlisle, secretary of the treasury arrived here during the morning. To a reporter Mr. Carlisle said that he was here on official business. He declined to say anything in relation to the financial and business situation or express any opinion as to the outlook. As to the condition of the the treasury, etc., he would say nothing, as he did not consider it wise or proper to express the opinion of the government through the newspapers.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Iowa, Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay, and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

HEART DISEASE 20 YEARS.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

DEAR SIRS: For 20 years I was troubled with heart disease. Would frequently have falling spells and smothering at night. Had to sit up or get out of bed to breathe. Had pain in my left side and back most of the time; at last I became dropsical. I was very nervous and nearly worn out. The least excitement would cause me to faint. I was also much troubled with fluttering. For the last fifteen years I could not sleep on my left side or back until began taking your New Heart Cure. I had not taken it very long until I felt much better, and I can now sleep on either side or back without the least discomfort. I have no pain, smothering, dropsy, no wind on stomach or other disagreeable symptoms. I am able to do all my own housework without any trouble and consider myself cured.

Elkhart, Ind., 1888. MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

It is now four years since I have taken any medicine. Am in better health than I have been in 40 years. I honestly believe that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure saved my life and made me a well woman. I am now 62 years of age, and am able to do a good day's work.

May 29th, 1892. MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

FOR WOMEN AND HOME.

This well-known journal, a union of four leading women's papers, has won its fame because it deals with what really interests the women of America. Fashions from the standpoint of good taste and economy. Fiction of a pure and helpful kind. Music and Art suitable for non-professional tastes. Household hints written by practical women. Suggestions and aids for self-supporting women. It is a paper for women, by women, and its writers are among the most noted authors. Every line is original, every engraving a gem.

It is a paper of to-day without espousing the great questions of religion, politics and temperance, it gives all the news regarding them. It is universally quoted by the press because its views and articles are bright and unique. Send to Springfield, Ohio, for a sample copy. Formerly $1.00, it is now but 50 cents a year. THE FUTURE OF WHEAT.

EVERY fall, for the past ten years there has been something wrong with wheat, and the farmer has been comforted and consoled with the statement that "next year the surplus will have been reduced to that extent that wheat will command a good paying price." And in that faith he has sowed, and harvested, and threshed, only to find when he comes to market the wheat that something is wrong—wheat is not bringing a living price, "but next year it will be all right." History repeats itself this fall, and while the prospects seem to favor the old cry as to next year being all right, who can tell whether it will or not? The theory of overproduction is a disputed one but the fact remains that something is wrong whatever the cause, and seems to justify the theory that there is no money in wheat as a single crop. While wheat this fall will scarcely pay the cost of production, barley, (good barley) brings a good price. Potatoes are away up and oats, while they will not bring a very extraordinary price this fall are so scarce that next spring they will be gilt-edged. The history of every wheat producing country in the world seems to bear out the theory that wheat raising alone is not a profitable business for sooner or later the wheat raiser is forced to change to diversified farming or go broke, and if the experience of the past is any guide we are forced to the inevitable conclusion that the future of wheat is not a very bright one. It is no doubt true that wheat will be very much higher at some time in the future, but when? Supposing wheat should go to one dollar next fall how long would it be before we should again see an over production that would sink it to its present level and again bring distress to the farmer whose sole dependence is wheat? The farmer who is wise will not in the future put all of his eggs in one basket but he will diversify.

THE Duluth-Tribune's Sunday issue was a big boom edition that was a credit alike to the city and the paper.

OUR friend McLean is dead right when he says: "You can't have peace and prosperity and a democratic administration all at the same time!"

GOV. NELSON has named Thursday, November 30th, as Thanksgiving Day, and recommends that all who are well off remember their less fortunate neighbors.

THE farmers were confidently promised a jump of ten cents per bushel immediately on the repeal of the silver act. Well, the repeal bill passed all right enough but wheat? Oh, that took a three cent drop immediately! If that fact does not show that the Sherman law was not the cause of the business depression all over the country will some of our good democratic friends tell us what it does show?

BEFORE the election last fall the people were promised dollar wheat and "good old democratic times again." Well, by the help of our populist friends, Grover was elected and the democrats took full control, but we haven't seen the dollar wheat, and if these be "good old democratic times" the people are heartily disgusted with 'em. What can't be cured must be endured for three years at least, but we venture the assertion that the people will not be fooled again very soon.

IT is said that a large vein of coal has been discovered near Duluth. Coal has been found in various localities in this state and North Dakota and is supposed to exist in sufficient quantities to supply the needs of the northwest. Why are not these mines developed? The saving in freights alone would do more to "bust the coal combine" than all the legislation you could get in years or all the committees that Donnelly could ever get, and would cost no more. Competition will do more to regulate trade than legislation every time. Let our resources be fully developed and Minnesota will then be prepared to hold her own with the best of 'em.

AFTER a wrangle of some weeks duration congress has at last adjourned and the country breathes free. They did very well by passing the repeal bill but if they had passed a resolution not to meddle with the tariff they would have done more to restore confidence and business activity than they did do. And we do not expect to see confidence fully restored until some such thing does transpire. The attitude of the democratic platform on the tariff cuts more of a figure in this matter than any other one thing.

THE long talked of bridge across the canal between Duluth and Superior will at last be built, all the differences having been settled. This is a good thing—for Superior.

A. S. McMillan has moved the Verndale Journal to Wadena and the Verndale peoole will find out what they have lost later. Mac knows how to get out a good paper and Verndale should never have forced him to make this move.

IT is said that a special guard has been detailed to watch over the president on account of threats made by some crank against his life. This may seem foolish to some but in the light of past events it is all right and the guard should shoot down the first suspicious looking character that lifts a hand.

THE St. Paul Globe is howling for the resignation of Mayor Wright, because the mayor can't personally be at every one of St. Paul's 400 saloons day and night to prevent somebody being killed, or have a policeman there with a force of about one-half as many policemen as saloons. The Globe is carrying its polical warfare from the sublime to the ridiculous.

Bro. Stevens of the Warren Register, has been writing up his experience on the western coast for the benefit of his readers, and the summary of the articles is to the effect that the average of humanity can do better in the Red River valley than any place he saw out there. He says that times are harder out there than here, and the prospects are that they will continue so for a longer period than they will here, for that country has been boomed 'way beyond what it will legitimately stand.

THE past week has demonstrated the fact that there is some money in the country yet, judging from our subscription receipts. While they have been tolerably fair they have not been as good as they should be or would if wheat was a better price. While we need our money this fall exceedingly, we do not expect a farmer to sell his wheat at 48 or 50 cents to pay us, but we are willing to allow him a fair price for it so that he can settle with us this fall, and to that end we will make the following proposition: To all whose subscription is three years or more in arrears we will give 65 cents per bushel for wheat that will grade No. 1 hard at the Valley Roller Mills for payment in full and one year in advance. This offer, of course, will not entitle any one to any other premium that we offer and is made only as an inducement for settlement this fall. It will hold good through November. Here is a chance, friends, to help us and also to help yourselves. In some cases we shall be obliged to place our past due subscription accounts in the hands of the United States Commissioner for collection if prompt attention is not given to this matter.

The Centre of the World.

"The State?" said Louis the Fourteenth; "It is I." In his own view, this magnificent king was the center of the world. To this day, Paris is the "hub of the universe" to the Frenchman, while in the Western Hemisphere, Boston claims that title, so far as intellectual life and culture are concerned. In business the rivalry seems to be between New York and Chicago, though from May to November of this year the latter claimed the coveted title by posession of the World's Fair. Leaving these rivalries of cities, which are often as vainglorious as Louis, "The State? It is I," let us see where the center of the Western World is at present. The States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, and South Dakota, contain 15,000,000 people. This area feeds the rest of the continent. It may say—"The State? It is I." Linking together all the more important towns of these ten states, and giving convenient access to all great trade centers, is the 7,000 miles of railroad known as the Burlington Route. For tickets, maps, etc., apply to any railroad ticket agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

The best plaster.—Dampen a piece of flannel with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bind it over the seat of pain. It is better than any plaster. When the lungs are sore such an application on the chest and another between the shoulder blades will often prevent pneumonia. There is nothing so good for a lame back or a pain in the side. A sore throat can nearly always be cured in one night by applying a flannel bandage dampened with Pain Balm. [illegible]

DUNN'S BUDGET.

Interesting News and Gossip from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, November 6.—Now that we have repeal, we should enter upon an era of prosperity. About the tariff? Oh, that is an after consideration. The people of this country will get enough of tariff legislation before this congress is over. I believe that the Democratic victory, and the fear of hard times in consequence of the great tariff reductions which were promised, had more to do with the hard times than ever the Sherman law could by any means be responsible for. Now that repeal has been accomplished it would not be strange if there should be an agitation all over the country again to have something done for silver. In fact Senator Voorhees chairman of the Senate finance committee has promised it. The trouble was that the country made a mistake when it tried the Bland law in 1878. If free coinage had been adopted then, the experiment would have proved a failure long ago or it would have been found a blessing. I believe if it were not for the Democratic tariff plan that we would enter upon an era of prosperity. I do not believe that the Sherman law was of any benefit to the people. I think it has been charged with much more than its share of the present evils the country has been undergoing. But upon the broad principles of finance it is a pretty sure thing that this country cannot carry all the silver that is being promised, carry it as money, while all other great leading, civilized nations of the world do not recognize it. The trouble that this country is going to encounter now is the drain of its gold to buy foreign goods as soon as the tariff bars are let down. We will have a balance of trade against us, and we cannot keep our gold in this country. The people must go through all this before they learn that free trade or tariff for revenue only, or the what not, that the Democratic majority will finally pass means disaster to this country.

A Washington paper had a paragraph the other day to the effect that the Representative from the first district was a candidate for United States Senator to succeed Washburn. My own comment is that when a State has a creditable Representative in either House, well placed upon committees where he can do the State some service, it is poor policy to change him. There are columns of reasons for this. But as to Senator Washburn, it is only necessary to say that he is now on the committees of commerce, post offices and post roads, and agriculture and forestry. He is on other committees, but these are the important committees for Minnesota. Commerce is especially vital and is of more importance to the state than any other in the Senate. It would be a long time before another Senator could be as well placed.

That brings me to another point. Suppose Minnesota had continued in the United States senate, that noble old war horse Alexander Ramsey. He would have been able to command anything, just as John Sherman and Senator Morrill are now able to do. He would have been a very active Senator even now. Minnesota retired William Windom when he was chairman of the appropriations committee. Others succeeded him on the committee, who were able to get a great deal for their States, notably Allison, of Iowa, who seem never to have asked anything in congress that was not turned over to him. Keep good men in the service if you want good service.

I notice that Archbishop Satolli, the Papal Legate is to occupy one of a block of Houses, which were built by Henry M. Rice and two other Senators many years ago when Mr Rice represented Minnesota in the United States senate. That was long ago. Rice was in the House as a delegate from Minnesota back in 1856 when the House had such a long contest to elect a speaker and Nathaniel P. Banks was finally chosen. John Sherman was a member of the fifty-first congress. Men do grow old in the public service in this country.

One of the good friends that Commissioner Lochren has in Washington is W. A. Croffut, who was a member of the First Minnesota, Judge Lochren's regiment. He has written several articles defending Commissioner Lochren. Nobody has said anything about the personal integrity of Judge Lochren, but his public acts have [illegible] blamable. If upon the advice and instruction of others, well, he should have resigned before he committed acts which were against his own judgment. I am told by friends of the Judge that he wishes he was back upon the bench in Hennepin county.

It is generally conceded by the thinking men of Washington that Archbishop Ireland, of Minnesota, is one of ablest men of this country to-day. He is regarded without a peer in the Catholic hierarchy.

A Texas man has introduced a bill to cut off the salaries of army and navy officers after they have retired from active service. This means that after a man has served his country for forty years that he is to be cut adrift to shift for himself. Republics, however, are not entirely ungrateful, and the Texas congressman will only make a little cheap buncombe for himself.

The Populists think they have nothing to do now but walk right into all the offices and the control of the government. They think that they will carry the next Presidential election. Peffer in the White House! Ye Gods!

There were no doubt some graveyards dug by action on the silver bill, but there would have been more if the bill had not passed. The repeal of the bill had to come sometime. I am informed that Clevleland would have kept congress in session until the close of his term in order to bring it about. And then he would have been elected to a third term in order to bring it about. For my own part I do not believe that the people after they have had specimens of Peffer, Kyle, Allen, Simpson and others will want many more of that stripe in in congress. The day of that kind of foolishness is not long.

There will no doubt be many changes in the South. There have been a large number of men who have kept themselves in congress by the bug-bear of Negro domination. They have frightened the voters each year into the belief that unless they are elected to congress the Republicans will establish Negro rule over them. That day has gone by and the Southern people have learned something.

Frogs Eat Wasps.

Some time ago I discovered accidentally that frogs are voracious eaters of wasps. I have in my garden a tank for watering, with an island of rockwork, which is a favorite haunt of the frogs. The wasps just now are carrying on a raid against my fruit, and when I wish to gratify at once my revenge and my frogs I catch a marauder between a post card and an inverted wine glass, carry him off to the tank, wet his wings to prevent his flying, and set him on the rockwork before the frogs.

After a moment's pause a frog advances, and in an instant the wasp has disappeared, drawn into the frog's mouth by a single dart of his long tongue. Occasionally the wasp reappears, wholly or partially, having made it unpleasant for the frog, but he is almost always swallowed in the end. Usually convulsive movements may be noticed in the frog's throat and body, as though the process of deglutition were not quite easy, but that they like the diet is evident from the fact that a single smallish frog has been known to take three wasps, one after another.

Indeed it is remarkable what very small frogs, quite infants, will swallow a wasp with avidity. This afternoon a tiny frog swallowed a full grown wasp, when a big relative went for him quite savagely, like a big schoolboy thrashing a small one for presuming to be helped before him.—R. E. Bartlett in London Spectator.

The World's Parliaments.

The British parliament compares favorably in size with those of other nations. With 670 members in the house of commons and over 558 in the upper house, it is far and away the largest in the world. France comes nearest with 584 in the chamber of deputies and 300 in the senate. Spain comes next with 431 in congress and 361 in the cortes. Then comes the Austrian reichsrath with 353 and 245 in the lower and upper houses respectively, followed by Germany with 397 in its reichstag and 58 in its bundesrath. The United States has 356 representatives in congress and 88 senators.—London Tit-Bits.

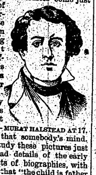
UNFAMILIAR FACES.

HOW CERTAIN WELL KNOWN PEOPLE LOOKED IN THEIR YOUTH.

Physiognomists Will Be Interested In These Pictures of Murat Halstead, Mrs. Cleveland, William L. Wilson and Miss Frances Willard Taken In Early Life.

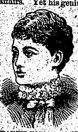
The interest that people manifest in the happenings of the childhood and youth of famous men and women is the same in kind, if not in degree, as that which leads to the treasuring in many an old fashioned bureau drawer of primitive daguerreotypes and old tintypes kept as mementos of vanished days. The photographer was not necessarily an artist then, and the pose of his subjects was frequently an awkward if not an ungainly one, but there is generally some one who, gazing on the well remembered lineaments, can see in the picture a beauty not patent to other eyes and who would not exchange the picture for the work of any artist of eminence depicting some other woman's child.

Out of just such treasuries come just such pictures of the people's darlings, or of those who have won eminence among them without evoking much affection—pictures hoarded from a time when their subjects were entirely somebody else's darlings and no thought of future distinction had crossed that somebody's mind. People like to study these pictures just as they like to read details of the early life of the subjects of biographies, with some latent idea that "the child is father of the man" and that in the youthful features, as in the early traits, they can discover the budding promise of future greatness.



MURAT HALSTEAD AT 17.

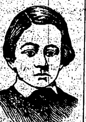
It is easier to discover this promise, however, after the subject of the picture or biography has become well known, for even the expert physiognomist, though he may detect the innate greatness in the youthful countenance, cannot be certain of the direction in which it will manifest itself in after years. Murat Halstead, the great journalist, for instance, judged by a picture of him taken during his early college days, should have been a poet rather than a man of affairs. Yet his genius did not manifest itself in that direction, if the popular notions about poets are correct ones. It may be that the fearlessness, earnestness, generosity and speculative thoughtfulness shown in the picture have been more happily applied in the career that has made him famous. It may be that he is a poet anyway. Who can tell?



FRANCES FOLSOM AT 17.

He has certainly left the impress of his genius on the journalism of his time, and mainly through the exercise of those very qualities. He was a farmer's son, and "work before play" was the watchword of his childhood and youth, as it has been of his mature years. He has had no time to woo the muses, however successful his courtship might have been. He might not have wooed them if he could.

A picture of Frances Folsom at 17, on the eve of graduation from Wells college, before the nation was aware of the prominence in store for her as the wife of its chief magistrate, before she was herself aware of it, is of especial interest in the light of recent events. The picture was taken five years before the famous wedding in the White House, and no one could then have foreseen the outcome of the next 12 years, within which she was to become twice mistress of the presidential mansion and twice a happy mother.



W. L. WILSON AT 9.

A picture of William L. Wilson of West Virginia at the age of 9 years should have been indicative of his future greatness, for he confesses that his earliest ambition was to be a lawyer and member of congress. That his membership should include five successive terms and the chairmanship of the ways and means committee probably was not specified in boyish dreams, nor is it likely that his ambition then considered the possibility of the presidency of the West Virginia university or the regency of the Smithsonian, which have since fallen to his lot. Yet his boyish presentment looked ambitious enough, though few would have thought so at the time it was taken.

Miss Frances E. Willard, famous woman that she is, must smile at the figure she cut when the accompanying childish picture was taken, though it was probably as well up to the artistic ideals of the time and place as any of the better pictures taken since, with which the public is more familiar. The college president, temperance advocate, White Cross leader, orator and literary woman can hardly be said to be prefigured in the portrait, but that they all existed in the immature brain of the childish sitter is proved by the history of the past [illegible]

Her father was in great distress about the case, and, at my recommendation, at last began to administer Ayer's Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which effected a complete cure, much to her relief and her father's delight. HUNDREDS PERISHED

THE DYNAMITE DISASTER AT SANT ANDER, SPAIN.

Was Terrible In Its Results—Awful Scenes of Destruction—Scores of Small Craft Sunk and Many Larger Vessels Set on Fire—The People Terror Stricken.

MADRID, Nov. 6.—The terrible disaster which has wrecked the port of Sant Ander and destroyed hundreds of lives has sent a thrill of horror throughout Spain.

Telegraphic communication with the death and fire-stricken locality have not yet been reopened, the particulars concerning the horrible calamity reaching here in driblets and by a roundabout way such as dispatches from outlying towns. The Associated Press, however, is enabled to furnish what is regarded in this capitol as a complete story of the disaster so far as known.

Story of the Disaster.

The Cabo Machichaco, a Spanish steamship belonging to Hilbao, caught fire at about 8 o'clock Friday afternoon while the steamer was alongside the quay discharging part of her cargo, which compromised nearly 2,000 tons of merchandise, though the main part of this cargo was iron ore and a number of sacks of flour, barrels of wine, many cases of petroleum and over 500 cases of dynamite, of which only 20 cases were on the steamer's manifest. The remaining 480 cases of dynamite were contraband, and to the shame of the shippers of this contraband dynamite it has caused immense loss of life and Vast Damage to Property.

The fire was first discovered in the coal bunkers and soon raged so fiercely as to be beyond control of the ship's crew, though the latter promptly took steps to smother the fire. Finally, seeing that the fire was spreading in the bunkers, and that the smoke was driving the crew from below, the local authorities were notified, the fire department and a detachment of the civic guard being sent to the scene. Leading municipal authorities headed the firemen and guards in the effort made to save the steamer. The provincial governor, who was one of the first to reach the spot, in directing the operations, and upon learning that the ship's manifest showed that there were 20 cases of dynamite on board, the firemen were directed to assist the crew in bringing this quantity of explosive material ashore. This was done in safety. In the meantime thousands of people had crowded down to the quay and thronged the promenades contiguous to it, attracted by the fire on board the steamer. The fire from the ship's bunkers spread quickly and ignited the petroleum which formed part of the cargo and which the authorities had, for some reason or other, failed to remove when the 20 cases of dynamite were taken ashore.

Displayed the Greatest Activity

A Terrible Explosion.

About 4:30 p. m. a detonation on board showed, as it afterwards turned out, that the boilers had burst, and soon after there was another terrible detonation heard, the steamer seemed to open in half, sending a blaze of fire skyward over which a crown of smoke rested for several minutes. The explosion was of such awful force that it shook the earth for miles around, caused houses to totter, smashed every window within the radius of a rifle shot, filled the air with a mass of flying iron, burning wood, blackened timbers and scorched beams which soon after fell, a death-dealing hail upon neighboring houses, scattering

Death and Destruction

wherever it crushed downward. The scene following the blowing up of the steamer is almost indescribable and the effect of the explosion of these 480 cases of dynamite will hardly be believed. Over the adjoining buildings, tottering with wreckage, fell a shower of iron followed by huge pieces of wood and the remains of human bodies, and above all dropped flaming splinters, which set fire to hundreds of buildings. The force of the exploding dynamite caused such a concussion that in addition to shaking hundreds of buildings

Off Their Foundations,

it actually sank 100 small craft in the harbor in addition to setting fire to a large number of other vessels and starting conflagrations upon several of the larger ships, including the Alfonso XII, which vessel caught fire so suddenly and burned so fiercely that 40 of her crew lost their lives on board of her. Nothing is as yet reported here concerning the damage done to foreign shipping, but the loss is said to be very great. The effect of the explosion upon the inhabitants of Sant Ander was

Bewildering in Its Intensity.

For some time after the disaster the people were positively stunned with dismay and horror and then followed a panic, during which 100 people are reported to have gone stark mad, while the vast majority was so paralyzed with fear and the shock that they were incapable of moving to the assistance of the dying or of making any effort to extinguish the flames which sprang up from a mass of buildings and which began to spread with the most threatening rapidity. The quay and promenade close to the scene of the explosion presented the most sickening sight ever witnessed [illegible]

were scattered here and there or were in heaps in many cases upon the wounded and dying, whose fearful shrieks of agony filled the air and struck terror into the hearts of those who after a time summoned sufficient courage to venture near the carnage ground. [illegible] her into the bay. On board the tugboat were many citizens of Sant Ander who were taking part in the work of rescue. All of them have disappeared forever.

Fire Aids Destruction.

Soon after the explosion whole blocks upon Mendez Numez street, parallel with the quay, were blazing and other portions of the city were in flames. Assistance was received from neighboring towns, but the flames were not subdued until a large portion of the city was in ruins.

The loss sustained by property owners and by poor people who had lost their all through the explosion and fire is immense. The loss of life is not yet determined, but some hundreds of dead bodies have been identified, while others will never be recognized from the mass of blackened trunks, heads and limbs which have been gathered together in heaps around the fatal spot. Many of the victims in addition are unknown and there seems to be no way of telling how many met their death in the water.

WITH SOLEMN POMP.

The Remains of Mayor Harrison Escorted to Graceland Cemetery.

CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—With the solemn pomp and imposing ceremonies befitting the interment of the chief magistrate of the World's Fair City and his pitifully dramatic fate, Carter H. Harrison's body was escorted to Graceland cemetery by an immense throng of sorrowing citizens. Tenderly the remains were borne from the black-draped and flower-scented corridor of the city hall, where they had rested in state and placed in the funeral car. Through the great crowd that had gathered to see the murdered mayor's last leave-taking of the scenes of his ardent labors in behalf of the city he loved, the black car slowly passed and took its place in the waiting procession. As it drew into the line the march was taken up, and the thousands who had gathered to do honor to the dead moved slowly through the crowded streets.

With Banners Draped,

and to the sad music of the funeral march. Out from the center of the city the great procession marched across the river and to the beautiful Church of the Epiphany, near the late executive's home. All along the line of march the people with sad faces and bared heads, watched the sombre columns, and about the church a throng as great as that which had been about the city hall was gathered.

From the time the mayor's body was placed in the city hall, a continuous procession moved through the corridor and past the bier. For 24 hours the line remained unbroken, and when the corridor was of necessity abruptly closed to the public, a great crowd still remained in line.

Awaiting a Last Look at the features of the dead executive. All night long men and women stood in double file awaiting an entrance to the building. Late in the night the line extended a block and a half from the entrance and the people stood in line for hours, unwilling to loose their last opportunity to see the face of Carter Harrison. As the long line grew shorter with the coming of the morning, the officers on guard used every endeavor to rush the people past the bier, but before the nights crowd had melted, the early morning throng began to arrive and when the corridors were closed, it was estimated that fully 100,000 people had filed past the body.

The funeral cortege was the longest ever seen in Chicago and probably in the country. United States troops, the national guard and a hundred or more civic organizations, with thousands of citizens in carriages and on foot, participated. The services at Epiphany church were conducted by Rev. T. N. Morrison and were simple but impressive.

National Commission Adjourns.

CHICAGO, Nov. 7.—The national commission has adjourned sine die. President Palmer will now convene the executive committee which will act for the commission with full power. This committee will decide whether or not the agricultural implements which were not in the field contest are to have an examination for an award, and many other questions which the national commission had to give up because of the absence of a quorum.

Emigration Figures.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—Treasury department figures show that 34,519 immigrants arrived in the United States during September, and that 430,517 arrived during the nine months ended Sept. 30. Austro-Hungary furnished 3,780 of this month's aggregate; Germany, 7,631; Russia, except Poland, 5,457; Sweden and Norway, 4,437, and the United Kingdom, 11,287.

THE LAWYER'S VISION.

A Remarkable Instance of Physical Suffering and Thought Transference.

The Popolo Romano relates the following authentic fact, without giving more than the initial of the person to whom it occurred, a distinguished young lawyer of literary reputation, who stated that he could not give the most remote explanation of it. "Some years since, on a hot summer afternoon, the Avvocato A—— together with his wife and two children, left their house in Via Gaeta at 6 o'clock precisely for an evening walk. He was in good health and spirits, but just as they crossed the street he was suddenly seized with a shock through his whole body, which caused all the blood to leave his face and obliged him to support himself against the wall. His wife in alarm assisted him to steady himself, anxiously asking what was the matter.

"He recovered himself speedily and was able to continue the walk, only describing an unaccountable perturbation and humming in his ears. The evening breeze and exercise gradually calmed and revived him, and he completely regained his usual frame. They went to visit some friends and then rested at a cafe, when toward half past 11 o'clock a storm which had been gathering began the first blasts of wind, and they hurried home. Scarcely arrived indoors, the Avvocato A—— hurried to remove some flowerpots from a balcony over the street, taking a lamp with him. The wind extinguished the light, so he had to continue his operations in the dark, only illuminated now and then by the lightning flashes. He was just lifting the last flower vase, an ornamental one, given him by his mother, when he was startled by seeing a kind of black veil waving upward close in front of him, which, as it rose, assumed a human form.

"Very much disturbed, he immediately related the strange appearance to his wife, and the perturbation before experienced again overcame him, leaving him unable to sleep all night. Early in the morning came a telegram from his brother at Ferrara stating that their mother had been suddenly seized with cerebral syncope the previous evening at 6 o'clock and had expired at midnight, just as the Avvocato A—— had seen the black veil vanish into space."

A Tender Handed Tramp.

Robert James Gordon, a casual, declined to break stone in return for food and shelter at the Newcastle workhouse, and doubtless much to the surprise of the workhouse authorities successfully resisted the proceedings taken against him for that act of insubordination. Being called on in the Newcastle police court to explain his refusal, Mr. Gordon, who appears to be an educated man and is described as speaking "logically and fluently," asked the bench to consider what such work meant to a man like him.

His hands would, he said, become quite lacerated, and were he a clerk or a tailor the result would be that in searching for employment afterward he would be unable to follow it. In the case of a shorthand writer, too, he asked how he would be able to write 180 words per minute if his hands were mangled in the way they assuredly would be after breaking a ton of stone. His chances of gaining work were thus minimized, and he "submitted respectfully" that according to law the master of the workhouse did not use any of the discretion which the regulations directed him to use.

After the magistrates had consulted together for some time, the chairman stated that the bench could not agree upon a decision, and that the defendant would thus get the benefit of the circumstance. Personally, he added, he should certainly have punished him, but his colleague being of a different opinion they had concluded to dismiss the case.—London News.

One Consolation.

On the dock at Tripoli may be seen a curious collection of articles. They represent import and export taxes and are sold by the customs officials. The import tax is 8 per cent of the value, and the export tax is 1 per cent. If any one refuses to pay the tax, the officials take possession of one-eighth of the merchandise.

Some time ago a European foreign minister visited Tripoli in the service of his country. He had with him 300 visiting cards. When a tax was demanded on these, he was angry and refused to pay it. A high official of the government was summoned to settle the matter.

He solemnly confiscated 8 per cent of the merchandise in question, 24 visiting cards.

"Very well, keep them," cried the irate embassador, "keep them. I resign myself. I shall not be obliged to pay you a visit of ceremony for 24 years."—Youth's Companion.

He Picked His Man.

A prominent Methodist clergyman, who now resides in San Francisco, tells this incident, which occurred in a Pullman sleeper while riding through Iowa. As the train passed over the state line into Iowa a seal was put on the liquor sideboard in the buffet, and the clergyman wishing to test the enforcement of the prohibition law called the porter and asked him if he could get a little whisky.

"Oh, yes, sah," said the porter.

"And how about a little wine?" queried the minister.

"I think I can fix you, sah," was the prompt and whispered reply.

"But," continued the reverend gentleman, "how about prohibition in Iowa?"

In a Hurry to Get There.

"I fear we will never get down town at this slow gait," said a restless, pale faced woman as she handed her fare to a Third avenue surface conductor the other night.

For a time the conductor was silent. Then, turning, he whispered:

"Do you see the glitter in her eyes?"

"Yes, very plainly."

"In another hour she will be crazy."

As the car rolled down the Bowery the woman looked through the window, and the light fell full in her face. Her eyes gleamed red and bright. Then the conductor leaned in at the door and said:

"It isn't far now—only a few blocks more."

"You fool," she replied, "how dare you drive so slowly! Had I known this I should have come another way," and half rising from her seat she glared through the door.

The conductor smiled sadly. "If ever there was a hopeless case," he muttered, "here is one."

"Have you known her long?" was asked.

"Yes, a year or more. She often comes down on my late run. At first she was quiet enough, but now she grows worse and worse."

"What caused her insanity?"

"Insanity?" and he turned as though in astonishment. "Why, she is not insane. She hits the pipe. Wait till we get to the Chinese district and you will see."

His words were true. She left the car at Mott street.—New York Herald.

Women and Actors.

Capoul, the French tenor, was the recipient of volumes of letters from lady admirers both here and in Paris. On the English stage, besides Mr. Irving, Mr. Alexander, Mr. Hare and Mr. Bancroft have been overwhelmed with a goodly number. But I am told by one who knows that no actor living ever received such a number of admiring epistles from the fairer sex as the late John Clayton.

Among actresses Mrs. Bancroft has perhaps been treated to the kindliest attentions. Mrs. John Wood, too, on the first or last night of her play had always her dressing room converted into a perfect bower of flowers, and little gifts of jewelry literally poured in upon her. There was one bangle with the inscription "Bless your art." Whether it was Mrs. Woods' heart or art that was blessed remains a riddle to this day.—London Gentlewoman.

The Mexican Boundary Line.

The international boundary line between the United States and the republic of Mexico is marked by pyramids of stones placed at irregular distances along the line all the way from the Rio Grande to the Pacific ocean. Wherever it was found practicable to do so these pyramids were built on prominent peaks at road crossings, fords, etc. The line was not surveyed, as is the usual custom, the location of the monuments being based on astronomical calculations and observations.—St. Louis Republic.

Sick Headache

21 Years of Suffering Ended by One Bottle of HOOD'S.

Mrs. Ed. Swan
Duncanville, Ill.

"Few people have suffered as much as I have with sick headache. I have had it by spells for 21 years, sometimes as often as

Three Times a Week.

I would get up with it, suffer all day, go to bed with it and have it all night. I tried everything that was recommended, but never was cured until about a year ago, when persuaded me to try one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am glad to say that it cured me, and I have not had sick headache since I took the first bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It has

My Mother-in-Law

HUNDREDS PERISHED

THE DYNAMITE DISASTER AT SANT ANDER, SPAIN.

Was Terrible In Its Results—Awful Scenes of Destruction—Scores of Small Craft Sunk and Many Larger Vessels Set on Fire—The People Terror Stricken.

MADRID, Nov. 6.—The terrible disaster which has wrecked the port of Sant Ander and destroyed hundreds of lives has sent a thrill of horror throughout Spain.

Telegraphic communication with the death and fire-stricken locality have not yet been reopened, the particulars concerning the horrible calamity reaching here in driblets and by a roundabout way such as dispatches from outlying towns. The Associated Press, however, is enabled to furnish what is regarded in this capitol as a complete story of the disaster so far as known.

Story of the Disaster.

The Cabo Machichaco, a Spanish steamship belonging to Hilbao, caught fire at about 3 o'clock Friday afternoon while the steamer was alongside the quay discharging part of her cargo, which compromised nearly 2,000 tons of merchandise, though the main part of this cargo was iron ore and a number of sacks of flour, barrels of wine, many cases of petroleum and over 500 cases of dynamite, of which only 20 cases were on the steamer's manifest. The remaining 480 cases of dynamite were contraband, and to the shame of the shippers of this contraband dynamite it has caused immense loss of life and Vast Damage to Property.

The fire was first discovered in the coal bunkers and soon raged so fiercely as to be beyond control of the ship's crew, though the latter promptly took steps to smother the fire. Finally, seeing that the fire was spreading in the bunkers, and that the smoke was driving the crew from below, the local authorities were notified, the fire department and a detachment of the civic guard being sent to the scene. Leading municipal authorities headed the firemen and guards in the effort made to save the steamer. The provincial governor, who was one of the first to reach the spot, in directing the operations, and upon learning that the ship's manifest showed that there were 20 cases of dynamite on board, the firemen were directed to assist the crew in bringing this quantity of explosive material ashore. This was done in safety. In the meantime thousands of people had crowded down to the quay and thronged the promenades contiguous to it, attracted by the fire on board the steamer. The fire from the ship's bunkers spread quickly and ignited the petroleum which formed part of the cargo and which the authorities had, for some reason or other, failed to remove when the 20 cases of dynamite were taken ashore.

A Terrible Explosion.

About 4:30 p. m. a detonation on board showed, as it afterwards turned out, that the boilers had burst, and soon after there was another terrible detonation heard, the steamer seemed to open in half, sending a blaze of fire skyward over which a crown of smoke rested for several minutes. The explosion was of such awful force that it shook the earth for miles around, caused houses to totter, smashed every window within the radius of a rifle shot, filled the air with a mass of flying iron, burning wood, blackened timbers and scorched beams which soon after fell, a death-dealing hail upon neighboring houses, scattering

Death and Destruction

wherever it crushed downward. The scene following the blowing up of the steamer is almost indescribable and the effect of the explosion of these 480 cases of dynamite will hardly be believed. Over the adjoining buildings, tottering with wreckage, fell a shower of iron followed by huge pieces of wood and the remains of human bodies, and above all dropped flaming splinters, which set fire to hundreds of buildings. The force of the exploding dynamite caused such a concussion that in addition to shaking hundreds of buildings

Off Their Foundations,

it actually sank 100 small craft in the harbor in addition to setting fire to a large number of other vessels and starting conflagrations upon several of the larger ships, including the Alfonso XII, which vessel caught fire so suddenly and burned so fiercely that 40 of her crew lost their lives on board of her. Nothing is as yet reported here concerning the damage done to foreign shipping, but the loss is said to be very great. The effect of the explosion upon the inhabitants of Sant Ander was

Bewildering in Its Intensity.

For some time after the disaster the people were positively stunned with dismay and horror and then followed a panic, during which 100 people are reported to have gone stark mad, while the vast majority was so paralyzed with fear and the shock that they were incapable of moving to the assistance of the dying or of making any effort to extinguish the flames which sprang up from a mass of buildings and which began to spread with the most threatening rapidity. The quay and promenade close to the scene of the explosion presented the most sickening sight ever witnessed.

Mangled and Blackened Corpses

were scattered here and there or were in heaps in many cases upon the wounded and dying, whose fearful shrieks of agony filled the air and struck terror into the hearts of those who after a time summoned sufficient courage to venture near the carnage ground.

Over a hundred people are said to have been precipitated into the sea by the explosion, and there, beneath this hail of blood, wood and iron, they met death with the crew of the unfortunate steamer and the tugboat which was about to tow

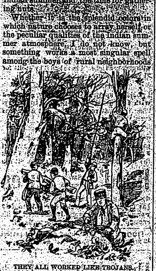
WHEN FROST'S IN AIR

[illegible] AND LEAVES ARE GOLDEN, SKIES ARE FAIR, AND HAZE IS OVER ALL.

Then Gather In Baskets the Hazelnut, the Chestnut and the Hickory Nut—The Pecan, Too, Remember, and the Walnut, and the Butternut.

When crimson and scarlet and gold have driven the green from the trees, when the grass is browning, when a purple haze lingers lovingly over the prairies and among the hills, when the yellow sunlight is shot with cardinal rays, when in the early morning the air is sharp and white frost is on the ground, then it is Indian summer and the time for gathering nuts.

Whether it is the splendid colors in which nature chooses to array herself or the peculiar qualities of the Indian summer atmosphere, I do not know, but something works a most singular spell among the boys of rural neighborhoods at about the time that nuts are ready to be gathered. Nor is this influence always observable alone among the boys. It is quite likely, indeed, to extend to the younger men and women, and I have known staid and sober citizens to yield to its subtle power. Its outward signs are very diverse among different classes, but they are quite unmistakable, once you have them explained to you.



THEY ALL WORKED LIKE TROJANS.

The boy who has fallen under this influence is apt to complain of all the symptoms of pronounced bodily illness. Sometimes he is feverish, at other times he seems to have a cold, again he is tortured by a terrible headache, and yet again he speaks of a faintness so pronounced that it does seem to him quite out of the question to do any work, like husking corn, or picking stone, or hauling pumpkins, or digging potatoes. That the boy sometimes actually undergoes severe suffering I can testify, for I have myself been under this curious spell. That parents and employers are apt to be unsympathetic I can also affirm with great positiveness. It is sometimes quite impossible to convince these hard hearted people that anything is really amiss.

Once they are persuaded the symptoms are genuine, a phenomenal change is pretty sure to come over the boy.

I am quite intimately acquainted with a youngster who was put to bed with brown paper and vinegar bound on his brow by his mother to relieve a splitting headache. After she had done all she could to alleviate his agonies she resumed her regular daily occupations. No sooner had she left the room than the boy opened his eyes, which he had been obliged to close on account of the pain, tore off the brown paper, got into his clothes, bolted out of his bedroom window, climbed along the roof of the "lean to," and, jumping to the ground, dodged out of sight and made tracks in as near a beeline as he could, without running the risk of being seen, to Deacon Allen's grove over on the far side of Lint hill. There were chestnut trees and hickory nuts and beechnuts and walnuts and butternuts in that grove, and a number of boys who had agreed to loot the trees were there ahead of this boy and hard at work when he arrived. They suspended operations upon his appearance to shout in concert, "Say, Jimmy, howje git away?"

When he had told his story, they all went at it like Trojans again, and, although five minutes before Jimmy's mother had left him in his room he had been altogether too weak to hitch up the gray horse and take a grist to mill, he now had no hesitancy in taking the hardest work of all—shinning up the straight trunks of the tallest trees and climbing out on the branches to shake the nuts down. He kept at this all day, too, and when at night his father felt called upon to apply a wholesome remedy nowadays little used known as "old beechine," he took his medicine without a murmur. STUDYING THE COLOR OF THE EYES.

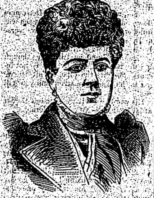
Most of the other boys, so they told him later, were that night treated to doses somewhat similar [illegible]

A WOMAN IN AFRICA.

Experience of a Missionary's Wife on the Shores of Lake Tanganyika.

The life of a missionary's wife in the heart of the dark continent is not entirely without its compensations, according to the account of Mrs. A. J. Swann, who has just returned to England after a five years' residence on the shores of Lake Tanganyika. Yet it is scarcely probable that there will be any great rush of English society girls to try it, for though Mrs. Swann says she was never lonely and never afraid, yet she admits that outside the stockade the lions were always howling at night, and there was constant danger of being attacked by cannibals.

Mrs. Swann is the wife of the missionary who brought to England the sad news of Emin Pasha's tragic fate. She is the only white woman who ever made the journey from Sedani to Ujiji, and her presence excited great curiosity among the natives. On the way the small caravan encountered a company, 400 strong, of the Masai, the strongest and the most formidable of the tribes on the lake. They are all over 6 feet in height, and they wear no clothing. Mrs. Swann was always carried in front of the caravan by eight men in a wicker chair. These African coolies, with the exception of two, deserted her at the first sight of the Masai, who were just returning from war and consequently looked as ferocious as possible. Fortunately their intentions were amicable, and after exchanging branches of trees, which is the signal of peace, and accepting some beads and cloth from "the big man," as they called Mr. Swann, they allowed the "white lady" and her escort to pass on.



MRS. A. J. SWANN.

The missionaries built a mud house and a church at Kinyamkolo. The house was erected inside a stockade where 800 people lived. Mrs. Swann felt greatly interested in the women and girls, and taught them many useful things. Her servants were children from 8 to 13 years old. After that age the girls marry and will do no more domestic work. With coffee from the Sheri islands and supplies from England once a year it was not impossible for Mrs. Swann to cater acceptably for her household.

Mrs. Swann gives some amusing details of the value of certain goods among these tribes, needles and cloth ranking highest. She always kept a large supply of these, for they absolutely became current coin of the realm. Three needles would procure one fowl; one needle, two eggs. Old tins and empty bottles were also in much request, condensed milk tins taking the place of drinking gourds for the natives. A fowl could also be had for two yards of cotton or a small piece of cloth.

BALLROOM NOVELTIES.

Two New and Pretty Figures For the German Described.

Two pretty new figures for the german are called "Living Tenpins" and "The Target Shoot." For the first the favors are miniature gilded tenpins for the gentlemen and tiny blackboards for the ladies. Ten couples dance and at a signal receive favors, which they present to new partners and go on dancing. At a second signal the gentlemen all kneel, facing the ladies in the following form:

Then the leader hands a large, soft rubber ball to the first lady, who stands some feet away and bowls toward the living pins, trying of course to roll it to her favorite partner. Whichever of the gentlemen it reaches, however, picks the ball up and dances with the bowler, handing the ball to the second lady, who repeats the movements of the first, as do all the rest until each has secured a partner. The gentlemen are prohibited from reaching for the ball. It must come to them.

The "Target Shoot" requires a straw filled target, hung upon an easel three feet or more from the floor, 10 feather arrows and 10 bamboo tubes to blow the arrows through. After dancing, changing partners and dancing again, at a signal the ladies stand in a line back of the target, about five feet from it, and the gentlemen line up in front of it, thus:

LADIES.

O O O O O O O O O O O O

X X X X X X X X X X

GENTLEMEN.

An arrow and bamboo are given to each gentleman, and beginning at the right they blow the arrows through the tubes at the target, the first to make a bullseye having his choice of partners, while those who miss must blow again until they make a bullseye. The figure is full of merriment.

Allowing the expenses of each one while away from home to have been $50, the aggregate amount spent by citizens of the state in seeing the sights would be the enormous sum of $5,000,000.

A Duluth telegram says Frank Porter, a well known quarterbreed, states he has found coal near Lake Kaboogama. "I do not mean float," he said, "but a well defined vein which I have traced a distance of 200 feet, and which, even near the surface, has a width of about eight feet. I have taken steps to acquire title and I claim the distinction of being the first to locate a coal vein in the Rainy river country."

A Halowe'en prank made people believe that a circus had come to town and two of the animals had got loose at Redwood Falls. During the night two blackish, brown horses, belonging to Postmaster McKay, had been painted all over in broad white stripes and were found in the morning eating placidly as if nothing had happened on a vacant plot.

The department of public instruction has been looking into the free text book question with a view to finding out how the plan has worked where tried, and circulars have been sent to county superintendents and answers received, so far from about half the number. The returns already in indicate that about 2,000 districts have adopted the free text book plan. Of the counties heard from, 60 per cent report that the plan meets with general favor.

The contract for the obelisk that is to be erected in commemoration of the release of the white and halfbreed captives from the Indians in the uprising of 1862 has been let. The monument is to be erected at Camp Release, as it is designated, on a sightly point on the bank of the Minnesota river in Redwood county. The monument was designed by A. Critchfield, and is in the form of an obelisk and will be built of red Minnesota granite.

Indians After Deer.

SHELL LAKE, Wis., Nov. 6.—A large number of Indians from this locality are leaving for Minnesota to hunt deer during the open season. They have hunted during October in this state and will now put in another month in the sister state. The change in the game laws for this state gives them two months hunting now instead of one, as heretofore.

Elevator Destroyed.

REDWOOD FALLS, Minn., Nov. 7.—The Van Dusen elevator here burned to the ground at 2 o'clock a. m. [illegible] point to incendiarism. [illegible] the building is $4,000, and on contents $16,000. The elevator contained nearly 15,000 bushels of wheat, 4,000 bushels of flax, 1,000 bushels of oats and 60 tons of soft coal, on which there is but little salvage.

Boats Overdue.

ASHLAND, Wis., Nov. 7.—The Viking and Hiawatha are overdue at Ashland almost 70 hours, and some fears are expressed for their safety. [illegible]

TO FIGHT IN NEW ORLEANS.

Articles of Agreement Signed by Corbett and Mitchell.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—An agreement has been signed by Billy Thompson, representing Charley Mitchell, the English pugilist, and W. A. Brady, representing James J. Corbett, which will probably have the effect of bringing off the big international fight in New Orleans. It looks, after all, as if the Olympic club of the Crescent City would secure the event. The representatives of the fighters, accompanied by Ike Thompson and and George W. Wetty, met in The World office, and, in consultation with the sporting editor of the paper, drew up the articles of agreement, which were subsequently signed. All parties mean business. The meeting was consequent upon the receipt of a letter from Secretary W. H. Ross, of the Olympic club, enclosed with which were articles of agreement, nearly similar to those substituted by the principals at their conference. The proposition forwarded by Mr. Ross allowed no expenses for training. Taking into consideration the fact that the Olympic club originally offered a $25,000 purse, Corbett and Mitchell think that they have not asked too much in calling for $2,500 as a guarantee for training and deducting that amount from the purse. In a letter to the club the pugilists name on or after Dec. 18 as the time of the fight.

LOCHREN D[illegible]ES.

His Rumored Resignation Emphatically Contradicted.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—The report was widely circulated last night that Commissioner of Pensions Lochren had resigned. The reason assigned for the resignation is that he is an old soldier and is dissatisfied with the attitude of the administration concerning reforms in the pension list. It is also rumored that First Deputy Murphy will take charge. Commissioner Lochren, when questioned regarding his reported resignation, said: "You can deny in the most emphatic terms for me any statement that I have resigned. I am deeply interested in the reforms which the present administration is making in the pension bureau and intend to carry them out to the best of my ability."

AGAINST SETTLERS.

Decision in a Land Grant Case in Favor of the Omaha Road.

ASHLAND, Wis., Nov. 7.—Secretary Hoke Smith has made another decision, the full text of which has just been received at the United States land office, by which the Omaha road secures undisputed possession of 85,000 acres of land. The case is entitled "United States ex Rel. W. Houlton vs. Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railroad." The commission is overruled and a quietus is put upon the efforts of Houlton and the settlers who were after the land.

Indictments Invalid.

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 7.—Judge Johnson has decided that the indictments found by the late grand jury against Eugene S. Elliott and F. W. Noyes, directors of the Plankinton bank, were invalid, because the grand jury returned them at the October term of the municipal court, whereas the grand jury's term had expired with the September term for which it was called. This decision invalidates all the indictments returned against the officers of the Plankinton and South Side Savings bank.

Will Play Cornell.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 6.—Preparations are being made for the greatest foot ball event ever arranged to occur in the Northwest, the game between Cornell and the University of Minnesota for Thanksgiving Day. Enthusiasm over the game increases every day, and the spectacle promises to be not unlike the great Eastern events between Yale and Harvard.

Prendergast's Trial.

CHICAGO, Nov. 6.—The trial of Prendergast, the slayer of Mayor Harrison, has been postponed until Monday, Nov. 27.

'Round Home.

Justice Gossman returned from Chicago on Tuesday morning.

Monday was one of those bright warm days that you read about but don't always see at this time of the year.

The Hathaway boys have dug a fine well at the family residence, and now C. P. feels like he could live at home.

Dr. Warninger put the harness on his yearling, standard-bred colt for the first time this week and she walked off like an old professional.

Major C. H. Mix has returned from a pleasant visit to his daughter at Tacoma. While away he saw and visited many old-time Crookston people.

Col. Cobham Post has rented the Montgomery building on Main street and will fit up elegant quarters for themselves, and will have space to rent to other societies.

Some kicking exists over the recent raise in insurance rates in the city but in no case is it equal to the dose Grand Forks gets where the raise is 100 per cent all around.

G. Ladu of Lisbon, N. D., was in the city yesterday and appointed W. A. Lanctot as local agent for the Hartford Life and Annuity Insurance Co., which Mr. Ladu has the general northwestern agency of.

Miss Rachel Nicholson, daughter of John Nicholson, was married on the 2d inst. at the family residence on north Main street, to W. T. Nicholson of Grand Forks, N. D., the Rev. L. W. Squier officiating.

A. M. Malmberg of Fisher, dropped into our den on Monday to encourage us with a renewal and chat upon the prospects. A. M. says he is forced to the conclusion that it will not do to pin entire faith on wheat alone.

After December 1st if any delinquent subscriber should find costs added to his subscription account and should be obliged to come to Crookston to settle, don't blame us for we have done our share to avoid making you trouble and expense.

Mrs. Joseph Simpson was severely injured on Saturday last in a runaway. She was driving along the streets when a runaway team collided with her buggy throwing her out. She was taken to her home a few miles west of the city, and has been unable to be out since.

P. J. McGuire: Collections on contracts for railroads are very much better than one would imagine and the number of sales we are making would surprise you. Sales have never been better at this time of the year. If the price of wheat had only been good this year we would have had the best fall in the history of the county.

James Greenhalgh, Sr., returned on Tuesday from a trip to New York and other eastern cities, taking in the great World's Fair en route. He says that real estate in New York and New Jersey has been a drug since the last election—absolutely no sales occurring. Real estate men told him there would be no more sales until the administration changes.

Will Hoch, J. C. Cooper, Jim Creighton and Fred Moeckel returned this week from their pine claims on the reservation.

Uncle Robert Johnson informs the JOURNAL that his son-in-law, Percy Baker, who was injured while performing his duties as brakeman some time since, and who suffered amputation, has been obliged to have the limb amputated again, near the knee, and is now doing nicely, with prospects for recovery.

Col. George Post, of Fertile, will give a great campfire this evening in Fertile. The exercises will be freely interspersed with musical selections, both vocal and instrumental, and Major R. H. Hendershot, "the drummer boy of the Rappahannock," will take a leading part, assisted by his son, J. C. Hendershot. The members of Col. Cobham Post are cordially invited to be present and enjoy the festivities of the occasion.

While we want to have that subscription accout settled up this fall we do not ask you to sell your wheat at present prices to do it. We will pay SIXTY-FIVE CENTS per bushel for wheat to apply on all subscriptions that are past due for three years or more if the subscription is paid up in full and one year in advance. Now is your chance to settle. Remember, this offer extends to December 1st, 1893.

Col. Gorgas: Talk about hard times! I do not believe this part of the country is suffering as much in that line as other portions that we read of. I know that my business has been such all summer as to render it impossible for me to get to Chicago to see the great World's Fair—something that I greatly desired to do. I have had all the business I could turn my hand to and what more could I want?

Three big strapping fellows went into Geo. Vine's meat market one evening while Joe. Winfield was alone, and attempted to run things to suit themselves. In a few minutes George returned from his supper and for the space of a minute or so the air was full of arms and legs and then there was a large-sized vacancy where the fellows had been. George could easily have made sausage meat of them, but wisely contented himself by simply firing the crowd out of doors.

L. I. Benoit: How is business? Well I can't complain. I think the cash plan is the only way to conduct business properly. You remember last year I was the first grocery concern to adopt that system and many predicted failure for me but having tried it a year I wouldn't now try any other system. Business is excellent. [illegible] living in the north part of the county to the amount of $150 and I am getting many similar orders.

Work on the sewer progresses nicely and will be completed at an early date.

Several of our attorneys are attending court at Ada this week. The term commenced on Monday.

Dan McDonald was reported on Wednesday to be getting along nicely. Said to be out of danger.

J. V. E. Wyatt had a relapse this week caused by being too previous in his efforts to get up from his sick bed.

The Corse-Payton Comedy Co. opens a week's engagement at the opera house on Monday evening of next week.

Adolph Bydal has removed the Dalen office into the opera house block, in the room formerly occupied by A. Sture.

DeForest Bucklen returned last Saturday from the fair. Justice Gossman, who went with him, visited his friends in Iowa.

Farmer Geo. J. McManus went to the farm on Tuesday to look after his auction sale that occurs on Thursday of this week at Fosston.

Eben Lancaster went to the great fair and rode in the Ferris wheel. Eben says the only regret he has is in the fact that his time was so limited.

Al. Sargent and his father, Dr. Dunlop and F. W. Markman started last Saturday for a fortnight's hunt in the woods about 75 miles from Fosston.

Thos. Loughead was united for life to Miss Bertha Brunner on Sabbath day at the residence of the bride's parents on Jerome's addition, the Rev. Mr. McClure officiating.

John McLean: What do I think of the financial propecsts? Well that depends. If you can tell me how long the democrats are going to be in power I can tell you how long hard times will last. You can't have peace and prosperity and a democratic administration all at the same time.

Frank Benoit came up from St. Paul last Saturday morning went out to Gentilly, spent the day on the farm, and returned in time to take supper with Isaac before returning to his duties as mail agent on the Northern Pacific. Frank had a hustle on him as big as a bumble-bee.

Rudy Burkhardt: I have heard it said that times are hard this fall, but I have this to say that the Cleveland house has not done a better fall's business for years than this fall. I mean cash business for I will not do any credit business. I put my prices down to the lowest rates and insist on cash in every case and I find that is better for all concerned.

The peaceful slumbers of Charlie Misner were disturbed at about 12.15 a. m. this (Thursday) morning by a commotion in his chicken coop and jumping out of bed he rushed to a window which he opened just as the man inside the hen-house struck a match. The opening of the window disturbed the thief and he stuck his head out of the hen-house door, whereupon Charlie sent a hasty dispatch from his revolver which caused him to take that head in quite sudden. Then Charlie took a flyer at the hen-house for luck and seeing no more demonstrations left the window to go outside leaving the better half to watch the window. As soon as he left the window the thief made a break for freedom. Charlie returned to the window in time to get one more shot when he found that his revolver was empty and so the thief got away. Charlie says he shall see that the revolver is ready for business every night hereafter and while he does not like the idea of killing a fellow man he shall do his best to hit the next chicken thief who attempts to visit his premises.

Congressman Boen is in the city to-day interviewing the faithful and trying to extract as much consolation from the election returns as possible.

T. G. Thompson, J. E. Morrisey, W. O. Wilson, John Bergquist and S. A. Sylvester returned from Chicago last week declaring they never had a better time anywhere, than they had while on this trip.

Dr. Warninger is kept on the go all of the time in his veterinary business. He had no sooner returned from a trip to Ada than he was obliged to go at once to Fertile—and so it goes week in and week out.

The horse, Gold Coin, that Peterson Bros. and Warninger sold to a man at Ada died recently. The loss will not be total as he was insured for $500. He was a very promising horse and had he lived he would have been a gold mine for his owner.

"She couldn't marry three," advertised for next Saturday evening has cancelled its date. Manager Halvorson worked hard to secure this attraction—which is one of the best on the road, and naturally feels quite disappointed at this outcome. However an excellent company will be here all of next week.

Pat Russell rejoices in the arrival of a little democrat at his house, which event occurred on Tuesday. Pat says that though he may not be able to vote by next presidential election he will be old enough to Russell 'round in the parade and carry a torch.

Our exchanges speak very highly of the Corse-Payton company that appears at the Opera house all next week. The prices are reasonable and all who enjoy first-class comedy will have a chance to gratify their tastes for an entire week. Secure reserved seats early at Tom Morris' jewelry store.

R. Fairweather and son were down from Euclid on Monday for lumber for building purposes on the farm. Mr. F. says he has had his plowing all done for three weeks or more and everything in ship-shape for the winter.

The ladies of W. C. T. U. will serve an oyster supper Friday evening Nov. 10th at the Reading room, to defray expenses of literature for the coming year. Every one is invited. Supper served from 6 o'clock to 9.

Charles Dickson appeared before a Crookston audience on Monday evening in his new play "Incog." The play was well put on, each actor and actress being well up in the business. The play is a light comedy, full of funny situations which kept the audience in a constant uproar from first to last.

The Valley Roller mills were overrun with wheat last week. So great was the rush that they could take it in as fast as it was offered. They soon remedied that defect, however and got in shape to provide for it as fast as it came. The offerings are not quite as heavy this week.

A. E. McArty and C. D. Dash have formed a co-partnership in the painting business and will be prepared to do painting, paper-hanging, window-glazing, kalsomining and all kinds of work in that line at short notice. All work guaranteed to be first-class in every particular. Leave orders at Fred Durand's drugstore.

Mr. M. P. Losey was in from Euclid on Wednesday chatting with old friends. Informs the JOURNAL that the farming operations have been very successful this year, everything considered. He says he has never seen the year yet that he couldn't make something off the farm. [illegible] While the ground was not entirely free from frost last week it was enough so as to admit of a considerable plowing, requiring, however extra team force. Some gang plows were seen with six horses and some single plows with four. If the weather this week continues as it opens out, there will be a great deal of plowing done by Saturday night.

[illegible] one would never think that Charlie Misner would be afraid of a cow. And should you ask him the question, Charlie would promptly deny it [illegible] they could stop, which so frightened the cow that she made a break for tall timber and is running yet for all the boys know. Charlie insists that of the cow he was not afraid! Just wanted to see what the critter would do, and Dept. Sheriff Losey comforts Charlie by assuring him that next time he will go along to keep the cows off.

Will Shut Down.

The Walker saw mill at this place will probably close down about the last of the week, as the logs in the river here will be all sawed by that time. The cut this season has been over 10,000,000 feet, and considering the time the mill has been running and the size of the logs, which were smaller than usual, this is good work. As soon as the river opens next spring, the drive at Red Lake Falls, which is much larger than that brought down this year will be sent down, and the mill will commence operations in two or three weeks after the river opens, and the cut next season will be more than double what it was this year.

Are your childern subject to croup? If so, you should never be without a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is a certain cure for croup, and has never been known to fail. If given freely as soon as the croupy cough appears it will prevent the attack. It is the sole reliance with thousands of mothers and never disappoints them. There is no danger in giving this Remedy in large and frequent doses, as it contains nothing injurious. 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace.

ROMANCE OF A NEWSBOY.

Incidents In the Career of Ex-Governor Waller of Connecticut.

Who does not know genial Tom Waller of Connecticut? Tom was for years the leading lawyer of Hartford, twice member of the assembly in the Connecticut legislature, once senator and twice governor of the Nutmeg State. He failed the third time because he immolated himself on the political altar to save Cleveland. The president rewarded his self abnegation by making him consul general at London, the richest office in the administration.

Tom Walter 40 years ago was a newsboy on the ferryboats which plied between Brooklyn and New York. There was no big bridge in those days, and the boys hovered around the ferryboats, which carried all of the human freight of the two great cities at that time. The lad's real name was Thomas Waller O'Grady, and he descended from a family renowned in Irish history.

One ancestor is the famous Baronfeather O'Grady, Ireland's greatest jurist and the compeer of Grattan, Curran, Phillips and other renowned Irish barristers. His granduncle was Thomas Standish Walter O'Grady, the bitterest Tory and hardest landlord in the good old bailiwick of Limerick.

Thomas Waller O'Grady's parents died while he was almost a child in arms. He was adopted by an old Dutch family in New York, but the restrictions imposed upon the future statesman were so irksome that he ran away and became a newsboy. Many is the time in his precarious calling in those days that young Tom was compelled to sleep in a dry goods box at night after an unsatisfactory day's labor. Tom had dropped the family name and was known by his youthful associates as Tom Waller. One day while crossing the Fulton ferry from Brooklyn to New York he met a fussy old gentleman who wished a copy of the Hartford Courant. It was the favorite paper of his native town, and as he thought away ahead of all metropolitan journals. Of course New York newsboys did not sell country papers, and Tom told him so.

"However," said the cute little fellow in a reassuring way, "I think I can get it for you." By good luck Tom had seen an old lady in the saloon reading that very paper, which he recognized by the ancient type in its headline, and he forthwith came up to the dame and offered to exchange a copy of a New York paper for the mediæval country sheet. The lady was a New Englander and ready for a bargain. She had read The Courant and had no further use for it. She thought she had made a clever deal when she exchanged the country morning paper for a bright metropolitan evening journal. Tom knew he had. When he presented The Courant to the fussy old gentleman that dignitary gave him $1 for his pains. Then he inquired his name. "Tom Waller," promptly responded the newsboy. The old gentleman stood aghast. It was his own name. He took down the lad's address, looked up his references and in a fortnight adopted him. He had no children and Tom was his idol. He gave him a sound preliminary education and then sent him to Yale college, where Tom graduated with high honors. His subsequent history is too familiar to the public to require repetition.—Boston Herald.

Low Rates to the Coast.

The Northern Pacific railroad has just put into effect a series of low round-trip rates to Pacific coast points. These California tickets are good until April 30th, 1894, and are good for stop over points under certain conditions.

These rates will enable those desiring so to do, to spend the winter in Southern California, or to visit the Mid-winter Fair to be held at San Francisco. This latter event will undoubtedly be second only to the World's Fair just closed, and will repay a visit, as it will exhibit the resources and capabilities of California.

St. Paul, Minneapolis & Duluth to Northern Pacific coast points and return $65.50; to San Francisco and return to Missouri river, $80.50 to Los Angeles and return to Missouri river $90.00.

[30-37]

Canadians Attention.

Excursion tickets to points in Ontario and as far east as Montreal on sale November 21st, 28th, December 5th, 11th, to 31st, daily $40.00 for round trip. Good for 90 days.

These are same tickets we have been selling past few years and which gave such good satisfaction.

Come around and find out our connection east of St. Paul and Chicago and that you can make good time via the Great Northern. Through sleeper from Crookston to Chicago on our night train.

Who Shows the Fallacy of the Sage's Answer to a Farmer's Inquiry

Regarding the Possibility of Getting Lower Freight Rates on Wheat.

CROOKSTON, November 11, 1893.

To Editor JOURNAL.

Dear Sir:—It is undoubtedly true that an intelligent public opinion in favor of any measure or proposed action, whether of the administrative legislative or judicial branch of the government, has great weight and influence. If this were not true, this would not be a representative government. I am therefore pleased with the stand your paper has taken in support of the action recently instituted before the Railroad and Warehouse Commission for a reduction of the transportation charges on wheat and its products. I say this because what you have already said on that subject helps to create a sound and intelligent public opinion on this subject. I wish I could say as much for other so called reform journals who assume to speak for the people, but I cannot for reasons which will be hereinafter indicated. My attention was first called to an article in the Representative some three weeks ago in answer to an inquiry by Thomas Lawrence as to how lower frieght rates could be obtained. The editor of that paper instead of answering that question goes on to criticise the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the so called "Milk Rate Cases," (R. R. Co. vs. Minnesota 134 U. S.) which declared this part of the railroad law of this State of 1887 (Ch 10 G. L. 1887) which authorized the Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners to establish rates for transportation on railroads, any hearing on the question of reasonableness of such rates as unconstitutional for being in violation of the United States constitution forbidding the taking of property without "due process of law." It being considered that the law in question as construed by our Supreme court, authorized the commission to fix an unreasonably low rate for such service, without any chance on the part of the carrier to show that the rate so fixed was unreasonably low, and required the service to be done for practically nothing, or at least at a great loss. That decision however much it may be criticised is the law of this land and cannot be changed until a radical change takes place in the highest court of the land, whose judges are appointed for life. Practical statesmanship therefore dictates that the law be recognized, it is, and not as we might think it ought to be.

The Representative then goes on and says that inasmuch as the railroad law of 1887, has been declared obnoxious to said constitutional provision, no relief can be given by the railroad commission because its decision will not be binding, being based on a void law. The fallacy of this argument consists in this, that the writer overlooks entirely the railroad law of 1891.

The decision referred to was made March 24th, 1890, and immediately thereafter our railroad commission with the then Attorney General of the state, set to work to draft an amendment to the law of 1887, so as to avoid the objections raised to it in the "Milk Cases." This work they did so well that the bill as prepared was adopted by the legislature of 1891, and is now (Ch 106 Gen. laws of Minn., 1891.)

This law provides for a hearing on the merits whenever complaint is made to the commission that rates are unreasonably high and if it appears after such hearing that the charge is sustained the Commission may reduce the rates complained of. Had the law of 1887 been less radical and contained such a provision for a hearing, it would have been upheld and the cause of State control of railroads had been at least two years nearer a solution in this state than it is. From this we can that it is not the most radical legislator that is always the best friend of the people. I have also seen accounts of a so called "grain grower's" meeting in Crookston recently where resolutions were passed, asking the Governor to order the commission to reduce all railroad rates one-half, and if they failed so to do to dismiss the commissioners as incompetent and appoint others etc., and also asking people to send petitions to the Governor to take such action.

When it is considered that the Governor has no power to dismiss the commissioners for any decision they may make, and further that if any law existed authorizing him to do so, it would be absolutely void, the foolishness of such action is apparent. It is not only foolish but it is harmful. What would be thought of a people petitioning the Governor to "order" a judge to decide a case so or so on pain of dismissal?

This is not a despotic government, and an executive possessing such power would be the very incarnation of despotism. The Czar of all the Russias would be a democratic ruler compared to him.

The railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State is a court or tribunal authorized to decide controversies between the people and the common carriers of the state, but they can only decide after complaint is made that charges are unequal or unreasonable, and a hearing is had and proof offered upon that issue. Their decision may be reviewed in the regular courts. Such is the law of this state, and it is believed that as now perfected its provisions are consistent with that provision of the federal constitution guarranteeing "due process of law" to all citizens be they individual, or corporations.

The sensible thing for the people to do then, to get cheaper freight rates on grain, is to prove before the Commission that the present charges are unreasonably high, and then to wait and not "swear at the court" until they are beat.

The demand for lower rates all around on coal, lumber, merchandise etc., should at least be postponed until we get lower rates on grain or great staples. If a general reduction all round be demanded, the reduction on each article would be necessarily small. The operating expenses of the Great Northern railroad in Minnesota for 1892, as shown by published report for business in Minnesota was 56.39 per cent of gross receipts. If for instance the people demand an all around reduction of one-half in the charges, the granting of this request involve the destruction of the value of the whole property and require them to lose 6 per cent more than the gross receipts would amount to. In other words, they would not only get nothing for the use of their property but they would be compelled to lose several hundred thousand per year besides.

That such a demand is "unreasonable and cannot succeed, goes without saying.

Hoping that these remarks may help to enlighten the public mind on this question.

I remain very respectfully
H. STEENERSON.

Sanders Again.

The man Sanders of East Grand Forks, who has been several times examined by Judge Benson in regard to his insanity, is evidently creating more trouble. The judge received a telegram last Friday from Justice Dwyer of East Grand Forks, asking the judge to go over and examine Sanders again, as he was acting strangely and disposing of property at sacrificed prices. Owing to business in his office here, the judge could not go.

The best plaster—Dampen a piece of flannel with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bind it over the seat of pain. It is better than any plaster. When the lungs are sore such an application on the chest and another between the shoulder blades will often prevent pneumonia. There is nothing so good for a lame back or a pain in the side. CAMP FIRE AT FERTISE.

Col. George Post Indulges in a Big Blow-out.

The camp-fire, held by Col. George Post, in Fertile was a brilliant success in every particular Delegations from the G. A. R. post at Ada and Col. Cobham post of Crookston were present and the new opera house was filled to the utmost extent of its seating capacity. It had been advertised that Maj. Hendershot (the drummer boy of the Rappahannock) and his son, assisted by local talent would entertain the audience but Comrade Renne, who acted as master of the ceremonies, found, when he came to call off, that several of the prominent actors in the program failed to come to the scratch at the call of "time," so he substituted other attractions that were wholly impromptu but not disagreeable features. Comrade Renne announced first an instrumental piece, by the Fertile quartette in lieu of a piece that should have been rendered by the Fertile cornet band which organization was so crippled by the absence of so many of its members as to be unable to show up. The quartette did extremely well showing great proficiency. Then Ed. George Esq., of this city was introduced who gave an eloquent address of welcome on behalf of the post. Mr. George had been selected for this duty from the fact that the post was named from Col. James George, Ed's father. As introductory to Maj. Hendershot, "The Drummer Boy of the Rappahannock" was recited by a schoolboy, a lad about 14 years old and was well rendered, then the major and and his son regaled the audience with the fife and drum, followed by an instrumental piece on the violin and piano. The major and his son then appeared and the major gravely announced that he had received written requests for certain pieces and read a humorous letter (supposed to be) from Nels Byington, calling for "The Girl I left Behind me," which the major and his son rendered so nicely that every old vet in the house for the time being imagined himself back in camp in the sunny south; then "La Grippe Quickstep," which piece the major said was Dr. Nelson's favorite. The Fertile quartette then gave an instrumental piece, and the major and his son gave "a combination piece," "Red, White and Blue," "Liberty Quickstep" and the "Mocking Bird." Then the major gave his imitation of an engine on the drum. Next on the program was, "Whoa Mule" sung by Maj. Hendershot assisted by H. C. Tatro, Miss Vannett and Miss Burdick, accompanied by the piano. The major varied the original lines of the song with local hits in such a way as to keep the house in a constant uproar. Miss Allie La Due then recited "Custer's Last Fight" so feelingly as to hold the audience spell-bound from beginning to finish. The major being called out said that he had just received an entirely new piece from New York which he would try and give but would not vouch for how well he could do it as the piece had just reached him from Dugdale too late for any practice. He then gave a parody on "The Little Brown Jug" consisting of local hits so pat that the audience was kept in convulsions of laughter. His imitation of a battle, that followed on the Horace Greeley drum carried the old vets back to the days that tried men's souls and deafened everybody else in the house, and the Fertile quartette tried to lull the storm and let the audience down easily. The major and son then gave, "R. E. Lee's Quickstep," "Captain Jinks" (which the major said was Comrade Renne's favorite.) The Crookston delegates' favorite, "We Won't get Home till Morning" and others including "When Johnny Comes Marching Home Again," which he said was the Crookston Relief Corps' favorite. A recitation, "Virginius" by Miss Courtright finished that part of the program when five minute speeches by Grand Army comrades occupied some time during which a sort of a miracle occurred that took the breath from every one who knows Capt. B. F. Zarracher, for as his name was announced the Captain actually marched to the front and center, faced the audience all the same as though he intended to indulge in an eloquent speech right then and there, but a feeling of great relief passed through the audience when he said that speech-making was not in his line and he would introduce his friend Comrade Eshelman, of Ada post, who, he said, was loaded for bear, and Comrade Eshelman fully justified the expression in his speech that followed. After a pleasant hour or so in this line, the Fertile quartette closed the public exercises of the evening and the hall was quickly cleared of chairs and a pleasant hop was inaugurated, in which our Crookston boys proved that if they were not at home with their tongues they were with their feet, for they were right in it as many a pretty Fertile lassie soon discovered. The Fertile boys were very nice about it and allowed our fellows full swing without a murmur and it was late when our boys got tired enough to quit. The results were a nice little sum for the Fertile post and a splendid evening's entertainment for everybody else. Fertile has a splendid new opera house and the people there seem to appreciate the fact by filling it upon occasion.

MANITOBA GRIZZLIES.

MONSTROUS BEARS IN THE FORESTS BACK IN THE MOUNTAINS.

Some of Them Tower Six Feet Above a Man, and It Takes Nerve to Stand In That Tremendous Presence—A Hunter Saved His Life by Doing a Circus Act.

Fifteen years ago, said George W. Rae, a Manitoba pioneer, the grizzly bear was so plentiful among the Manitoba Rockies that the Hudson Bay company annually secured many hundreds of their skins from the army of hunters and trappers that had its range in that wild region, but today this fierce and ponderous beast—nowhere so fierce or of such enormous proportions as among the Manitoba fastnesses—is quite a rarity in its old haunts, and I doubt if one can now be come upon without a difficult and tedious journey of at least 300 miles into the interior wilderness of the province.

The grizzly has met with almost as hard a fate as the buffalo, although, from the nature and isolation of its present retreats and the difficulties attendant on hunting and trapping for it, the grizzly bear, like the Manitoba moose, will never become extinct in that country. I believe that the moose, although the flesh of 2,000 of them is required to supply the military stations in the territory alone with fresh meat every year, is as plentiful today in its wild retreats as it has been at any time since the great inroads of fur and pelt hunter were begun in the territory.

I know no reason why the grizzly bear of the Manitoba Rockies should grow so much larger than the grizzly of the same mountains in the States, but a long and varied experience in hunting these animals in their respective localities has proved to me that such is the fact. No grizzly bear that I ever captured or that I ever knew to be captured south of Manitoba measured more than 7½ feet from muzzle to tail, or weighed more than 1,200 pounds. But it was no uncommon thing in the palmy days of grizzly bears in Manitoba for the hunter or trapper to be confronted by one of these monsters 9 feet in length and with a bulk of 1,500 pounds or more. I have seen Manitoba grizzlies that when they threw themselves on their haunches and rose erect towered five feet and six feet above me, and I want to tell you that it takes a man with a large quantity and the best quality of nerve to stand in that tremendous presence and prepared to do battle coolly and with a level head.

Grizzly bears, like all the rest of the bear family, have the curious habit of rising against a tree, and, reaching up as far as they can with their fore paws, making marks in the bark by digging it with their claws. I have more than once come across these measuring marks of a grizzly, as the marks on the bark are called, 12 feet above the ground. Imagine coming suddenly upon a beast like that in some deep ravine or isolated spot almost impassable owing to the down timber heaped and tangled on the ground and surrounded by rocks and thick underbrush. The sight of his great jaws, open and red, and his eyes flashing in fury at you from the enormous head that towers so far above you, is something only to be appreciated when once seen.

When there were buffaloes on the plains, Manitoba grizzly bears were keen and persistent hunters of them. When a grizzly and a buffalo met, there was sure to be a fearful contest, although it seldom lasted long, and the buffalo was usually the victim. The buffalo bull, when confronted by a bear, would invariably charge ferociously upon its big and ugly foe. This was just what the bear desired, and he awaited, erect on his haunches, the onset of the buffalo. As the latter rushed forward with lowered head and was almost upon the bear the immense grizzly threw himself quickly to one side, and with a blow as quick as lightning with one of his great forepaws seldom failed to break his antagonist's neck. A Manitoba grizzly has been known to engage in rapid succession four and even five infuriated buffalo bulls and kill every one of them. It sometimes happened, though, that a bull younger and more agile than his companion succeeded in evading the fatal blow of the grizzly's terrible paw long enough to give in turn a deadly thrust of his horn into the bear's side, puncturing his vitals and making the contest a mutual slaughter.

In general characteristics, of course, the Manitoba grizzly is not in any way different from others of the family. While I believe that a grizzly bear will sometimes wait and precipitate a fight with a man and take pains to put himself in the way of one, in the great majority of cases he will take a second thought about the matter and back out. A queer instance of this disposition came to my knowledge once where a famous Manitoba guide courageously advanced upon three grizzlies, an old she one and two half grown cubs, and, by a series of ridiculous monkeyshines and acrobatic maneuvers within a rod or two of the threatening bears, filled them with such astonishment and apparent fear that they retreated to the woods as fast as they could go.

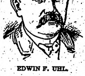
The hunter's gun had snapped in both barrels, he having drawn on the old bear before the young ones came upon the scene. It was in a fit of desperation that he tried the turning of a handspring and jumping up and down, clapping his hands and resorting to other unhunterlike measures. He had been told once that a hunter had frightened a mountain lion away by similar absurd movements, and he found that it worked to perfection in the case of the three grizzly bears, but he never, even in the face of that fact, advised or encouraged any one to go hunting Manitoba or any other kind of grizzlies armed with nothing more than a capacity to turn grotesque somersaults.—New York Sun.

A public library and literary resort exclusively for the blind has been opened in Chicago

A MICHIGAN DEMOCRAT.

Secretary Gresham's New Assistant In the State Department.

Edwin F. Uhl, the new assistant secretary of state, is a resident of Grand Rapids and has twice been mayor of the city, that being the only public office he has ever held, though he has long been prominent in the Democratic party. He was a delegate at large to the national Democratic convention in Chicago in 1892 and was a member of the committee on platform. He made a speech there, placing before the convention the name of Michigan's candidate for the vice presidency, Judge Morse.



EDWIN F. UHL.

Mr. Uhl is an intimate personal and political friend of Don M. Dickinson. He is a lawyer with a large practice and is the attorney of the Michigan Central Railroad company and president of the Grand Rapids National bank. He is Michigan's vice president of the American Bankers' association, which recently met in Chicago. He has accumulated a comfortable fortune from the emoluments of his legal practice and shrewd investments, and the meager salary of his position, $3,500, is considered to be one of the least of the inducements that led him to accept office.

The power and patronage attaching to his post are great, however, or will be great if the same conditions prevail that obtained during Mr. Josiah Quincy's incumbency. That gentleman exercised a supervision over all our foreign consulates and in most cases practically decided the question of appointments to that branch of the government service. There are not many very desirable appointments left to be made, but the honor of acting as the chief assistant of the secretary of state and as the official head of the department in the secretary's absence will no doubt be some compensation for the dearth of appointments to be made.

Mr. Uhl is a native of Michigan and about 50 years of age. He was born near Ann Arbor and educated there at the Michigan university, taking the law school course and degree after graduating from the academic department. He is said to have refused an appointment as assistant secretary of war last spring.

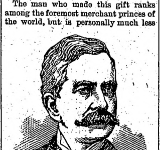
MUNIFICENT MILLIONAIRES.

The Generosity of Chicago's Wealthy Citizens—A Recent Case In Point.

How would the "City of Magnificent Donations" do for a new nickname for Chicago? Hardly a month goes by without one or more of her many public spirited wealthy citizens donating a nice pot of money to found or foster some institution of scientific utility or practical benevolence in the community where they have amassed their fortunes, and it looks sometimes as if there were an emulative competition between them as to who should be foremost in the number and amount of his gifts.

Marshall Field's magnificent gift of $1,000,000 for the endowment of the Columbian Memorial museum is a recent case in point. Some of the World's fair directors wanted to found a museum where the scientific collections made for them could be properly and permanently housed and cared for. In canvassing the matter they discovered that they could add many of the valuable private collections exhibited at the fair if the proposed museum was established. Then they appealed to Marshall Field, and his generosity has made secure the foundation of an institution unrivaled either in the United States or abroad.

The man who made this gift ranks among the foremost merchant princes of the world, but is personally much less pretentious than a great many of his thousands of employees. The trade of his house extends all over the west, and his sales aggregate upward of $30,000,000 annually, while his imports are shown by the custom house records to exceed those of any other merchant in the country.



MARSHALL FIELD.

Mr. Field is a native of Massachusetts, where he was born in 1835. He went to Chicago in 1856 and has been there ever since. His mercantile house is the result of efforts put forth during the early years of the civil war, and the profits piled up then laid the basis of his enormous fortune. He is reserved in manner, but very public spirited and active in all movements looking to the betterment of public interests and affairs. He has very decided opinions as to the duties of a citizen and lives up to them.

Thin Veneering.

Few people have an idea how thin a sheet of veneer may be cut with the aid of improved machinery. There is a firm in Paris which makes a business of cutting veneers, and to such perfection have they brought it that from a single tusk 30 inches long they will cut a sheet of ivory 150 inches long and 20 inches wide. Some of the sheets of rosewood and mahogany are only about a fiftieth of an inch in thickness.

RAILROAD SCRAP IRON.

It is Carefully Saved, Assorted and Then Sold by the Companies.

Nothing goes to waste on a big railroad; and every scrap of iron and much secondhand material is valued at a fixed price and carried on the books as so much stock on hand. The system followed by the storekeeper's department of one railroad is a sample of many. The secondhand metals are gathered and placed in piles, regularly assorted.

Then they are classified by the foreman and taken into stock by the storekeeper or assistant. There are regular schedules—one of material which can be used again, which is denominated secondhand, and another of material which has to be melted before it can be used, which is known as scrap.

The classes are arranged something after the following order: Steel scrap, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6, at prices ranging from $23 a ton down; wrought iron, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4; cast iron, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4. Even borings are taken into account, brass borings being credited at eight cents per pound and brass scrap and copper at twelve.

This material is shipped to division headquarters when a carload has accumulated. Here it is disposed of by the storekeeper on order of his chief, being shipped in carloads to big dealers in old metals in large cities. Much of it goes to Pittsburg, Cincinnati and such points. Orders for as high as 500,000 pounds of one kind of material are occasionally received from single firms. Most of the secondhand material is used over again in the shops, but it is previously taken on the books at a fixed price by the storekeeper and is charged up to the account of the articles for which it is used. All usable No. 1 wrought iron is received and charged up at 1¼ cents a pound, and cast iron at one cent.—Philadelphia Call.

Cannibalism In Saghalien.

The Vladivostock, a newspaper published in eastern Siberia, reveals a terrible state of affairs among the convicts on the island of Saghalien. It would appear that the convicts there have been treated by some of the subordinate prison authorities so harshly that the governor of the island has been obliged to interfere for their protection.

A warder named Khanoff and some of his assistants, who at one time were convicts themselves and had been raised to the rank of jailers, have been removed from their posts. Khanoff's treatment of the prisoners was so abominable that a number of them crippled themselves, cutting off fingers and toes, in order to be treated as invalids and to be freed from his terrible cruelties. Others fled to the impenetrable forest, where they suffered all the horrors of hunger.

In a satchel belonging to a fugitive convict who had been hunted down were found some pieces of human flesh. Investigation revealed that this man had been one of a party of four, and that only one of them now remained. The others had been killed and devoured by their comrades. Similar cases of cannibalism are, according to the Siberian journal, not infrequent.

In Frozen Russia.

In Russia, where the cold is very intense, the markets are very curious things. The meat is frozen; the carcases of dead animals, as sheep and pigs, stand upright outside the stalls; everything, even game and poultry, requires to be thawed before it can be cooked, and the market people's dress is as picturesque as it is warm and comfortable.

Then the rivers are frozen over all the winter long, and so thick is the ice that every one can skate, anywhere and any time. Stalls are put up on the ice and busy markets held there.

In the Asiatic part of Russia the people live chiefly by hunting and fishing, and the fur of the Russian animals is very beautiful—the ermine, fox, sable, sea otter and others.

At the end of the winter, when the snow melts, the huntsman pursues the elk, wearing long shoes, in which he can glide over the snow very quickly, while the poor elk sinks into the snow deeper and deeper every step and is at last overtaken and killed.—Good Words.

A Widow.

Our house servant is a Japanese, polite as are most of his race. Among his duties is taking care of the chickens. One day he chanced to find a nest of fine eggs at the barn, away from the chicken yard, contributed by a hen that had escaped from the others, and as a consequence the eggs were not fertile. In ignorance of this fact, however, an old lady of our household—a widow—immediately put a hen to "set" on them. Biddy stuck to business, but to no purpose. When the required time had more than elapsed, the lady was very much put out and puzzled that no chickens had been hatched. Turning to the Jap, she said, "What do you suppose is the matter of those eggs, George?" George (bowing low): "Excuse me, ma'am, excuse me, but I t'ink [bows again], I t'ink that hen was a widow." Widow satisfied.—California Review.

Told at the Liars' Club.

"No sooner was I seated in the chair than the barber commented on the weather and directed a current of discourse into my ears.

"'Je ne comprend pas,' said I, with an inward chuckle, thinking his volubility would be checked.

"In very good French he started in afresh. I looked at him as if bewildered and then interrupted him by asking:

"'Was sagen Sie?'

"He began to repeat in German all that he had been saying, when I shut him off with:

"'Oh, talk to me with your fingers. I'm deaf and dumb!'"—Truth.

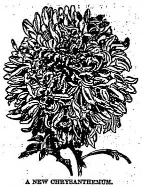
PROFIT IN FLOWERS.

AS A COMMERCIAL PURSUIT FLORICULTURE IS INCREASING RAPIDLY.

Quality of Blooms and Standard of Taste Constantly Rising In America—For Many Floriculture Has Been a Certain Road to Fortune—Interesting Figures.

The extent and significance of the growth of floriculture as a business in the United States during the past few years is but dimly apprehended by most people. It is fully comprehended only by the large growers of flowers, who, in the pursuit of this occupation, have reaped the double rewards of solid financial success and the privilege of passing their time amid the most beautiful products of inanimate nature.

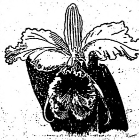


A NEW CHRYSANTHEMUM.

It were useless to try to accurately measure the present extent of this business, for according to President Manda of the New York Florists' club and other floriculturists the increase since 1890, when figures were obtained by the census bureau, has been much more rapid than ever before. It is in some quarters, indeed, held that the volume of business has doubled in the last three years.

In 1890 there were 4,659 establishments in the United States devoted to the raising of flowers, employing 16,847 men and 1,958 women. It cost about $1,000,000 a year to buy the coal burned in maintaining a temperate heat in the greenhouses, and their managers expended about $1,250,000 in advertising. For postage on their catalogues, circulars and business correspondence $750,000 more was at that time expended annually, and the yearly sales of cut flowers and shrubs aggregated $26,211,805.77. The growth of floriculture by private individuals has grown in like proportions, and the amount of money permanently invested and annually expended in this direction must be enormous—greater indeed in relation to the flowers grown than in commercial floriculture, where the utmost possible economy of time, money and space is scientifically applied. The attention paid to flowers and ornamental shrubs by municipal authorities has also increased materially. Of American cities, Chicago probably spends most money on flowers in the public parks, while Boston's expenditures are considered to be in the best taste. New York is behind many cities in this regard, although its collection of trees in Central park is a notable and interesting one.

This increase in the production of flowers has come of course in response to a popular demand—a demand that has undoubtedly received much stimulus from the constantly growing beauty and profusion of the blooms, for in some directions the florists of America are now the most accomplished in the world. The chrysanthemum, for instance, which is a native of Japan and was carefully cultivated for many years in England before any scientific attention was paid to it here, is nowhere else produced in such beauty as in the United States. This is also true of the carnation, and as for the queen of flowers, the rose, the development here has distanced even the wonderful roses of France, the American varieties being the despair of rose growers in every other land. Within the past few years, in fact, the exportations of rare plants and flowers from this country have exceeded the imports, the excess this year being very large.



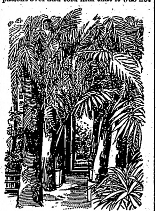
A NEW ORCHID.

With the increase in demand has come a gradual elevation of taste, and the gaudy "carpet beds," at one time so great a fad, are being displaced by a much saner, less obtrusive arrangement of flowering plants. There is no doubt that this improvement in taste has been greatly fostered by the botanical gardens at Washington, Harvard university, Amherst and Cornell and the Shaw gardens at St. Louis. The growth of a love for beautiful trees, closely allied to the love of flowers, has been promoted largely by the various arboreal collections of the country, among which the Arnold arboretum at Cambridge, Mass., and the parks of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and other cities stand at the head. But it is undoubtedly true that the men who have gone into the commercial growing of flowers and trees and shrubs have contributed the strongest influence toward this change for the better in the popular taste. In many instances the florists of today are men of culture and education, and their daily familiarity with the beautiful products of their labors tends to constantly improve their artistic perceptions.

If the raising of flowers were not a most profitable occupation, such men could not afford to engage in it, and, as a matter of fact, floriculture has long been one of the surest avenues to the rapid acquisition of wealth. Several of the notable fortunes of the country have been won through its prosecution, notably at Rochester, for years famous as the Flower City after the Minneapolis mills had destroyed its right to its old time title of the Flour City. The cultivation of flowers in the suburbs of the great cities of New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, etc., in great profusion, is, however, a growth of the past 20 years. In the vicinity of New York especially its proportions have now become enormous, and there is a region in the Orange mountains of New Jersey, 20 miles inland, where flower growing is by all odds the leading industry of several towns. Roses, chrysanthemums, orchids, carnations and violets are the specialties there, and so advantageously placed by Dame Nature are the sunlit southern slopes of the hills that the blooms produced are of extraordinary size and rare beauty.

It is estimated by Mr. Manda, whom I have before quoted in this article, that the various greenhouses between Morristown and Orange, on the slopes of the Orange mountains, are roofed with about 100 acres of glass, and some idea of the extent of the business done may be obtained from the fact that during the rose season, which lasts from Oct. 1 to May 1, the daily shipment of buds averaged last year not less than 40,000. Floriculture for profit in that locality grew out of the success that attended the efforts of the gardeners employed by a number of New York business men who found homes on the mountain side, and one of the most extensive establishments, devoted largely to chrysanthemums and orchids, has been built up around a nucleus formed by the private greenhouse of a New York millionaire. Many of the cut flowers furnished to New York are raised by growers in many outlying towns, and this is also true of every big city. The lily of the valley, so popular this year, is almost entirely the product of small establishments.

Some of the stories of the rapid making of money by men who have undertaken the cultivation and sale of flowers are veritable romances of business success. Here is one:



TREE FERNS FROM AUSTRALIA.

In the spring of 1882 a business man of 70, who was located in a small town in Ohio, was obliged, by reason of the failing strength that comes with old age, to go to his physician for advice. The man of medicine looked his prospective patient over and told him that it was not pills or powders that were needed, but some pleasant occupation for the hours not devoted to business, winding up his talk by advising him to build and himself attend to a small greenhouse. The advice was accepted, and in a very short time the business man began to see that it was good. His strength returned; his sleep came back; his interest in his greenhouse grew. As it grew he took up the study of botany. One day he was advised to make a shipment to Chicago of some fine roses that he had grown under his glass. Their sale was instant upon their arrival at the lake metropolis, and in a short time the orders outran the supply. Then more greenhouses were built, a trained gardener was engaged, and last year, when the old gentleman, whose life had been prolonged to 80 years by his new found occupation, died, his greenhouses numbered eight, and the annual net income therefrom had grown to between $3,000 and $4,000. Many prominent men of the day, who have not cared to turn their love for flowers to commercial advantage, have retained their health and vigor by hours daily spent among favorite plants, conspicuous examples being Charles A. Dana and the late Jay Gould.

The flower shows of these days have come to be among the leading events of the social season in all the large cities, and those held this fall in New York, Chicago and elsewhere have not been less attractive or well attended than their predecessors, notwithstanding the financial depression of the present year. The chrysanthemum is the main stay of the autumn exhibitions, as is the rose of the spring shows, and at both the orchid is prominent. Of this most interesting flower America boasts many noted private collections, chief among which are those of the estate of the late F. L. Ames of Boston, Erastus Corning of Albany, W. S. Kimball of Rochester, C. G. Roebling of Trenton, Henry Graves of Orange, N. J.; Hicks Arnold of New York, H. H. Hunnewell of Wellesley, Mass., and the Gould family of New York.

The expense to which some of these fanciers go to gratify their taste for rare flowers is very great. The orchid hunter's adventures in the jungles of Asia are as thrilling as those of the man who goes to shoot tigers and lions and elephants. Some of the commercial growers expend large sums and search the ends of the earth for rarities in ornamental shrubs. The tree ferns, of which a picture is given here, were brought at heavy expense from Australia, where they had been growing in the wilderness for fully 700 or 800 years before they were taken up and brought on a three months' journey half way round the world to be replanted under glass on the slope of the Orange mountains.

CHORUS of St. Paul and Minneapolis morning papers: Where are we at?" However did the Journal Menage to get that scoop?

FRANCIS H. WEEKS, the New York embezzler, was sentenced to ten years imprisonment in the Sing Sing prison. This is said to be about one year for every million dollars that he stole.

A. L. GRAY, the special agent sent to investigate the gold rumors in the Rainy Lake region will report gold in paying quantities and will recommend that the government withdraw all lands from settlement except under the laws governing mineral lands.

LAST week Judge Canty gave a decision in Minneapolis, holding that water rents were a lien on property. A distiling company purchased some property in Minneapolis, the former owner of which owed the city for water, and the city refused to turn the water on for the new owner until the old bill had been paid. The matter was taken into court, and the judge decided that the water rent was a lien on the property, and all the arreages will therefore have to be paid before the city is obliged to turn on the water. If this decision holds good and is recognized as the law, it will be a good thing for parties renting property will then see that there are no arrearges for water rent against the property.

We take the following from the Minneapolis Evening Journal without comment as it speaks for itself:

No one can help but approve the policy which you are pursuing in recommending diversified farming in place of exclusive wheat raising. You will recall my correspondence about a year ago in the Journal on "The Future of Wheat." Every proposition which I made at that time has been fulfilled, notwithstandinfi the opposition of friend C. Wood Davis, of Peotone, Kan. There is a sort of half formed understanding, or assumption among the masses that in business there is a sort of occultism; a sort of witchcraft which is understood and practiced by some, but that the average man is unable to grasp, and therefore these things cannot be foretold. The laws of commerce, of human intercourse in trade, are as well defined as the laws of nature, and are as inexorable in their operations. Cause always brings its adequate and natural effect. But it is a fact that the great majority of people do not go deep enough to understand either causes or effects. I had this illustrated a little while ago very plainly. I addressed the farmers at the Campbell county, South Dakota, fair, about a month ago. Among other things I tried to impress on their minds that we are not raising as good stock as we should raise, and that was one reason why stock raising was not as remunerative as it might be made with better judgment. I took the market price of five different grades of steers at Chicago on a certain day, as illustrated below. For illustration, I take now the market price of the same five different kinds of steers as reported in the Chicago market on the 8th day of November. Steers averaging the following weights brought the following average prices in that market on that day:

Averaging 1,650 lbs; per 100 lbs	$ 5.60
steer brought	92.40
Averaging 1,400 lbs; per 100 lbs.	4.90
steer brought	68.60
Averaging 1,300 lbs; per 100 lbs.	4.35
steer brought	56.55
Averaging 1,200 lbs; per 100 lbs.	3.82
steer brought	45.84
Averaging 1,000 lbs; per 100 lbs.	3.22
steer brought	32.20

The reader will perceive that there is a difference between the best and the poorest in this list of $60.20. A local paper here published the report of what I said on this matter, and a good many spoke to me, saying that they knew there was a difference in price between good and poor steers, but they never realized that it was so much. The fact is that they never thought in that direction. Now, how many farmers, what percentage, are there of such, as have figured this down to the point?

But as a matter of fact, there are but few steers shipped away from here who even go into the fifth grade. If any one doubts this, let him examine the twin city and Sioux City market reports.

I said to the assembled farmers at that fair: "You will no doubt tell me that you cannot raise the best steers here. If so, will you tell me why not? All steers eat grass, hay and corn. Hundreds of thousands of tons of hay and grass are going to waste in this region. Your exhibit here shows that you do raise good corn, and that you can raise it if you try. You have both the corn and the grass. Then I ask you, are you not as intelligent as those who do raise that kind of stock? Are you deficient in brain developement? When brains were dealt out did you not get your share? If you have brain developement, then the only reason that you do not raise the highest grade of steers is that you do not get the right breed, do not investigate what is possible to do, do not understand your business and I stand here to draw your attention to the possibilities. $92.40 steer will sell quicker in any good market than a $20 one. Six steamers of heavy capacity are now in progress of construction (some of them are now running); between England and the Chesapeake bay, which are especially fitted for carrying such stock and the supply of that grade of steers falls far short of the demand."

Here is an object lesson for the farmers of this region. The American runs too much after politics, and the things which amount to nothing and does not dig down to the things which would be of benefit of all. Our grain palace here has demonstrated beyond question that we can raise even dent corn profitably. One prominent farmer of this township planted some sweet corn which rotted in the ground; did not germinate. On the 21st day of June he replanted the ground with common corn. The palace opened on the 11th day of September. He had the corn grown between the above two dates on exhibition, and it was good corn and yielded a fair crop.

Another one makes it a practice to put in potatoes. This year he had 30 acres. He says that he sold them, received back all the expenses that he was put to, and the profit on the 30 acres was a ronnd $1,000. No one man has a patent on these things. The conditions are open to all. Those who do not avail themselves of the advantages offered are themselves to blame. Our politicians, especially the populist branch of them, overrun the country through their agents and speakers. Whoever has heard them say a word in the line here present? They go on the rostrum and tell the farmers that they are oppressed, and advise them to so vote as to put down the thrifty and intelligent, but never a word do they say to their followers as to how to better their conditions by doing rational farming, and how to take advantage of the circumstances, by which they are surrounded.

While wheat is cheap, nearly all other farm products bring a good price. Good beef cattle, such as I described, are scarce, and they bring a very good price. Pork brings a fair price, and we have not a single competitor on the earth in the production of pork and hog products. Dairy products are both high and scarce. Eggs and poultry bring remunerative prices, and so through the list. The road to prosperity for our farmers lies in the direction of diversified farming, and the subject cannot be presented to them too often. He who does it is a public benefactor.

E. BACH,
Aberdeen, S. D., Nov. 10.

FOILED THE ROBBERS.

Attempt to Hold Up an Omaha Train Frustrated.

WORTHINGTON, Minn., Nov. 14.—A daring attempt was made to wreck the Omaha train from Sioux City about two miles west of here. John Iverson, walking on the track, discovered men working upon the track, and, upon seeing him, they fired two shots, one passing through his hat, and one through his leg. Then they robbed him of $350 and left him for dead in the ditch. He became conscious and crawlad to Sioux Falls Junction, where the agent sent warning to trains east and stopped Train No. 3. Iverson was taken on and brought here. The wreckers had removed the angle bars and spikes, but a train running slowly passed safeley. Iverson lost a gold watch which, with his empty wallet, was found in the morning. Iverson received a bullet in his leg from a 32-calibre revolver which was purchased here. Excitement is high.

TEN YEARS AT SING SING.

Francis H. Weeks Pleads Guilty and Receives Sentence.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—Francis H. Weeks was sentenced to ten years imprisonment in Sing Sing prison. He pleaded guilty on arraignment and the entire proceedings did not occupy five minutes.

District Attorney Nicoll explained to the recorder that when Weeks was brought into court that the prisoner had been remanded for a week on Friday last by Judge Martin, at Weeks' request, but that Weeks, who was under five indictments, had asked to be permitted to plead guilty to one of these charging him with grand larceny of $72,300, the property of Clemence S. B. Fish, (Mrs. Nicholas Fish), which he held in trust. Sentence was then pronounced.

MENAGE CAUGHT.

The Guarantee Loan Swindler Arrested in Guatemala.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 14.—Louis F. Menage, the defaulting president of the Minneapolis Guarantee Loan company, who embezzled nearly $1,000,000 from that concern and departed for unknown parts, has been arrested in Guatemala on instructions from Secretary of State Gresham. There is no extradition treaty with Guatemala, and it is possible that there may be considerable delay in securing him, but the probability is that his return will be granted, as another republic granted the return of Weeks. A few weeks will probably see him in Minneapolis at the bar of justice.

RUSK IMPROVING.

Uncle Jerry's Condition Reported Much Better.

VIROQUA, Wis., Nov. 9.—The condition of General Rusk, which has given his family and physicians much anxiety during the past 24 hours, is said to be materially improved. On the arrival of Dr. Hamilton of Chicago, ex-surgeon general of the United States, a consultation with local physicians was held and a surgical operation was decided upon. The operation was performed during the afternoon, and at 6 o'clock, when the correspondent called at the residence, he was assured by members of the family that the patient had rallied from the effects of the operation and was resting comfortably.

Might Deceive the Ignorant.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—Solicitor General Reese has decided that the use of aluminum tokens by merchants of Elkton, S. D., in trade, is illegal because the tokens are of the shape, size and color of United States coins, and apt to deceive the ignorant.

DUNN'S BUDGET.

Interesting News and Gossip from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, November 13.—It really does look as if the people had enough of the proposed tariff reform that we have heard so much about, or rather as if they wish they hadn't done it a year ago. Old Abe said that you might be able to fool all of the people some of the time, and some of the people all the time, but you could not fool all the people all the time. That is the way with the democratic party. It promised that if it was given full power it would remedy all evils. It lied and humbugged the people. The people have found it out.

How about McKinley for President? He would make a good one. But it is to be feared that the politicians will combine against him as they combined against Blaine in the past and prevent his nomination. William McKinley would sweep the country in 1896.

Don't you believe that silver had anything to do with it. There have always been more republicans in favor of sound money than Democrats. There were more Republicans voting for repeal than Democrats. It was not a financial wave. It was a protest against free trade or slaughter of the tariff. And the democrats here are already hedging. They will materially modify the bill since the election.

Representative Tawney of the first district always was somewhat doubtful about the proper policy to pursue on the silver question, and he got around it very nicely on the last vote. He had himself paired with Lawson, of Georgia, who was already paired with Taylor, of Tennessee. Jim is shrewd enough to catch them either way. Those lawyers make sharp politicians.

The democratic office holders are the bluest lot you ever saw. They all have elaborate explanations of how it all happened. Local issues, they say, and a dozen other things besides, but none of them say it is because the people are disgusted wth the democratic party. The office holders would not be blue if they did not know that it means that their lease of official pap is not for all time, but only four years.

I wonder if Commissioner Lochren appreciates the fact that the old soldier is alive, and that he resents the injuries and insults of a southern secretary and his underlings against his old comrades? There are many good lessons to be learned from the election.

A recent report of the engineer officers of the army showed that the navigation of the Mississippi was due now to the system of reservoirs at the headwaters of the river. Commenting on that fact the other day, an official said that the location of the reservoirs was due to the persistency and never yielding efforts of Senator Washburn while he was a member of the House. Senator Washburn has a number of friends who are still in the House who knew him when he was a member of that body. They remember the hard work he did for the reservoirs and also the persistent manner in which he pursued anything he was after, until he had secured it. I have often wondered at the warm friendship existing between men who have served together in congress. There is scarcely anything, that members of the House who knew Washburn when he was a member of that body, would not do for him now.

About Tariffs.

Several hundred years ago, on the southern-most point of the province of Cadiz, Spain, there was (and is yet) a small town called Tarifa. Situated at about the narrowest part of the Straits of Gibralter, it was the northern port of the trade carried on between Spain and Africa. The Moors, who then dominated Southern Spain, levied tribute on the vessels engaged in the trade, and this exaction, from the place where it was practiced, was called a "tariff." Hence the schedule of duties now levied by most nations on imports, are called a tariff on the same. Among the important political questions which have divided the people of the United States, since the beginning, the tariff has always been very prominent. "Protection," "free trade" and "tariff for revenue only," have been rallying cries for our political parties. But there are other tariffs than these. A schedule of the rates charged by a railroad for the transportation of passengers or freight between various points is called a tariff; and some of them, from the great number of articles, and the numerous stations reached, are complicated and bulky affairs. If you wish to know where is the most reasonable tariff of passenger rates, considering accommodations and conveniences obtainable, apply to any ticket agent of the Burlington Route, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Ontario, Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

Catarrh, not Local but Constitutional,

Dr. Dio Lewis, the eminent Boston physican, in a magazine article says: "A radical error underlies nearly all medical treatment of catarrh. It is not a disease of the man's nose; it is a disease of the man showing itself in the nose—a local exhibition of a constitutional trouble." Therefore, he argues, the use of snuff and other local applications is wrong, and while they seem to give temporary relief they really do more harm than good. Other leading athorities agree with Dr. Lewis. Hence, the only proper method of cure for catarrh is by taking a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which reaching every part of the body through the blood, does eliminate all impurities and makes the whole man healthier. It removes the cause of the trouble and restores the diseased membrane to proper conditions. That this is the practical result is proven by thousands of people who have been cured of catarrh by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Storm Prophet Hick's Paper.

Many persons know of Rev. Irl R. Hicks, the noted storm prophet, but are not so well acquainted with the fact that his monthly paper, Word and Works, is one of the most attractive and instructive journals in America and is doing more to educate the people in science than any other. It not only contains Rev. Hicks' monthly forecasts, complete and unabridged, but also articles from his pen on astronomy and planetary meteorology, finely illustrated. There is a sermon or religious article in each number, a "Home Sweet Home" department, edited by a lady, a "Youth and Beauty" department for boys and girls, "Queries" for those who want hard nuts cracked and many other good things. All this for the low price of $1 per year. All subscribers who pay for a year's subscription in advance before February 1st, 1894, will receive free, as a premium, Rev. Irl R. Hicks' almanac for 1894. This book alone is well worth the subscription price. Send six cents for a sample copy of the paper or send $1 for year's subscription to Word and Works Pub. Co., St. Louis, Mo.

A Racking Cough

Cured by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Mrs. P. D. HALL, 217 Genesee St., Lockport, N. Y., says:

"Over thirty years ago, I remember hearing my father describe the wonderful curative effects of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. During a recent attack of La Grippe, which assumed the form of a catarrh, soreness of the lungs, accompanied by an aggravating cough, I used various remedies and prescriptions. While some of these medicines partially alleviated the coughing during the day, none of them afforded me any relief from that spasmodic action of the lungs which would seize me the moment I attempted to lie down at night. After ten or twelve such nights, I was and had about decided to sit up all night in my easy chair, and procure what sleep I could in that way. It then occurred to me that I had a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took a spoonful of this preparation in a little water, and was able to lie down without coughing. In a few moments I fell asleep, and awoke in the morning greatly refreshed and feeling much better. I took a teaspoonful of the Pectoral every night for a week, then gradually decreased the dose, and in two weeks my cough was cured."

Early Winter Costume In Magenta and Black.

Magenta and black is a color combination which will stand unrivaled for early winter. The illustration shows a stylish Early Winter Costume where these colors are combined.

The skirt is the new umbrella skirt, made full and lined six inches up from the bottom with buckram. This gives the spreading effect which fashion seems to command. The gown is made of a soft magenta shade of faced cloth. The skirt trimmed with narrow rows of black silk braid. Encircling the waist are three bands of black velvet forming a belt and tied in a bow at the side. The tight-fitting waist is trimmed with a plaited flounce of the cloth, striped with the black braid. The flounce extends over the shoulders and is so draped that the waist appears with a V-shaped yoke. Narrow bands of the braid form a collar which fastens at the side. The sleeves of the costume are unusually pretty. The upper part consists of a full puff. Below this the sleeve is tight fitting, and near the wrist striped with diagonal bands of black braid. Each band is finished with a tiny rosette of black velvet. The waist is separate from the skirt. It is best to have two waists which can be worn with the same skirt. One for street wear and one for the house. The house waist may be made from the same pattern only in a light shade of India or China silk. Then the ruffle which defines the yoke should be unusually full to give a fluffy effect.

Lady's Waist Pattern, No. 3731, is cut in 5 sizes, for ladies from 32 to 40 inches bust measure, and requires, for the medium size 2¾ yards material 44 inches wide, or 4½ yards 27 inches. Price 25 cents.

Lady's Skirt Pattern No. 3727 is cut in 5 sizes, for ladies from 22 to 30 inches waist measure, and requires, for the medium size, 5¼ yards material 44 inches wide, or 5⅝ yards 27 inches. Price 30 cents.

OLEOMARGERINE LAW VALID.

The Supreme Court Passes Upon the Constitutionality of the Act.

The supreme court, in a decision handed down by Judge Collins, decided that chapter 11, general laws of 1891, prohibiting the sale of any imitation of butter unless it shall be colored a bright pink, is valid as a legitimate exercise of the police powers of the state, reversing the order of the lower court in Duluth, where the case was tried. The supreme court further states that the sale of imitation butter is a misdemeanor, subject to the penalty prescribed in the law, which is a fine of $50 for the first offense and $100 for the second. The butterine or oleomargerine is to be seized by the dairy commissioner or his employes and sold under order of the court for some purpose other than use as butter, and the proceeds turned into the state treasury.

Suicided While Traveling.

JAMESTOWN, N. D., Nov. 14.—As the eastbound train on the Northern Pacific was coming into the city, H. W. Jones of Newburg, Mo., stepped out on the platform of the car and shot himself. The ball entered the ear, producing death immediately. Jones had a ticket in his pocket from Tacoma to St. Louis.

Bismarck Better.

BERLIN, Nov. 18.—Prince Bismarck is reported to be fairly well, though the effects of his recent illness are still apparent. Visitors, therefore, are seldom received by the prince, who has just refused to grant an interview to a leading French journalist, who asked the ex-chancellor to express his views upon the effect of the Franco-Russian alliance.

MOVEMENT OF WHEAT

UNPRECEDENTEDLY RAPID MARKETING OF THE CROP.

Of the Eighty Million Bushels Over Two-thirds Is Out of the Hands of Farmers. Balance Scarcely Sufficient For the Needs of Northwestern Millers—Some of the Causes.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 18.—The Pioneer Press publishes the following regarding the movement of the wheat crop:

The heavy movement of wheat in the Northwest this fall, considering the fact that the crop is generally conceded to be a short one, has attracted widespread attention and given rise to considerable discussion. The majority of the estimates agree on 100,000,000 bushels as representing the yield for 1893 in Minnesota and the Dakotas. Deducting about 20,000,000 bushels, the needs and requirements for bread and seed, and it leaves 80,000,000 bushels as the amount which was available for market purposes at the commencement of the season, Aug. 1, 1893.

From that date to the close of business on Saturday last there had been received in round numbers at Minneapolis about 19,900,000 bushels, and at Duluth, including Superior, 16,000,000 bushels. Northwestern interior mills of all descriptions are estimated to have absorbed 7,750,000 bushels, and the amount which has gone out to Chicago and other markets from that portion of Southern Minnesota and South Dakota not directly tributary to our markets placed at 3,500,000 bushels. The amount in store in Northwest country elevators is about 5,000,000 bushels, the aggregate of these figures being 52,150,000 bushels, indicating the portion of the available 80,000,000 bushels which has left the farmers' hands, leaving a balance of about 28,000,000 bushels to be disposed of during the balance of the crop year, a period of eight and one-half months.

Several Causes For It.

Several causes have contributed to this condition, primarily the farmers' debts. The obligations of the farmer for agricultural machinery and lumber fall due in October and November; then there are the store debts contracted during the growing season and the harvesting and threshing period. The expenses of the farmer do not increase or decrease with the rise and fall of the markets, hence his money needs are approximately the same each season. With good prices he can discharge his pressing obligations without exhausting his whole crop, but with present present prices he is obliged to sell almost double the ordinary quantity of grain to accomplish the same result. Under strained business conditions such as have obtained lately, little leniency is shown by the creditors, and to satisfy their clamorous demands he has been forced to sacrifice his grain at current prices.

It is asserted that in some localities the supply is practically exhausted; this is undoubtedly true in those sections occupied by the more indigent farmers.

Although prices are abnormally low, there appears to be no immediate prospect of improvement. The visible supply is the great bugbear. Bradstreet makes the available supply in the United States and Canada on Nov. 4 last as 95,650,000 bushels, the heaviest on record at a like date, the nearest approach to it being a year ago, or 93,173,000 bushels. With the markets of Europe on a lower plane than our own, and a huge supply staring them in the face, it is hardly probable that a revival of exports will take place until the disparity in prices is removed.

Wheat Needed at Home.

It is clear, however, that no further considerable quantity of wheat can be spared from Northwest supplies in hand or in prospect, unless the estimate of the yield proves to be a grave error. It will be needed for milling purposes. There is now in store the following amounts in round figures: In regular elevators in Minneapolis, 9,250,000 bushels; in private elevators in Minneapolis, 650,000; in regular elevators in Duluth and Superior, 6,700,000; in country elevators, 5,000,000.

This aggregates a total of 21,000,000 bushels, which added to 28,000,000 now in the farmers' hands gives us a total supply to draw from of 49,600,000 bushels.

The ordinary milling needs of Minneapolis are estimated at 750,000 bushels per week, those of Duluth at 275,000, and at interior mills 350,000, a total weekly consumption of 1,375,000 bushels. At this rate the supplies required here in the 40 weeks to follow would be about 55,000,000 bushels, which not only indicates that the Northwest has no more grain to spare for the outside world, but that our home market will be comparatively high and strongly maintained. That this is anticipated is seen in the avidity with which all cash offerings are taken each day by Northwestern millers.

STEAMER FRAZER BURNED.

Eighteen Lives Lost by a Disaster on Lake Nipissing.

TORONTO, Nov. 9.—By the burning of the steamer Frazer on Lake Nipissing 19 persons lost their lives. The disaster occurred near Goose island, and in spite of the most strenuous efforts to save life the above number perished. Lake Nipissing is situated northeast of Lake Huron in Ontario, nearly midway between it and the Ottawa river, and it is supposed that the steamer was in regular service on the lake. Only the most meagre particulars are obtainable.

Slaughtered More Matabeles.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—A dispatch from Fort Victoria, from Dr. Jameson, says another battle has been fought between the British forces and 7,000 of the Matabeles. Only three were killed and seven wounded of the British force, while fully 1,000 Matabeles perished, and a complete rout followed.

OUT OF THE JAWS OF DEATH

BY FRANK BARRETT.

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY CASSELL & CO AND PUBLISHED BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT

CHAPTER V.

A BITTER REVENGE.

At the sound I instinctively crouched down as one does in expectation of a blow, and stretching out my hand I felt the rough splintered edge of the box. The significance of its being there was plain enough—the escape of Taras had been discovered, the men had followed us through the run and upheaving the box and stone had come up into the wharf cellar. Nor was I left for a moment in doubt, for as I dropped on my knees Putty cried out:

“Look out, mate! We've got him. The beggar's just tumbled over that bloomin box.”

Then the guttural voice of Drigo from the farther end replied in broken English:

“Knife him! Dead or alive, I'll give a hundred pounds for him.”

I strained my eyes in vain to penetrate the darkness. I could see nothing. Not a ray of light entered the cellar by the hole under the stairs. To cross the cellar and escape by the casement was out of the question. I dared not attempt it. I could not clamber into the opening without some noise which would betray my whereabouts to the villains, and before I could squeeze through the knife would be driven into me. I was not in a condition to reason that I might escape death by declaring at once that I was not Taras. I expected to be murdered for helping him to escape.

I dared not move, for I could not tell whether my enemies were before or behind me—to the left or to the right, but I held myself in readiness to spring away at the first touch, at a breath, which might warn me of their approach. Those moments of silence as the men waited for some fresh sound to guide them were terrible. Could that foreigner see in the dark better than I? Was he stealthily drawing upon me to wreak his vengeance? Anything was possible to a foreigner, I fancied at that time. Not the death that followed, but the actual horror of having a knife thrust into my body froze my blood.

Suddenly a flickering, luminous streak appeared in the black distance as Putty tried to strike a match. It was wet. He tried another, producing another blue streak.

“We must get a light somehow, or we shall get a-stickin one another,” he muttered. “Ain't you got 'ere a dry match, mate? Mine's all wet.”

To my increasing terror, Drigo made no reply, supporting my belief that he saw me and was preparing to cut me down. But after a few moments of terrible suspense another streak appeared in the darkness at some distance from the others. Drigo had found a match and was trying it. He was more successful. A green spark fell, and the sulphur began to bubble up into violent flame. It already threw a livid light on his hideous face and a gleam on the knife in his hand. In another moment I should be seen.

How could I escape? The casement was beyond them.

The steps were behind me, but I dared not turn my back on that knife. The box in front of me suggested a better means, and as Drigo raised the burning match, making the way clear, I shot across the intervening space and dropped down the shaft into the run. The light was so dim and my movement so rapid that I was not recognized by the men. They saw only a figure dash past and drop down the hole, and under the impression that it was Taras, as I knew by their cries, they gave chase in an instant, one—Drigo, I believe—dropping down before I had passed through the second tub, but I was out of arm's reach and made good use of my start.

The water had risen considerably. It was up to my throat in one part. My sodden petticoat clung to my legs and weighed me down as I rose to my feet. Nevertheless I scrambled up into the cellar of the Joy while the men below were groping for the foot irons, swearing furiously. A lamp stood on the ground where they had left it beside the flagstone which Taras had thrust aside with his foot. One edge of the stone lay square with the side of the hole. Seized by a savage impulse, I caught hold of the stone by the farther edge and raised it into a perpendicular position. Then, as Drigo's head appeared, with vindictive deviltry in his upraised face, I pushed and let it fall. It struck his head, and he fell with a howl on his comrade below.

It was easy enough to escape now. A glimmering light in the bar showed me that the flap was open; against the wall rested the steps by which they had descended. But the blow I had dealt Drigo filled me with a fiendish joy and whetted my thirst for vengeance. All the evil passions of my nature were animated with a craving for retaliation as I thought of the evil those men would have done to Taras and me. The only wish of my heart was to inflict some terrible punishment upon them. I dragged up the stone and poised it in the hope that Putty might come up and that I might serve him as I had served Drigo. But he was wise enough to profit by the experience of the other and preferred to stay below and vent his fury in curses.

While I was waiting the stone slipped, and in moving to keep it in position my foot struck the lamp and overturned it. It was a large benzine lamp, and as the oil ran out it took fire, sending up licking tongues of flame. The pool spread, and the blazing liquid running over the edge of the shaft ran down in a fiery stream and dropped in gouts of flame. The men below shrieked aloud in terror.

“Get out of my way,” shouted Putty. “We shall be burnt alive if we stay here. We must get back through the hole.”

I heard them cursing each other as they struggled together, each trying to get first into the run. Then when the struggle ceased Drigo, gasping for breath, cried:

“We can't go back. The water's up to the top.”

The pool of fire kept spreading. I could hold the stone no longer. It fell with a thud, cutting off the sound of mingled execrations from below. I ran up the steps into the bar, and having drawn them up after me, so that if the men got out of the shaft they could not escape from the cellar, I let down the flap. The place was thick with suffocating smoke. Scarcely able to breathe, I groped my way down the passage, drew the bolts of the door and got out onto the balcony.

Taras was waiting for me at the end of the stairs. His figure was just discernible by the faint light that came from the gas up Ferryboat alley. In a couple of minutes I was by his side, panting for breath.

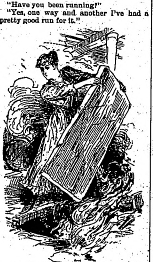
“I've kep' you a-waitin,” I gasped.

“Not long,” said he.

Indeed all that I have narrated in this chapter may have taken place in less than 20 minutes.

“Have you been running?”

“Yes, one way and another I've had a pretty good run for it.”



The pool of fire kept spreading.

“Never mind, you're all right. There ain't no danger now. I've done for 'em.”

“Done for them,” he replied in a low tone of perplexity. “Whom?”

“Why, the foreigner and Putty. I've done for 'em both,” said I, expecting him to share my feeling of exultation.

“What do you mean?” he asked in a tone of sharp severity.

He had never before spoken to me like that. His harshness frightened me and changed my feeling of triumph to one of mortification. If I had done wrong, it was for his sake, not my own. I hung my head and made no reply.

“What do you mean?” he repeated, with increased sternness, turning me almost roughly by the shoulder that the light might fall on my face. “Speak!”

“What do you think I mean?” I asked morosely. “We've bested 'em, ain't we? I've got you right away from 'em, ain't I? Isn't it me what's done 'em for you?”

He drew a deep breath of relief, and then in a tone of wonderful tenderness said:

“Forgive me, little friend. I thought you meant something very different from that. I do not understand English well. But how did you get so wet?”

“I couldn't drop out of the hole into the water down there without gettin wet, could I?” said I, still with an air of resentment, though I had forgiven him in my heart the moment he spoke again with kindness.

“Come, you need dry clothes—rest. I will take you to your friends.”

“I ain't got no friends. You leave me here. I'm all right. Go quick past the house.”

“Not without you. If you have no friends, I will take you to mine.”

I stopped—he had drawn me onward as he spoke—and shook my head. The rank smell of burning seemed to fill the air. He might see the flames bursting up in the bar of the Joy and learn what I had done. I would rather separate now than risk meeting his angry reproach.

“Don't be afraid,” said he, mistaking the cause of my reluctance to pass the Joy. “No one shall hurt you nor me either now my hands are free. Come.”

His strong hand was on my arm. I could not resist his command. But as if I were in terror of Putty I ran that we might pass the Joy quickly, giving him no time to find out that I had set the place on fire over the heads of his enemies.

“Stay,” said he, checking me when we were some distance down Sweet Apple lane, “you have run far enough. There is no danger now, and we have still a good way to walk. There are no cabs in this part of London.”

We walked on toward the Minories. The streets were quite empty. We passed but one policeman, and he said nothing, seeing Taras with me. He eyed us curiously though, thinking perhaps that Taras had saved me from drowning, his clothes also being wet and caked with black mud. We walked in silence for some time, but Taras spoke at length in a low, soft voice:

“I owe my life to you, little friend; more than my life,” he added, “my liberty.”

“How did you let 'em come over you?” I asked.

“I was deceived. I thought the dark man was a friend. He was an enemy—an agent of police.”

“And the three others—was they slops too?”

“Slops—what is that?”

“Policemans.”

“Yes, they were police.”

“Was they goin to kill you?”

“No, worse than that. They were going to take me back to my country.”

“You ain't done anything wrong, are you?”

“Not wrong as we understand the word—you and I.”

“I thought it was only parties like me as was hunted about for being s'picious caricters.”

“No class is free from suspicion in my country; it is not like yours.”

“It must be pretty bad if it's wus.”

“It is pretty bad.”

“What are you goin to do with the dark man with the round shoulders?”

“Keep him at arm's length.”

“But, s'posin,” I persisted tentatively, “s'posin you'd got him in a corner or in a 'ole, wouldn't you drop something on him and smash him?”

“That would be murder.”

“Garn aw'y! It ain't murder; it's justice. You only does for him what he'd do for you if he get a chance.”

“That is the law of brutes, not of men. It would be murder, and we should pray for strength to resist the lust of vengeance that leads to it. For think, little friend, of the misery that follows, the degradation and shame of being shunned by innocent women and good men, the feeling that one is not fit to kiss a child.” He said more, but I could not follow him for thinking of the men I had left to die in the Mariner's Joy, whom I had murdered for this—to be shunned forever by Taras. A sickness overcame me. I must have stumbled or reeled, for Taras stopped suddenly and held me up.

“You are faint. Let us sit down on this step,” he said.

“No. We will go on. I shan't be silly again.”

He drew my arm through his and bade me lean on him, telling me that we had now but a little way to go. Leaning on his arm, I wished that we might go on forever and ever and never reach our journey's end. “Talk to me,” I said.

He proposed a brighter subject, but I would not hear of that and bade him tell me more about the dark man and the police.

“He is nothing but an instrument,” said Taras. “I bear him no ill will. He does what he is paid to do, like a soldier who lowers his rifle and kills another soldier at the command of his officer. It isn't the unreasoning man who executes an unjust law, but the thinking man who makes the law, who should die.” And then he went on to speak of many things beyond the reach of my reason, but that made no difference to me. I heard his voice like a flowing strain of music that softened my heart and lighted up my soul with an exquisite emotion such as I had never before felt. And I knew not why. It seems strange, anomalous, unaccountable to me, as I look back now, that these feelings should suddenly spring up in my being, which had hitherto been dull to all the influences of nature. But surely it was not more exceptional than the revelation of a new world to the blind whose eyes after years of darkness are opened.

We stopped before a small house in a by street of the Minories, and Taras rang a bell. The door was opened instantly by a fair haired young woman and her husband. They were friends who expected the arrival of Taras with the three men whom he had been led to believe were friends. They looked at me in mute astonishment when we entered the shop—a tobacconist's—as Taras in his own tongue briefly explained what had occurred. But when he had spoken the man took my hands in his, and pressing them told me in his broken English that I should never want a friend while he and his wife lived. She could speak no English except “yes” and “no,” but she understood what her husband said, I think, for she nodded a smiling agreement with his promise and kissed me heartily upon both cheeks, despite the dirt upon them.

Then she led me quickly to a room up stairs where a bright fire was burning, and chatting merrily all the while, sometimes to me, sometimes to her husband who followed, bringing a big bath and a can of hot water. She laid out a complete change of clothes for me, and when they had made me understand that supper was waiting for me below they left me with more cheerful smiles and expressions of kindness.

To all their amiable overtures I made no response—not once opening my lips to thank them. Their sympathy and solicitude bewildered me, being as strange and incomprehensible to me as the language they spoke. I had never had to thank any body in all my life for anything, and the sentiment of gratitude was as unknown to me as the experience of gentle treatment. Indeed I seemed to have stepped suddenly into another world where all was unreal and dreamlike.

As dreamlike was the physical sensation produced by the warmth of the bath and the comfort of clean, dry clothing. A delicious languor steeped my senses in forgetfulness of misery, and yielding to the impulse of the moment I threw myself upon the soft bed and the next minute lost consciousness of everything.

CHAPTER VI.

THE LAST RESOURCE.

I awoke with a feeling of overpowering heat and suffocation. The bedclothes had been drawn over my shoulders, and my head, sinking from the pillow, had buried my face beneath them. But before this unusual condition was discovered another explanation presented itself to my half awakened imagination. I was at the bottom of a burning pit. Drigo and Putty were there, struggling with each other and trampling me beneath them in their frantic efforts to escape, and Taras was looking down at me with that stern severity which I had seen but once in his face. He would not stretch out his hand to save me, but with the same unbending expression turned his head and slowly walked away.

I started up, looking about me wildly. The fire had burned down. Only a few embers glowed in the grate. The lamp was turned down; its light fell upon some food spread upon the table.

Then I realized my position.

My face and hands were wet and clammy with heat and terror. That terrible, warning dream haunted me. What should I do? The thought of lying down again to sleep was repugnant to me, with the dread of dreaming again. It must be nearly morning for the fire to have burned so low. In a little while that fair haired woman and her husband would come with friendly greetings. He would press my hands and she kiss my cheeks again. I was not unconscious of the kindness and generosity that animated them, and yet the prospect of meeting them was, I knew not why, as repugnant to me as the idea of sleeping again in their bed.

Walking across the room, my eye fell upon some children's toys and a doll upon a shelf. They perplexed me with a new and unaccountable fear. Turning to the mantelpiece I saw a photograph in a frame hanging on the wall. It was a child, the owner of the doll and playthings on the shelf—perhaps the fair haired woman's child. At that supposition the cause of my repugnant fear was revealed to me, and remembering the word of Taras I said to myself: “This is the honest woman and the good man who would shrink from me. This is the child whose lips I may not kiss.

What then? I asked. Let them shun me. Who wants their kindness or friendships? Not I. The world is good enough without them while Taras smiles. But how long will he smile? By this time the firemen have found the charred bodies, and every one is talking of the tragedy at the Mariner's Joy. Soon enough, in a few hours, the news will reach Taras, and he will know what I have done—know that I am a murderer. Then he, too, like the Taras in my prophetic vision, will turn his back on me without one gleam of pity and go away. Should I stay and suffer that? My spirit rose in wild protest. That dream should not be realized; that pitiless look should not forever haunt my life.

With these thoughts running through my fevered imagination, I hunted about the room for the spoiled rags I had taken off. They were gone. The woman had removed them with the determination that I should not wear them again. Well, I would take those she had given me to wear. It mattered little whether they were a gift or not. It would not add greatly to their loathing to know that the murderess was a thief as well. I put on the shoes she had left and took a woolen shawl as well to wrap about my head; then opening the door cautiously that no noise might awaken the sleeping household I found my way down stairs by the glimmer of light that came from below.

The shop was before me, but on the right of the stairs was a half open door. The light was in that room, and glancing in I saw Taras stretched on a couch asleep. I could go no farther. The thought that I should look upon his face no more seemed to take away all power from my mind and body, and I stood there dazed with that sense of utter bereavement, until impelled by a wild desire I passed into the room and drew quite close to him.

I sank upon my knees and put my face so close to his that I felt his breath upon my cheek, but I could not see him for the tears that blinded me. My fingers hung quivering over him, for I yearned to touch him, yet dared not. My tears ran down my cheeks and fell upon the floor. Then I could see him. The same sweet kindness was on his face that had wakened my soul from its lethargy.

“That is what I will remember all my life,” I said to myself as I rose. His watch lay on the table, and beside it a ring I had noticed on his finger when I was cutting the cord that bound his hands. I took it, feeling that he would not begrudge me this for a keepsake.

There was fog in the street, but the coppery background to the line of housetops and the quick, heavy tread of men going to work showed that it was morning. I had no knowledge of the neighborhood, but that did not trouble me. My only object was to get away from Taras and hide myself where he could never come to kill my happy memories with a reproachful look.

After awhile I knew by the long lines of carts and barrows, the voices of porters and costers and the smell of fish that I must be near Billingsgate market, and soon after I saw the monument looming in the yellow fog. I crossed the bridge and went down the steps into Tooley street, not with any definite object, but because the thick darkness down there seemed to offer oblivion. Finding myself alone at the foot of the steps, I tore off a piece of trimming from my dress, and passing it through Taras' ring I tied it round my neck, hiding the ring in my bosom.

I have but the faintest recollection of what happened during the day, my mind being too seared by previous events to be sensitive to slight impressions. I remember feeling wretched and hungry and sick with the fatigue of walking. I wandered on because I found no place to rest until hazard led me into Greenwich park about dusk. There I fell asleep on a bench.

It was raining when I awoke, but it was too dark to distinguish anything, even the trees, and I could not sleep again for shivering with cold and the aching of my body. So I sat there in dull resignation, watching the daylight come and marking one by one the heavy drops as they plashed on the bench beside me, falling from the boughs above, until goaded by hunger I threw off my lethargy and went down into the town.

It was still early, but the coffee shops were open, their windows clouded by the warmth within. The first one I entered was full of customers, and the man serving them was so busy that he scarcely glanced at me in replying to my humble appeal for food.

“Oh, I ain't got the time to attend to beggars—out you go!” said he, bustling along with his hands full of empty cups.

The next one was less crowded, and a woman was in the kitchen before the flaming fire. She turned round, setting her hands on her hips, and looked me down from head to foot as I asked her to give me something to eat and drink.

“I ain't got no money, but I'll do a job of work for it,” I said.

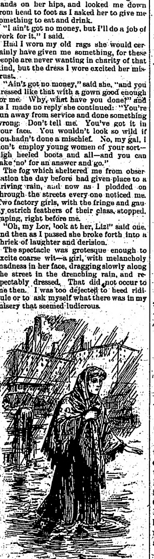
Had I worn my old rags she would certainly have given me something, for these people are never wanting in charity of that kind, but the dress I wore excited her mistrust.

“Ain't got no money,” said she, “and you dressed like that with a gown good enough for me. Why, what have you done?” and as I made no reply she continued: “You're run away from service and done something wrong. Don't tell me. You've got it in your face. You wouldn't look so wild if you hadn't done a mischief. No, my gal, I don't employ young women of your sort—high heeled boots and all—and you can take 'no' for an answer and go.”

The fog which sheltered me from observation the day before had given place to a driving rain, and now as I plodded on through the streets every one noticed me. Two factory girls, with the fringe and gaudy ostrich feathers of their class, stopped, gaping, right before me.

“Oh, my Lor, look at her, Liz!” said one, and then as I passed she broke forth into a shriek of laughter and derision.

The spectacle was grotesque enough to excite coarse wit—a girl, with melancholy madness in her face, dragging slowly along the street in the drenching rain, and respectably dressed. That did not occur to me then. I was too dejected to heed ridicule or to ask myself what there was in my misery that seemed ludicrous.



I walked out still farther.

When I grew dizzy and felt too weak to walk, I turned down a bystreet, hoping to find another bench where I might rest a little. But I had walked away from the park, and the by street only led me into a desolate waste, broken by a few squalid houses in scattered blocks, a gas works and here and there in the dim horizon a factory shaft. Not a bank to sit on—not even a railing to rest against—nothing but a level

ELECTIONS OF 1893.

REPUBLICANS ROLLED UP BIG MAJORITIES ON TUESDAY.

They Carried Ohio, New York and Iowa by Overwhelming Majorities—McKinley Elected by Probably Over 80,000—Maynard, For Supreme Judge of New York, Defeated by 90,000—Jackson Defeats Boies by 25,000 to 30,000—New Jersey Also Goes Republican—The Result In Other States.

DES MOINES, Nov. 9.—Pluralities received up to 1 o'clock from 93 counties give Jackson (Rep.) 43,528, and Boies (Dem.) 14,652. This gives Jackson a net plurality of 28,878 with six counties to hear from, five of which are Republican. It has been impossible to make any estimate of the Populist and Prohibition vote as the returns are very imperfect.

Nearly Thirty Thousand.

DES MOINES, Nov. 10.—The latest returns indicate that the Republicans gain a representative in Fremont and Audubon counties and lose one in Mills. Jackson's plurality will be near 30,000; the balance of the ticket between 6,000 and 8,000 more. Jackson carried his home county by 2,571. Almost every county shows Republican gains.

Republican Majority Increasing.

DES MOINES, Ia., Nov. 10—Additional returns received increase the Republican gains. They will now have on joint ballot in the legislature a majority of 74 in a total vote of 150.

M'KINLEY'S MAJORITY.

State Chairman Dick's Estimate Places It at 80,000.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 9.—Chairman Dick of the Republican state committee has received unofficial returns from the 88 counties in the state and gives results as follows: Last year 45 counties gave Republican pluralities of 46,510; 43 counties gave Cleveland pluralities of 45,358, making Harrison's net plurality 1,072. This year McKinley had pluralities in 62 of the 88 counties, giving him gross pluralities of 101,808. Neal had pluralities in 26 counties, giving him gross pluralities of 21,123, making McKinley's net plurality 80,485. The Populists have slightly increased their vote of last year, when they had a total vote of 16,000. The Prohibitionists have fallen off from the vote of last year, when they had 26,000, and it is estimated at headquarters that they will have about 20,000 votes each.

Ohio's Total Vote.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 13.—Based on full official returns from all except eight counties and the pluralities of the Republican and Democratic parties in the eight, the total vote in the state is: McKinley 433,000, Neal 352,000, Macklin (Pro.) 21,600, Bracken (Pop.) 16,300; total 822,900.

IN THE EMPIRE STATE.

Republicans Have a Majority of Over 35,000.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—The latest returns from all parts of the state show that the Republican victory is fully as great as the most enthusiastic of the party's leaders have claimed.

Bartlett's majority for judge of the court of appeals over Maynard is, in round figures, 89,700. General Palmer's majority for secretary of state is 35,000. Myer, the Democratic candidate for secretary of state, carries 12 counties, five more than Maynard.

The counties which he carried and which go against Maynard are Queens, Meyer's home; Richmond, Rockland, Schenectady and Westchester. Meyer's majority in New York county is more than double that of Maynard, viz: 64,875. In Kings his vote is 9,000 more than Maynard's. The total majorities for judge of the court of appeals and secretary of state are as follows: Bartlett, 135,000; Maynard, 45,400; Palmer, 109,600; Meyer, 74,000. The Democratic rout in Kings is complete. Besides the loss of mayor their control of the board of aldermen is gone. This puts all the power in the hands of their opponents.

MADE A CLEAN SWEEP.

South Dakota Republicans Elect Their Entire Ticket.

HURON, S. D., Nov. 10.—South Dakota Republicans made a clean sweep of the state, electing by 4,000 plurality three supreme court judges, eight circuit court judges and several commissioners. The contest in the Third and Seventh districts, where the Democrats and Independents fused, was close, but resulted in the election of Andrews in the Third and Gardner in the Seventh by from 150 to 200 majority. The Independents are greatly disappointed, and take the defeat bitterly. In Brown county the Republicans give the judicial ticket 100 plurality and elect county commissioners.

ANTI-RACE TRACK.

Opponents of Gambling Win a Great Victory In New Jersey.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—Latest returns from the New Jersey election only serve to increase the majorities of the anti-race track men. The opponents of the gamblers, under the lead of Thompson and McKum, have won a great victory. The anti-race track men have elected seven senators and their opponents but one. Nine Democratic state senators hold over, and so do four Republicans. The new state senate stands: Republicans 11, Democrats 10. In the state assembly the Republicans or anti-race track men have 39, and the Democrats 21.

Democratic Gains in Kentucky.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 9.—The Democrats have gained probably 10 legislators, partly due to the redistricting of the state by the last legislature. It is certain that the aggregate vote of the counties will be much smaller than in the election two years ago. The Populists have been practically wiped out. The Democrats will have at least 105 members of the legislature out of a total of 138.

LARGEST FOR YEARS.

Republican Majority in Pennsylvania Not Less Than 130,000.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10.—The returns that have been received from the interior make it probable that the Republican majority for Judge Fell for the supreme court will not fall much short of 130,000. It will be the biggest majority that party ever had here except when Grant beat Greeley in 1872.

Kansas Official Returns.

TOPEKA, Nov. 10.—Official returns from 81 counties give the Republicans 862 of the county officers elected, the Populists 107 and the Democrats 16. The Republicans have carried eight of the 13 districts in which judges were elected, the Populists two and the Democrats one. The result in the other two is in doubt, with the chances in favor of the Republicans.

Nebraska Populists Give Up.

OMAHA, Nov. 10.—Chairman Deaver of the Populist state committee admits the defeat of Judge Holcomb, and the election of Harrison, Rep., to the supreme bench. Returns received increase Harrison's lead, and he will undoubtedly have at least 6,000 plurality over Holcomb. The three Republican candidates for regents are elected by good margins.

Democrats Get Everything.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 9.—The Democrats have carried this state by 20,000 plurality. They also elect 68 of the 91 members of the house of delegates and 20 out of 26 senators. The Republicans gained heavily in Western and Southern Maryland. In this city the Democrats elected 18 of 22 first branch councilmen and 8 of 10 in the second branch.

Usual Vote In Virginia.

RICHMOND, Nov. 9.—Official and unofficial returns indicate that the Democrats have carried 23 senatorial districts and the Populists 1, with 1 district still in doubt. The Democrats have 15 members of the senate who hold over. Of the members elected to the house of delegates the Democrats will probably have 90 of the 100 elected.

Massachusetts Returns.

BOSTON, Nov. 10.—Complete corrected returns from the state on governor give Greenhagle (Rep.) a plurality of 34,105.

WAS NO ELECTION.

A Decision of the New Jersey Supreme Court Knocks Out Tuesday's Election.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 11.—The decision of the supreme court of this state declaring the present legislative apportionment unconstitutional, has caused great consternation among the lawyers and politicians at the capital, and will cause restlessness among the assemblymen elect.

Governor Werts, Justice Abbett of the supreme court, and Prosecutor of the Pleas Bayard Stockton were in conference on this important subject, but would not disclose their conclusions. Assistant Prosecutor W. Holt Apager, was seen and said:

"It appears from the decision rendered by the supreme court that the only legally elected members of the house of assembly were those from the seven counties of Atlantic, Cape May, Gloucester, Ocean, Salem, Somerset and Sussex. This being so, under section 188 of the election law, Revision of New Jersey, page 861, it is mandatory upon the governor to call special elections in each of the counties where there are no legally elected members.

"If the governor should be advised by the attorney general that this was the correct view of the case, then the election of Tuesday in all the other counties, saving the seven mentioned above for members of the assembly, is void, and in each of those counties a ticket would be formed including the names of the entire number of candidates for assembly in the county and be voted for by every voter in the county.

SEVERAL REPORTED DEAD.

Y. M. C. A. Members Hemmed in by Fire at Memphis.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 14.—What promised to be one of the most destructive fires of late years was checked by the fire department after a heroic fight with the following losses:

Schmalzreid Stove company, building and stock, total loss, $70,000; Lemmon & Gale, wholesale dry goods, $115,000. The Young Men's Christian association had rooms in the Schmalzreid building and found themselves hemmed in by the fire. Several jumped from the third story and were seriously and perhaps fatally hurt, though no deaths have yet been reported. It is claimed that other members were overcome by the heat and burned in the building, but nothing authentic is known.

Had Boodle With Them.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 14.—Superintendent of Police Smith of this city has received a telegram announcing the arrest of Schieg and Floyd. The dispatch stated that the absconders had a large amount of money with them when caught. The interesting question now is, who will be sent across the water to bring the men back? As Detectives Hoy and Lawrence are both in New York city, where they have Lou Floyd in custody, it is likely that one of them will go.

Stone in the Death Cell.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 14.—Murderer Stone, condemned to die Feb. 16 for the slaughter of the Wratten family, has been placed in the death cell at the prison at South Jeffersonville. Stone divides his time between praying and singing. He eats like a gourmand and sleeps like a healthy babe.

Don't Want the Fight.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 10.—The Olympic club has rejected the Corbett-Mitchell fight. Telegrams have been sent to the fighters.

Train Robber Sentenced.

HOUGHTON, Mich., Nov. 14.—Jack Butler, one of the Mineral Range train robbers, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to five years in prison.

SIX SPASMS A DAY.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I never lose an opportunity to recommend Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine to any one afflicted with nervous complaints with the assurance that it will not disappoint them. When our boy was eighteen months old he was attacked with violent spasms. Sometimes he would have five or six spasms in a single day. WE TRIED MANY PHYSICIANS WITHOUT BENEFIT; finally our druggist recommended Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. We tried a bottle, and could see that he WAS BENEFITED FROM THE FIRST DOSE. We used three bottles, and I am happy to say the child was ENTIRELY CURED. We used no other remedy, and his cure is complete. He is now three years old and perfectly healthy. You are at liberty to use my name in SOUNDING THE PRAISE OF THIS WONDERFUL REMEDY.

FOR WOMEN AND HOME.

This well-known journal, a union of four leading women's papers, has won its fame because it deals with what really interests the women of America. Fashions from the standpoint of good taste and economy. Fiction of a pure and helpful kind. Music and Art suitable for non-professional tastes. Household hints written by practical women. Suggestions and aids for self-supporting women. It is a paper for women, by women, and its writers are among the most noted authors. Every line is original, every engraving a gem.

It is a paper of to-day without espousing the great questions of religion, politics and temperance, it gives all the news regarding them. It is universally quoted by the press because its views and articles are bright and unique. Send to Springfield, Ohio, for a sample copy. Formerly $1.00, it is now but 50 cents a year. M. P. Losey: You may say that in spite of hard times I never had better health in my life, and I hope, with the blessings of a good constitution and good habits, to enjoy 30 years of life yet.

Frank G. Wright, a brakesman on a Great Northern freight was caught between the bumpers at Arvilla on Saturday and so severely injured that he died in a few hours. He was a new man on the road, married, and lived at Devils Lake. The remains were taken to the old home in Texas for interment.

Last Saturday Judge of Probate Benson heard arguments in the case of Houser & Co. of St. Paul against the Walters estate. The St. Paul firm wanted to file a claim against the estate, but as they had neglected to file it within the time stipulated by the court, and failed to show good cause why they didn't do so, the court did not grant their demand.

E. M. Stanton: Did you hear the story they tell on Ed. Walsh? Well, when he was at the World's Fair, he thought one day he would start down town early and avoid the rush, and proceeded to board an elevated train. After riding for some time he thougnt he ought to be down town and began looking around to see where he was at, and he discovered he was on the Intramural railway and had been riding in a circle around the grounds.

E. D. Childs: While this is beyond a doubt the toughest year our farmers ever saw and I cannot say that I have made an overgrown fortune farming this season, I have not lost my faith in this country by any means. I believe we have the best soil in one of the best climates on earth, and I can see unmistakable signs of the dawn of such an era of prosperity as our farmers never saw and few dream of. All who now invest in Red River soil will reap a rich reward in the near future.

The JOURNAL has introduced a new feature—an illustrated fashion department—especially for the ladies. Each week we will print a cut of something new in ladies' or children's wear, with a description of the goods and the amount of material required for each garment; also the price of the pattern. These plates are sent direct from New York and show the very latest New York and Paris fashions. If any of our lady readers should desire a pattern of anything we show in our fashion department, we can procure it for them on receipt of the price marked under the illustration.

Marlan Hart returned from Chicago on Wednesday morning.

Mrs. S. L. Collins is enjoying a visit from her aunt, Mrs. Wm. Mentzel, of Frontenac, Minn.

Appearances indicate that the final freeze up has come. No plowing since Monday night.

A. E. Brush and son returned from Chicago last week having enjoyed a splendid visit to the World's Fair.

Dr. Dunlop and party came back from their hunt on Tuesday evening, reporting more hunters than game.

On Tuesday Judge Spendley said the words that united Barton Johnson to Betsy Anderson, both of Rocksbury.

The topic Sunday morning at Congregational church will be "800 versus 1800." In the evening a popular gospel service.

Mrs. Mary Kennedy has purchased from Frank Brown two lots in Jerome's addition, and is putting up a dwelling house thereon.

H. A. Foss, formerly of Normaden, of Grand Forks, spent Tuesday night in the city visiting old friends. He goes to Grand Forks intending to be back in time to take Saturday's train for his home at Fosston.

Frank Creamer enjoyed a visit from his brother-in-law, J. L. Lowry, of Cresco, Iowa, over Sunday. Mr. Lowry is a man of means and talks seriously of investing in Polk county realty.

Have you seen the Corse Payton Co.? If not you have missed the event of the season, and you have yet time to correct your error as the company will appear every night this week, and Saturday matinee.

Miss Harriet J. Allyn, sister of Mrs. J. G. Smith, arrived on the Great Northern train Wednesday morning from Boston. Miss Allyn has spent the past two years in the Massachusetts general hospital, training school for nurses, and expects to engage in her profession in this city.

Rev. J. C. Huntington, of Minneapolis, conducted a very successful Sunday School Institute last Saturday and Sunday in the Congregational church. His methods of illustration by blackboard and object lessons were novel and very striking and highly appreciated by all present.

Mrs. A. M. Olson, daughter of Anton Renne, who lives a few miles east of the city, was brought from Valley City not long since in hopes that the change might prove beneficial, but the hope was vain, as she was suffering from consumption and she passed away last Friday. The remains were laid to rest on Sunday in the family burial ground a few miles up the river.

M. G. Jennings: Have I heard the election news? Well I have and I want to say to my brother farmers that I have not heard such good news for a long time as the news from Kansas that assures me that farmers are getting over the populist craze and beginning to show their good solid sense again. I take this as an omen of good and expect to see the northwest fall in line at the next election with far greater alacrity than Kansas did. I tell you the good sober sense of the people of the United States does not endorse the free trade fallacy.

The new chief of the fire department is a dandy. He seems to act upon the principle that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, for there hasn't been not one little fire since he was elected. That sort of official would suit the St. Paul Globe to a dot as that sheet insists that it is the duty of all public officials to prevent the occurrence of disasters rather than to apply the remedy afterward. If the Globe will send one of its detectives up we will see that he gets an interview with chief Rauch, who could no doubt give the Globe valuable pointers.

While talking with an old farmer, who lives near the city, on Wednesday, George Benoy was seen passing along the other side of the street. "There" said our friend, "goes a farmer who always makes money and while he never seems to be in a great rush he always finishes seeding before anybody, he always has his grain cut and stacked or threshed as the case may be before anybody, he always has his plowing done in the fall in good time and I have reason to believe that he has cleared over $600 this year as dull as the times are. His is an example that might be followed to advantage by very many whom I know."

EUCLID, Oct. 30.

Miss Thedor of St. Vincent is visiting with her sister Mrs. Hanson.

George Easby, who has been residing at Crookston for some time past, is up superintending the hauling of his wheat to market.

A telegram was received here Monday conveying the sad news of the death of Mrs. W. H. Lingle, nee Cora Smith of Grand Forks. Mrs. Lingle resided here during her girlhood and was thought a great deal of. Mr. Lingle has the sympathy of the people of Euclid and vicinity in this his sad hour of bereavement.

Mrs. T. E. Biever spent a portion of last week with her parents at Argyle.

H. C. Misner, Mr. Platt and Dr. Chapin took a gambol down to Crookston Saturday.

Robert Teal is making some needed repairs on his house, prior to moving into town for the winter.

Mrs. Chapin and daughter Nellie, attended the funeral of Mrs. Lingle Tuesday.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

The JOURNAL man does like to see a good team on the farm and has had occasion to speak about those of Chas. Teal, Sr., of Euclid, before. He was in the city on Wednesday for three loads of lumber and the loads were so big that the bystanders got to betting on the weights. Collins' scales could not settle the question as they only weigh as high as five tons, and the smallest load weighed more than that. How's that for loads to be hauled 15 or 20 miles? And who says it don't pay to keep good teams?

The Corse Payton comedy company, now playing a week's engagement at the opera house is giving excellent satisfaction. Mr. Payton is one of those natural-born actors who can no more help being a good actor than he can help breathing, and his support is excellent—far above the general average. Miss Etta Reed is a clever little actress who is walking right into the affections of Crookston theatre-goers. So far they have had good houses and deserve it, as their work is fine and their prices extremely low for that style.

Mr. W. M. Terry, who has been in the drug business at Elkton, My., for the past twelve years, says: "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy gives better satisfaction than any other cough medicine I have ever sold." There is good reason for this. No other will cure a cold so quickly; no other is so certain a preventive and cure for croup; no other affords so much relief in cases of whooping cough. For sale by S. A. Wallace.

Canadian Excursions.

The Northern Pacific has arranged for a series of excursions from points in Northern Minnesota, North Dakota as far west as Jamestown, and in Manitoba, to all points in Ontario and Quebec, as far east as Montreal inclusive, at a rate of $40.00 for the round trip. These tickets will be placed on sale at Minnesota and North Dakota points on November 21st, 28th and December 5th and 11th to 31st inclusive daily, and at Manitoba points daily from November 21st to December 31st inclusive. To points east of Montreal, tickets will be sold at a slightly increased rate. These tickets will be good for three months from date of sale and allow stop-over east of Detroit frontier within the transit limits, which will be fifteen days in each direction. Regular coupon tickets are sold for these excursions and if your ticket agent at your point has not got them give him two or three days notice and he will obtain them. This is a fine opportunity for making a visit to Eastern Canadian points. Do not miss it. Apply to C. A. Sharkey, or Chas. S. Fee, Gen. Pass. & Ticket Agent, N. P. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

Family Tourist Cars to Puget Sound.

Upholstered tourist cars in charge of porter and equipped with bedding, curtains, cooking ranges, ample water supply, lavatories, toilet rooms, etc., and well heated, lighted and ventilated, form a part of the Great Northern railway through train service between the Twin Cities and Seattle. Tourist cars leave St. Paul daily at 7:45 p. m., Minneapolis 8:15 p. m. $2.00 double berth to Havre, (with prompt connection for Great Falls, Helena, and Butte;) $2.50 to Spokane; $3.00 to Seattle. Palace sleeping cars via the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, leave Chicago every evening at 10:30 and run via St. Paul, Crookston, Grand Forks, Minot, Kalispell, Spokane to Seattle, in connection with the splendid Great Northern service for all classes of travel. The Body of a Man found in the Ice on the Red Lake River.

The Police Give the Name of the Victim as Ed. Small—an Inquest Held.

An Old Man Hangs Himself Near Fertile—Held for Counterfeiting.

Found in the River.

Last Saturday evening, as Prof. C. E. Corwin and a companion were skating on the Red Lake River near the Cunningham farm, they discovered the body of a man frozen in the ice. Coming to the city they notified the police, but it was then too dark to find the body, so on Sunday morning a party was made up and went out to the place where the body had been seen the previous evening. It was soon found, taken out and brought to the city and placed in John Wyatt's undertaking rooms.

The body, which was frozen as hard as a stone, was that of a man between 35 and 40 years of age, clothed with a light gingham shirt a pair of trousers and a shoe. A vest and one shoe which corresponded with the one worn by the dead man, was found on the river bank near where the body was found. He was identified by the police as Ed. Small, a man who had several times been locked up in the city jail last fall as a drunk—the last time being on September 9th. As to how he came to be in the river is a mystery, and no one can give a plausible theory except that he must have suicided. He had worked a short time for Lief Sargent last fall, but very little is known about him except that he was given to drinking and often said he didn't care whether he lived or not.

On Monday afternoon Coroner Shephard selected the following citizens as a jury to hear the evidence in the case: Ole Hanson, Joe. Lusian, H. Nolan, A. A. Olds, Geo. Berthiaume, Thos. Wennevold. Nothing new was developed, and the jury decided that the deceased came to his death by drowning in the Red Lake river on or about September 10th.

Hung Himself.

Last Sunday morning Nov. 19th, Peter Egge an old man living in the town of Garden, about 8 miles from Fertile, was found dead at his granary by a neighbor, Ole P. Egen. From Ole P. Renne, who was in the city Tuesday, the JOURNAL has the following particulars:

Mr, Egge was an old man about 65 years of age and lived alone on his farm, taking care of his stock. His wife was dead and he had a daughter living in the old country. He was in the habit of taking liquor home, and it is thought he was under the influence of intoxicants when he hung himself. He had probably become despondent from living alone so long, and it is thought he was worrying over a small bill which he was to pay in Fosston last Friday, and this may have induced him while intoxicated, to take his life.

Mr. Egen had been to Fertile on Saturday and when he went to the house of Egge on Sunday morning, he found the latter hanging from a rafter in a sort of granary attached to the house. One foot was touching the ground, while the other was bent and the knee resting on a board. He had his mittens on, and was evidently sensible to the fact that it was cold. From the appearance of the body the deed must have been committed on Saturday.

Mr. Renne came to the city to get the Judge of Probate to appoint a person to look after the live stock of the deceased.

Held for Counterfeiting.

P. J. McCrystal and Peter Wallace, the men arrested here last week for passing a due bill on a Grafton store, in the California Wine house here, were examined before U. S. Commissioner Christianson Saturday, and bound over to the term of the United States district court at Minneapolis, and in default of bail were committed to the Ramsay county jail to await trial.

This is a rather peculiar case. The due bill in size and appearance resembles a silver certificate, but the wording is entirely different. It is good for $10 in trade at a Grafton store, but it had become worn and soiled to such an extent that it might pass as a genuine bill if not examined closely. When taken at the California Wine house it was mistaken for a Canadian bill. As it is not an imitation of any kind of money it is hard to see how the charge of counterfeiting can be made to stick. But an official connected with the treasury department, who was here and advised the holding of the men, says that under a new statute counterfeiting is not necessarily an imitation of money, but the making of anything to resemble money, or the passing of it as money. The law has not been passed on by the courts yet, and the outcome of these cases will be noted with interest.

Crookston's Clergy

Are nothing if not progressive. They have modern ideas and their subjects of thought are in keeping with the times. Last Sabbath morning Rev. Smith, of the Congregational church, talked on the subject of "National Sins," and pointed out the sins which had caused the destruction of nations in the past ages. Coming down to the present time he enumerated some of our own national sins, and predicted the ultimate downfall of our country were these sins not abated. The licensed saloon he characterized as a national sin—one which was steadily ruining the country. The passage by congress of such laws as the Geary exclusion law was characterized as national sins, and he predicted that for the latter this country would some day pay dearly, for China would undoubtedly resent by force of arms this descrimination against her people. Etc. Etc.

Rev. Squier of the First M. E. church spoke in the evening on "Traps for Young Men," and said the traps he particularly referred to were the saloons in the city of Crookston and he said he was going to try and close up some of these traps—at least on the Sabbath day—and failing in this he would have the satisfaction of showing them up and warning the young men against them. He will discuss the saloon question every Sunday evening for some time to come, and local affairs will be stirred up quite freely.

John Dillon.

"A Model Husband," is the title of John Dillon's new play which is to be produced in this city on November 28th is far superior to anything Mr. Dillon has appeared in for years.

The story deals with the fortunes and misfortunes of a New York stock broker, who has long experienced the unpleasant restraint placed upon him by his strong mined and jealous wife. After many years of feminine reign during which time the henpecked husband has continued to say, "yes my dear," to every command from his better half, the wife ventures to leave him alone while she goes away on a visit. This proves a turning point in the husband's career which leads to the many ridiculous incidents and laughable situations which befall the "Model Husband." He recklessly takes advantage of his freedom from petticoat government to have what he styles "a good time." He passes himself off as a single man, attends balls, clubs, operas, etc., and leads his younger associates a lively race of gaiety.

Mr. Dillon is delighted with his new comedy and fairly revels in his dual role of a henpecked husband and gay deceiver.

The supporting company has been carefully selected to suit the requirements of each character in the play, thus insuring a perfect performance.

An Hour Beneficially Spent.

Standing on the corner of Main and Robert streets, last Saturday evening, your scribe was brought to a realization of the fact that Crookston is a baby giant stretching out lusty limbs in every direction, waxing long and strong and broad in healthy growth. Speculating upon the cause of this phenomenal growth I thought of Prof. B. A. Strawbridge's Normal School and Business College, a leading, potent factor in awakening and keeping alive public interest in business and higher education. What more essential to the permanent prosperity of a city than fine schools? I concluded to go up and visit the school. Prof. B. A. Strawbridge meeting me in the ante-room, invited me into the office where he introduced me to his corps of teachers—trained teachers of proven ability. Then, despite the feeble protestations of your reporter, ushered me into the presence of a fashionable assembly. Really Friend Strawbridge should have had more consideration for youth and timidity. However I was fully recompensed for my discomfiture. Never in Crookston has your scribe enjoyed so fine a literary treat. A select, cultured, intelligent audience had assembled to enjoy an hour's walk in the higher realms of science.

At 8 o'clock, at the request of Prof. Strawbridge, Mr. Squier invoked the blessing of God upon the assembly and the institute, that the school might flow down the coming years a stream of learning and light enriching and enlightening the generations to come.

Prof. Strawbridge, then, in his usual graceful and happy manner, introduced the speaker of the evening, Prof. C. M. Titus, Principal of the Normal School and Business College.

Prof. Titus is the incarnation of the modern idea of an instructor. Of commanding presence, gentle, suave and gracious in mien, he took the audience by the hand and pointed back to the pre-astronomic age when all was unfathomable, inexplicable chaos. Then through the dark eras he brought us to the plain where the star of modern astronomy first appeared to the Chaldean, amid his lonely vigils. Calling his thoughts from the surrounding, almost unbearable solitude of a shepard's life, up to the vaulting blue skies where, trying to pierce the mysteries of their beauty, the Chaldean first made star-pictures, grouping the stars into fantastic outlines of monsters, giving them the names of Great and Little Bear, &c. The bright words of the speaker wafted us in fancy through countless thousands of years through bold, swift flights we ascended Newtonian heights, up through Herschall's era, till in the present time he brought us to the planet Neptune, Astronomy's latest discovery. Marshaling to his aid the sciences, mathematics, physiology, geology, the hand-maids of astronomy, the speaker discussed, through clearly defined, lucid and luminous illustrations, the relative distances, sizes, weights, influences and counter-influences of the planets of the solar system. Portrayed in glowing words, the photosphere, chromosphere and croma of the sun. Discussed sun-spots, their possible causes and nature. Then directing our attention downward, he led us through ellipse, parabole and hyperbola among the planets, the intermediate asteroids, comets, periodical and erratic, tarrying in the soft, effulgent nebulae, we saw or dreamed we saw stars shoot athwart a familiar atmosphere; we saw the nucleus of our comet burst into myriads of incandescent meteors, we felt a swaying sensation, then a slight shock and—lo! our meteor had landed us in dear old Crookston.

As Prof. Titus sat down your scribe rubbed his eyes and felt that he had indulged in a most delightful dream and awakened to the pleasant reflection that if these are the ways of modern teaching fain would I be a boy again and go to school.

Mr. Titus' was, indeed a masterly, logical, scholarly discourse, fully developing his idea, to make astronomy attractive and comprehensible to the young, and interesting to the maturer minds in the audience. His style is grave though not ponderous. His lecture discovered a wealth of learning, thought, reflecting faculties strongly developed, a great facility of using the known as a means to acquiring the unknown. Now and then the clash of counter-thoughts underlying the discourse sent up little ripples of wit and humor to the surface infinitely pleasing as the unexpected always is. Crookston is to be congratulated upon securing so able a man.

In dismissing the audience, Prof. Strawbridge took occasion to announce that this lecture is the precursor of many to follow, a lecture every alternate night during the term. Different themes will be discussed by different speakers. Prof. Strawbridge also announced that he has ample, comfortable boarding accommodations at the low price of $1.75 for fifty boarders or more.

Citizens, let us foster this institution of learning; it is a good thing to have among us.

AROUND THE WORLD.

An Opportunity to Circle the Globe With a Traveler.

As is well known, Rev. L. W. Squier the pastor of the First M. E. church of this city has spent much of his life in foreign lands, and has also made the trip around the globe. But unlike the majority of globe-trotters, he did not take the trip to merely gratify a love for pleasure or a desire for travel, but to acquire a more thorough knowledge of the different countries of the earth, their people their customs, and their moral and religious condition. A conversation with Mr. Squier will convince anyone that he made good use of his time while abroad and now has an almost inexhaustible fund of information stored away in his fertile brain. He is a close observer, has a retentive memory, and good descriptive powers.

Mr. Squier has decided to give the people of Crookston the benefit of his observations, and for this purpose he has been induced to give a series of seven lectures, which will be fully illustrated with stereoptican views of cities, buildings, people, etc., seen in a trip around the world. These lectures will commence soon, and one will be given about every ten days. The trip will be divided as follows:

First night—From New York to Japan via Hawaii.

Second—Japan and the Japanese.

Third—From Japan to Egypt, along the Equator.

Fourth—Egypt and the Egyptians.

Fifth—The Holy Land.

Sixth—Through Southern Europe.

Seventh—The British Isles. London to New York.

This trip and these views represent an outlay to Mr. Squier of over $1200 and those who like to listen to tales of travel, entertainingly told and instructively put, will have a rich treat in store in these forthcoming lectures. Full particulars will be given later.

Another Veteran Gone.

John Smith, one of the pioneer residents of eastern Polk county, died at his home in Mentor last Sunday evening of consumption. He leaves a wife and three children—one son who is about 2, and two daughters, the eldest of whom is married, and the youngest about 12 years of age. Deceased was a G. A. R. veteran, a genial companion, and an all around good fellow. He had just moved his family into the village from his farm and was going to conduct a hotel. He will be much missed, not only by his family, but by the people around Mentor, where he was well and favorably known by every person in the community.

Sold Mortgaged Property.

C. M. Christiansen, who lives in the vicinity of McIntosh, was arrested last Saturday on a charge of selling property which was mortgaged to the Merchants National Bank. On Monday he had a hearing before Justice Gossman, and admitted selling the mortgaged property—three head of cattle and some grain. The justice held him to the district court, and in default of $300 bonds, he was committed to the county jail to await trial.

For Dancing Purposes.

The Montgomery building on Main street—which will be known hereafter as the G. A. R. building—is being rapidly fitted up, and Col. Cobham Post will probably occupy it next month. The lodge room will be on the ground floor, and the upstairs has been fixed up for dancing purposes. Since the McKinnon hall has been occupied by the Normal college, there his been no hall available for public balls, and the G. A. R. people have decided to fill this want.

Died at Red Lake Falls.

Jane Knowlton, wife of Chester R. Knowlton, of Red Lake Falls, died at her home last Friday, the 17th inst., of cepticemia. She leaves a husband and four children. Her remains were taken to Rushford, Minn., for burial. She left about six or seven thousand dollars worth of property, mostly in Houston county, this state, which her husband and her brothers are already fighting about. The husband made application to the judge of probate here on Tuesday to be appointed administrator of the estate, and he thinks he has thus "got ahead of the other fellows."

ROBBERY OF DRAKE.

Twenty-five Thousand Secured by the Chicago Thieves.

CHICAGO, Nov. 15.—The robbery of J. A. Drake, treasurer of the Indiana, Illinois and Iowa railroad, which occurred shortly after 7 o'clock at his office in the Rookery building, was one of the boldest of its kind ever committed in Chicago.

A mail carrier, in passing Mr. Drake's office heard groans within, and, upon entering, found the official lying upon the floor, bruised and in a semi-conscious condition.

"I've been robbed by two men," said Mr. Drake, feebly, and the open safe, overturned valise and scattered papers confirmed his statement. Mr. Drake had evidently received rough treatment. Big welts on his head bore evidence of savage blows. He had but little to say, but the sum of $25,000 was mentioned as missing, and it was soon understood that the robbers had made away with that amount.

The police overhauled many suspects and last night it was reported that detectives had arrested two men at a depot who refused to give an account of themselves, and that they were locked up at the central station. None of the officers would admit than an arrest had been made.

TERRIBLE GALE.

Hundreds of Lives Lost on the English Coast.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—The latest reports received make the total number of deaths from drowning during the gale along the coast of Great Britain as 184, and this is without reckoning the crews of several vessels which have been seen to founder off the coast. The total fatalities, irrespective of the numerous crews of missing fishing fleets, is estimated at quite 200, according to the most conservative estimates. Dispatches received from Banff say that the seashore for 30 miles is strewn with the wreckage of vessels.

Some idea of the force of the gale can be gathered from the fact that two heavy railroad engines were blown off the track near Inverness, blocking all traffic.

It is impossible at this hour to give in detail the number and description of the wrecks or the damage done to houses and property, but the latest reports are that the gale now shows some signs of abating.

Channel traffic is now stopped at all points and many passengers who have been waiting since Saturday to cross the channel have been put to great inconvenience.

SEMINARY BURNED.

A Catholic Institution Near Madison, Wis., Destroyed—Three Fatalities.

MADISON, Wis., Nov. 17.—Edgewood, the Catholic seminary situated two miles east of this city, was totally destroyed by fire and two of the inmates burned to death, while a third was probably fatally injured. The financial loss is about $50,000; partially insured. The victims of the fire are Margie Rice of Stevens Point, Wis., and Maggie Stock of Chicago, aged 7. Frances Henneby, another little girl, was unconscious and nearly dead from smoke when rescued, but at last reports it was thought her life would be saved.

How the fire originated is a mystery. It started shortly before 9 o'clock in a room on the second floor of the main building. The girls whose lives were lost slept in or very near to this room.

BESIDE THE BAY OF MONTEREY.

Beside the bay of Monterey,
When morn is on the mountains,
What joy to hear and know not fear
The cry of seaborn fountains!

Across the bay of Monterey
The sea fog, thinly drifting,
The land reveals or shore conceals,
Soft scenes, like magic, shifting.

Beside the bay of Monterey
How sweet to walk at even,
When softened dyes from sunset skies
Steal up the sapphire heaven!

Along the reach of rocky beach
Oh, joy it is to follow,
Where blooms the sea anemone
In every waveworn hollow.

On giant rock that fronts the shock
The spray wet grasses glisten,
Where breaks the wave on cliff and cave
The flowers bend and listen.

I count the years by all my tears
And all life's stormy weather,
Since by the bay of Monterey
We wandered, love, together.

I walk along the changing shore,
Oh, sad and strange it seems!
And if you hear the billows roar,
You hear them but in dreams.
For you have slept now many a day
Upon the shore of Monterey.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court. Special term, November 18th, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Paul Lee deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of A. I. Hunter, administrator of said estate setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead, of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof, the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to him granted to sell the whole of said real estate of which said deceased died seized. And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses to sell the whole of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered, That all persons interested in said estate, appear before this Court, on Monday the 18th day of December, 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate office in the City of Crookston, in said County then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said administrator to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies and expenses.

And it is further ordered, That this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said County.

Dated at Crookston, the 18th day of November A. D. 1893.

MR. BLOUNT'S REPORT

SAYS STEVENS LENT AID TO THE REVOLUTIONISTS.

The Queen's Surrender Due Wholly to Fear of the Superior Force of Uncle Sam—The New York Herald Prints What Purports to Be a Portion of the Document.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—The Herald prints under a Washington date what purports to be a large portion of the report of Commissioner Blount. It sums up as follows: Commissioner Blount's report will show that Minister Stevens landed the troops from the Boston long before there was any valid excuse for their presence on Hawaiian soil; that he declined to remove them when requested to do so by the government and informed that the authorities were willing and fully able to preserve order and to protect American interests; that these troops were stationed across the street from the government building in which Minister Stevens knew the revolutionists were about to read their proclamation and that the revolutionists' committee relied upon the American troops to protect them in this act of rebellion; that Minister Stevens recognized the provisional government according to a preconceived programme before that government had obtained possesion of the departments and military power at Honolulu, and that the military power was surrendered, as the queen surrendered, only through awe of the superior force of the United States.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

Secretary Gresham Gives Out the Blount Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21. — Secretary Gresham decided during the afternoon to make public all the correspondence and the report of James H. Blount, the special commissioner sent to Hawaii by President Cleveland to investigate the revolution which dethroned Queen Liliuokalani and the establishment of the provisional government. Mr. Blount arrived at Honolulu March 29, 1893. In his report he calls attention to his reception by Minister Stevens, who, "accompanied by a committee from the annexation club, came on board the vessel which had brought me. He informed me that this club had rented an elegant house, well furnished and provided with servants, a carriage and horses for my use; that I could pay for this accommodation just when I chose, from nothing up. He urged me very earnestly to accept the offer. I declined it and informed him that I should go to a hotel." The committee renewed the offer, which was declined. He also refused to accept proffered favors from the ex-queen.

Position of the United States.

Concerning the position of the United States in the islands he says: "The troops from the Boston were doing military duty for the provisional government. The American flag was floating over the government building. Within it the provisional government conducted its business under an American protectorate, to be continued, according to the avowed purpose of the American minister, during negotiations with the United States for annexation. My instructions directed me to make inquiries which, in the interest of candor and truth, could not be done when the minds of thousands of Hawaiian citizens were full of uncertainty as to what the presence of American troops, the American flag and the American protectorate implied. It seemed necessary that all these influences must be withdrawn before those inquiries could be prosecuted in a manner befitting the dignity and power of the United States. Inspired with such feelings, and confident no disorder would ensue, I directed the removal of the flag of the United States from the government building and the return of the American troops to their vessels. This was accomplished without any demonstration of joy or grief on the part of the populace."

History of the Revolution.

He then reviews the history of the islands at some length, beginning with the constitution of 1852, and the changes made in the system of government down to the revolution of 1887, which resulted in the constitution of that year, and which is to a great extent given by Mr. Blount as the cause of the revolution of 1893. Mr. Blount then gives a detailed account of the events leading up to the revolution; the issuance of a new constitution by the queen; the refusal of the cabinet to sign it; various meetings of the leaders of the movement with Minister Stevens; the reading of the proclamation, declaring a provisional government; landing of United States troops from the Boston, etc., and says:

"The leaders of the revolutionary movement would not have undertaken it but for Mr. Stevens' promise to protect them against any danger from the government. But for this their mass meeting would not have been held. But for this no request to land troops would have been made. Had the troops not been landed no measures for the organization of a new government would have been taken. The American minister and the revolutionary leaders had determined on annexation to the United States and had agreed on the part each was to act to the very end."

Feel They Have Been Wronged.

Mr. Blount says that the native race feel that a great wrong has been done them and their queen. When the queen resigned under protest they did not believe the action of Stevens would be endorsed, and he adds: "Indeed, who would have supposed that the circumstances surrounding her could have been foreseen and sanctioned deliberately by the president of the United States. Her uniform conduct and the prevailing sentiment amongst the natives point to her belief as well as theirs, that the spirit of justice on the part of the president would restore her crown."

That is the only thing in the nature of a recommendation made.

The special commissioner closes with a description of the industries of the islands, statistics, comparisons of the races, changes in the conditions of the natives and information tending to show that they have been badly treated.

EX-MINISTER STEVENS TALKS.

Mr. Blount's Report as Published a "Shameless Perversion of Facts."

AUGUSTA, Me., Nov. 21.—A reporter of the Kennebec Journal called on the ex-Minister to Hawaii, John L. Stevens, at his home and asked if he had anything to say regarding Commissioner Blount's statement. Mr. Stevens said that he firmly adhered to all of the previous statements in his San Francisco and Augusta addresses to the country and in his open letter of last week to Secretary Gresham. He expressed great surprise at the language of Mr. Blount, as to Mr. Stevens' unwillingness to show him the records of the legation. Mr. Stevens says he feels himself at liberty to expose Mr. Blount's remarkable conduct towards himself, commencing immediately after Mr. Blount's arrival in Honolulu. It is a record, Mr. Stevens says, the publication of which will astonish all honorable minds, bringing to Mr. Stevens no censure unless it be that he tolerated such insulting treatment without at once resenting it by refusing all intercourse with the offending person.

Mr. Stevens two weeks ago made an imperative engagement out of the state, which will occupy the next two or three days. With reasonable promptness he will be heard in his own defense. "It is sufficient to say now," Mr. Stevens adds, "that Mr. Blount's report, so far as given to the public, is an ex parte and shameless preversion of the facts."

THE SOUTH OBJECTS.

Removal of Tariff on Certain Products a Death Blow to Her Prosperity.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—The New South sounded a warning to the ways and means committee during the day. It came from the manufacturing interests of Alabama and Tennessee whose representatives were refused a formal hearing by Chairman Wilson some days ago, but who later secured the privilege of making an informal argument before the Democratic members of the committee. As the delegations present were also Democratic in politics, the conference was very amicable until near the close, when the chief spokesman of the Southerners very broadly intimated that if iron ore, coal, lumber, rice and sugar were all to be placed on the free list under Democratic administration "the Democrats of the South might cease to kiss the hand that smites them."

The Yankton Indian Reservation to Be Opened In the Spring.

CHAMBERLAIN, S. D., Nov. 15.—A special agent of the interior department was at the Yankton agency last week for the purpose of finding out whether or not the Indians at that agency are in favor of a ratification of the treaty made with them last winter. At the time the treaty was negotiated there was strong opposition among the Indians, but since the appropaiations have become exhausted and the rations are all gone a great change has taken place, and it is reliably reported that they are now unanimously in favor of the treaty as it now stands. The treaty will be ratified at the coming session of congress,

SOLDIERS REBEL.

United States Troops at Fort Sheridan Kick on Their Food.

CHICAGO, Nov. 21.—The soldiers of the United States post, Fort Sheridan, have rebelled against the quality and quantity of food served at the regimental mess, and the officers are powerless to subdue the insubordinate troops. For several weeks the men have complained bitterly against the food furnished them, and Friday night the troops refused to eat and left the mess room in a body, procuring their evening meals in the stores of the adjacent village. It is believed that the affair is so serious as to necessitate an investigation by the war department at Washington.

THE new catalogue of Wright, Barrett & Stilwell, just received, is a perfect gem in its way reflecting great credit not only on the house but also upon the genius who compiled it. It is as slick as grease.

THE United States has added another warship to her navy—the Columbia. In her trial trip she earned a bonus of $350,500 for her builders, Willlom Cramp & Sons, by making a speed of over 25 miles an hour. She is the fastest vessel afloat, and will be a great addition to the once despised American navy.

BY THE politeness of the author, Dr. E. W. Fish, the JOURNAL has received a copy of the doctor's new book which we shall review at our leisure and give our readers our candid views upon it. The doctor is a strong, vigorous writer and we anticipate a rare literary treat in the perusal of "The Power Behind The Throne."

E. ASHLEY MEARS, the notorious South Dakota banker, whose banks have been closed during the past summer on account of his "peculiar" banking methods, has petitioned Comptroller Eckles repeatedly for permission to resume business, but that official has very properly and emphatically said that Mr. Mears shall never have another opportunity to gull the people—at least not while he has anything to say about it.

Another Scandinavian paper is to be started in Fergus Falls to be called Rodhuggeren (stump clearer.) The concern is to have two ends to it—Fergus Falls and Crookston. A Mr. Oftelie will conduct the Fergus Falls end, while Ole E. Hagen of this city will look after the Crookston branch. The latter gentleman will furnish the type and material for the paper, having bought, sometime ago, the outfit of the defunct Folkets Tidende, which flourished in the city for three consecutive weeks in the latter part of March, 1892. By having an office in Fergus Falls and another in Crookston its promoters hope to thoroughly cover the Seventh congressional district—Congressman Boen's district. And right here is where rumor explains the object of the launching of another Scandinavian paper upon a field already thoroughly covered—if not overdone—by the Ugeblad at Fergus Falls, and the Red River Dalen in this city. It is said that Congressman Boen is the power behind the project; that he it is who is furnishing the money for the enterprise; and that the sole object of the paper is to help secure Mr. Boen a re-nomination and re-election to his present position. This may account for the recent visit to this city of the Congressman, who it is said made his home with Ole E. Hagen while here, and seemed to have more business with that gentleman than all the rest of the Populist leaders in the city combined. Of course Mr. Boen does not want it known that he has anything whatever to do with the new paper, as that would handicap the Rodhuggern in working for him. However it may be, we venture the prediction that Mr. Boen will find it quite expensive to maintain an organ of this kind.

DUNN'S BUDGET.

Interesting News and Gossip from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, November 21.—Well, this Hawaiian affair follows so fast upon the elections that it really took our breaths away. It looks as if Cleveland was mad at the American people and he intended to humiliate them before the civilized world by setting upon the Hawaiian throne a coarse old woman, not to say anything worse of her. The Islands are far away, but every secretary of state has asserted our interest in them. Running through Gresham's letter is his animus—Harrison and Blaine. Cleveland has presented a number of surprises, but there is none in which he has slapped American patriotism harder than in throwing down a struggling republic and re-establishing a disgusting monarchy.

I suppose in that matter of how the Minneapolis Journal traced the defaulter Menage, that one man who is entitled to a great deal of credit will never be mentioned. I mean Van Antwerp, the Journal's Washington correspondent, and one of the best known and highly respected newspaper men of this city. When Attorney Nye and the Journal detective came here they wanted Menage arrested. They went to see Secretary Gresham. He referred them to the law man of the State department and he said that it could not be done. The Minneapolis men thought it would be a good thing to bring the great influence of Commissioner Lochren to bear. This is very funny as Gresham would probably have to have who Judge Lochren is explained to him. But the matter was solved very easily. Van knew where to go and he saw the right man, brought the right influence to bear, and in a few minutes the arrest was ordered. Like any first-class newspaper man Van knew the ropes, and had the confidence and good will of the men who pulled the wires. He has been here long enough to learn how.

Some one told me that Minnesota papers were saying that Maj. Baldwin had the swelled head. This is not true. If any man ever appreciated what a spec he was upon the body politic and what little there was for him in public life, that man is the representative of the sixth district. He tries hard, but fate is against him.

I observe that the Democratic papers are beginning to abuse Senator Washburn. This is probably in anticipation of elections that are coming on in about a year. They probably regard him as a promising candidate of the republicans, and think that it is first necessary to destroy him, before they can hope to make any capital for some one in their own party. But they will never be able to explain away the splendid record which Senator Washburn has made in the Senate. He has not only been a credit to his party, but to his State as well. Men of Minnesota, of whatever party, have reason to be proud of the junior senator.

Senator Washburn is one of the few men in the Senate who always knows what is going on, whether it be on the surface or away inside. For this reason he is popular with the newspaper men as he can give them valuable pointers from time to time. He is always on hand when the Senate is in session, as well.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, o ita na Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. A NEW SMOKELESS POWDER.

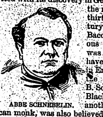
A Terrible Instrument of Warfare Invented by a Man of Peace.



ABBE SCHNEBELIN.

Gunpowder was long supposed to have been the invention of monks. Albertus Magnus, a learned Dominican, was credited with its discovery in Germany about the middle of the thirteenth century, and Roger Bacon, the famous Franciscan, was supposed to have invented it in England about the same time. B. Schwarz, "the Black Barthel," another Franciscan monk, was also believed to have devised the destructive compound about 1854, though it was suspected that he might have discovered the formula in some old monastic manuscript. These monks may have made independent discoveries of explosive powder, for they all dabbled in chemistry, but it is pretty certain that the Chinese knew the secret of its manufacture as long back as the third century of the Christian era, and they are supposed to have obtained it from India.

Now a French priest, the Abbe Schnebelin, has added to the already long though recent list of smokeless powders and has given the explosive his own name, calling it "Schnebelite." The abbe recently gave an exhibition of his powder at Nunhead in the presence of a number of interested people. He first made some of it in the presence of the spectators to demonstrate the simplicity and rapidity of its manufacture without any special apparatus. Then he placed some of the powder on an anvil and pounded it with a hammer, but the concussion did nothing but grind the powder finer, no explosion being produced.

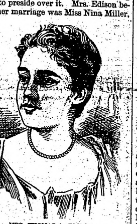
Friction was also demonstrated to be without effect upon the substance, and when a lighted match was applied to a small pile of it there was not the least deflagration, though it burned with a bright light. Loaded in hermetically sealed cartridges, however, it proved its susceptibility to concussion.

At a range of 100 yards it drove bullets through a plate of Bessemer steel an eighth of an inch thick and through four inches of the wood with which the target was backed up. This was done with the ordinary sporting powder, and the concentrated powder for use in warfare is said to be very much stronger.

INVENTOR EDISON'S HELPMEET.

A Charming Woman In a Charming Home at Llewellyn Park, N. J.

Edison, the great inventor, has an ideal home at Orange, N. J., and a charming wife to preside over it. Mrs. Edison before her marriage was Miss Nina Miller, daughter of Lewis Miller, the millionaire inventor and leading light in the Chautauqua movement. Edison met her in Boston, where she was studying music, some time in 1885. He fell desperately in love, and within six months they were engaged to be married. The wedding took place in February, 1886. Mrs. Edison is tall and stately and has brown eyes and warm, dark hair and a clear olive complexion. She is perfectly proportioned and very graceful and altogether a charming woman.



MRS. THOMAS A. EDISON.

The Edison home, Glenmont, is in Llewellyn Park, a suburb of Orange, and one of the prettiest places in the Orange mountains, being situated on the eastern slope of Eagle Rock, whence can be obtained one of the most beautiful and extensive views to be had in the neighborhood of New York. The observatory at Coney Island, 20 miles away, can be discerned from there on a clear day, and charming glimpses of the intervening country. Glenmont itself is luxurious and beautiful. Its furnishings and decorations are in the best of taste, and Edison has a comfortable, big library, in which a bookworm might dream away his existence in contented peace and idleness.

Edison has no time for that kind of dreaming, however. His province is rather to make dreams practicable, and to that end he spends most of his time in his laboratory and workshops—a group of red brick buildings about five minutes' walk from the house. They say that Mrs. Edison has often to go down to the laboratory to remind her husband that it is mealtime, for he gets so absorbed in his experiments that he quite forgets the necessity of eating.

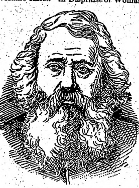
HE PRINTS RARE BOOKS.

William James Linton Has a Many Sided Genius.

It makes one think of Benvenuto Cellini to read about William James Linton, artist, engraver, poet, historian and British republican, for his genius seems as many sided as that of the famous sixteenth century Italian. He has lived at New Haven for the past quarter of a century in a pretty little cottage he calls Appledore, out near East Rock park, where he conducts his famous Appledore press—his private printing office—the products of which bibliophiles have already learned to appreciate and which will one day be worth their weight in gold and even more.

Here the works are printed as labors of love for the arts in which the author-engraver-printer takes such pride. Of a volume called "In Dispraise of Woman," a collection of 32 English versions of the epigram by Catullus, "Nulli se dicit mulier mea nubere malle," but 25 copies were printed and only 50 copies of "Love Lore," a collection of lyrics by Linton himself, while of the first edition of "The Masters of Wood Engraving," which he printed solely to show his publishers how it should be done, just three copies were turned from the press. "Fairy fastidiousness" a friendly critic calls his arduous labor for the love of art, but then the friendly critic has evidently never done much printing.



WILLIAM JAMES LINTON.

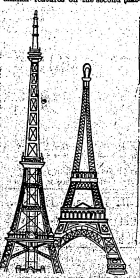
It is necessary to go back to the stirring days when Mazzini was in London and the chartists and republicans were on deck to connect Mr. Linton with actual participation in politics. He was 25 years old when he met Mazzini. He is 81 now and still talks of the great Italian with the enthusiasm of early manhood. "This is the book by which I shall be remembered, if I am to be remembered," he said, brushing aside the fame of all his beautiful art work, which will live while books are printed, and taking up a copy of his "European Republicans—Recollections of Mazzini and His Friends." The young man looked out from his bright eyes then, and it was not hard to overlook the snow white hair and beard and fancy him back in London in the days when he and his idolized art of wood engraving were both in their prime, and the London Illustrated News, The Leader and Pen and Pencil were the best exponents of both.

OUT-EIFFELS EIFFEL.

The Tall Tower In Wembley Park Will Be Thirteen Hundred Feet High.

London is not a-going to put up with the ascendency of Paris in the matter of towers any longer. She is a bit jealous of M. Eiffel's toploftical construction and proposes to go him about 175 feet better. In Wembley Park, one of the suburbs, she has now in process of erection, overlooked by the watchful eye of Sir Benjamin Baker, who built the great Forth bridge, a tower which she swears shall pierce the atmosphere at an altitude of 1,300 feet. It is being constructed entirely of steel and will weigh about 7,500 tons. The four legs, already nearly up to the first platform, are built on four solid blocks of concrete 75 feet thick and stand at the corners of a square of 300 feet base.

There will be three platforms to the tower at altitudes of 150 feet, 500 feet and 950 feet respectively. The area of the first will be about 200 feet square and will be covered by a concert hall, restaurants and shops of various kinds. There will be similar features on the second platform, but on a smaller scale, and on the third, which will be 40 feet higher than the topmost landing of the Eiffel tower, a postoffice branch with telephonic communication will be established. An electric light of extraordinary power will cap the very climacteric tip and shed its radiance for the Lord only knows how many miles around.



WEMBLEY AND EIFFEL TOWERS.

The postoffice branch is expected to prove a very remunerative feature, and if the business in that line on the top platform of the Paris tower may be taken as an indication the postmaster general will not have any cause to complain.

"Only the Scars Remain,"

Says HENRY HUDSON, of the James Smith Woolen Machinery Co., Philadelphia, Pa., who certifies as follows:

"Among the many testimonials which I see in regard to certain medicines performing cures, cleansing the blood, etc., none impress me more than my own case. Twenty years ago, at the age of 18 years, I had swellings come on my legs, which broke and became running sores. Our family physician could do me no good, and it was feared that the bones would be affected. At last, my good old to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I took three bottles, the sores healed, and I have not been troubled since. Only the scars remain, and the memory of the past, to remind me of the good Ayer's Sarsaparilla has done me. I now weigh two hundred and twenty pounds, and am in the best of health. I have been on the road for the past twelve years, have noticed Ayer's Sarsaparilla advertised in all parts of the United States, and always take pleasure in telling what good it did for me."

Mother Urged Me

The Origin of Starching.

The course of history carries us back no further than the year 1564 for the origin of starching in London. It was in that year that Mistress Van der Plasse came with her husband from Flanders to the English metropolis "for their greater safety," and there professed herself a starcher. The best housewives of the time were not long in discovering the excellent whiteness of the "Dutch linen," as it was called, and Mistress Plasse soon had plenty of good paying clients. Some of these began to send her ruffs of lawn to starch, which she did so excellently well that it became a saying that if any one sent her a ruff made of a spider's web she would be able to starch it. So greatly did her reputation grow that fashionable dames went to her to learn the art and mystery of starching, for which they gladly paid a premium of £4 or £5, and for the secret of seething starch they paid gladly a farther sum of 20 shillings.—New York World.

A Hair Splitting Bishop.

It is recorded of a certain hair splitting English bishop, who was accustomed to compose his "charges" in the train, and whose desk was always placed opposite to him, that he invariably treated it as though it were a living vis-a-vis. The train being very full on one occasion, a would be passenger inquired if this place was taken, and the bishop, with his sunniest smile, expressed regret that there was no room. "I don't think that was quite right, my lord," said one of his fellow passengers. "What was not right?" inquired his lordship urbanely. "To say that the place was taken." "Pardon me, I did not say that it was taken; I was particularly careful to use the word 'occupied.'"—San Francisco Argonaut.

He Was a Senator.

Senator Allen of Nebraska is a big, burly man who looks like a prosperous dealer in live stock. Shortly after his arrival in Washington he was stopped at the door of the senate chamber by a new doorkeeper, who informed him that no one save senators was allowed on the floor. Mr. Allen smiled sadly, waved his hand and said: "Very well, sonny, I'm a senator. I don't look it, I know, but I am, just the same," and passed into the sacred precincts.—Chicago Herald.

Lady's Promenade Costume.

MOSS-GREEN diagonal was used for this stylish costume, with velvet of a deeper tone of green for the accessories. The bodice is double-breasted and closed with large enameled buttons below the bust. At the top it is folded back with a full soft drapery, a full soft vest piece being revealed between the openings. This may be formed of surah or silk in the same or a contrasting color. The sleeves are very full at the top and completed by flaring cuffs of velvet. The soft belt worn with this costume is passed through buckles in the back. The skirt displays the fashionable close adjustment in front with the fulness in the back disposed in gathers. It is edged at the bottom with a plaited ruffle. This model may be attractively developed in silk, bengaline, serve and other fashionable dress fabrics. The small toque is of black felt with a garniture of green velvet, and a bird in dragon-fly tints resting on the front.

Lady's Waist Pattern No. 3728, is cut in 5 sizes, for ladies from 32 to 40 inches bust measure, and requires, for the medium size, 2¼ yards material 44 inches wide, or 3¼ yards 27 inches. Price 25 cents.

Lady's Skirt Pattern No. 3722, is cut in 5 sizes, for ladies 22 to 30 inches waist measure, and requires, for the medium size, 4⅛ yards material 44 inches wide, or 6½ yards 27 inches. Price 30 cents.

Thanksgiving Day.

That the war for the Union accomplished more things than the abolition of slavery, is only one of the many instances in which causes have produced effects not anticipated. The best thing the war did for us was to make us a nation. Daniel Webster said "I know no North, no South no East, no West," but he stood almost alone. Now there is year by year less talk about the special interest of any "section;" we are becoming one people. One of the best evidences of the decay of sectionalism is the almost universal observance of Thanksgiving Day. Before the war, it was looked upon in the South and West as a "Yankee institution;" now the President of the United States and the Governors of most of the states recommend its observance by formal proclamation. It is a great day for home-gathering. Do you intend to meet the brothers and sisters next week at the home of your childhood? If you are anywhere west of Chicago, the best route to the old homestead, be it North, South, East or West, is the Burlington Route, which goes everywhere. WORLD'S FAIR JURY

Grants Highest Award to Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder.

Chicago, Nov.22—On the analysis and recommendations of Dr. Wiley, Chief United States Government Chemist at Washington, and greatest living athority on food products, the World's Fair jury to day gave the hightest award to Dr Price's Cream Baking Powder for strength, purity and excellence. This conclusively settles the queston of superiority. Dr. Wiley rejected the alum powders stating to the World's Fair jury that he considered them unwholesome.

The Only Hicks' Almanac.

The Rev. Irl R. Hicks' Almanac for 1894 is the first and only Almanac entirely written and published by the great storm prophet, himself. It is an elegant book of 64 pages, besides the cover, with an attractive original design on the cover. It contains Prof. Hicks' monthly weather forecasts complete for the year 1894; all the current astrononomical phenomena for each month, finely illustrated; including four eclipses and the transit of the planet, Mercury; an article on "Foundation Facts" giving the philosophy and essential points of Prof. Hicks' weather system; a paper on the use of barometers and scientific instruments; an article on longitude and time by the leading authority on time in this country, accompanied by an excellent map, and other useful articles. The price of this excellent little work is 25 cents. It will make an excellent holiday present for your intelligent friend. For sale by all newsdealers or write and send 25 cents to the publishers and it will be sent postpaid. Word and Works Pub. Co., St. Louis, Mo.

NEWSLETS

The two gas companies in Grand Forks are having a lively fight. The new company which furnishes air gas, made a reduction from the prices charged by the old concern, and as they furnish a better light, were getting a good share of the business. The old company now offer to prove that it takes from two and one-half to two and three times as much of the new gas to run a burner an hour as it does of the gas furnished by them. With air gas, coal gas and electric light, the citizens of Grand Forks should be able to dispell the darkness cheaply enough.

Fontaine & Anglim.

OUT OF THE JAWS OF DEATH

BY FRANK BARRETT.

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY CASSELL & CO AND PUBLISHED BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT

stretch of mud and refuse thinly patched with tufts of grimy nettles and withering grass, an ocher sky above and a distance gray with the slanting rain.

I plodded on doggedly—why should I go back—with my head down, like a jaded beast, sometimes closing my eyes to shut out the surroundings which seemed to add to the sick loathing within me, stumbling in rough places, careless whether I fell or not, benumbed, dazed, more asleep than awake.

The howl of a tug aroused me, and lifting my head drowsily I found that I was by the side of the river, separated from it only by a narrow causeway and a strip of oozy shingle. The factories on the other side were half hidden in their own smoke, beaten down by the rain. The line of shore upon this side was unbroken save by a hulk that stood aground at some distance. I saw the tug slide away into the murky cloud that hung over the river and watched the swell it made flow up the shingle and recede, flowing again and falling in diminishing waves until the last ripple faded away, leaving the stream as still as a pond under the steady rain.

It was time to go on again, now that there was nothing more to notice. Which way should I go? I asked myself, and then, Where should I go, and why? Neither shelter nor food was to be got by walking, nothing but aching pain in body and soul. Better to stop here and rest. A wisp of straw came into sight, floating down with the stream so easily that I envied its condition. To lie upon the water and knowing nothing, feeling nothing, to pass away in endless sleep, surely that must be good. It would not be colder to lie in the river than to stand shivering in the rain. Nothing could be worse than living.

I walked down the shingle and stood in the water. It seemed warm to my feet. I walked out still farther, and my limbs ceased to shake under me. What a fool I had been to endure such misery, with this alternative at hand! I went out more swiftly till the water lifted me from my feet, and I felt myself going on and on without exertion. I put my hands up to my breast to see if the ring was there and clasped them upon it to keep it safe.

Then out of the darkness that closed over me the grave, kind face of Taras came into sight, and out of the rushing sound in my ears his voice spoke, I know not what, but with the tones I had heard before of soothing music. Everything was fading away like ideas at the approach of sleep, but at the very last the kind eyes smiled as if Taras in those dying sounds were saying, "Farewell, little friend."

CHAPTER VII.

A NEW LIFE.

Taras read in the summary of a morning newspaper:

"An extraordinary case of attempted suicide came before 'the poor man's friend' yesterday and is reported in our columns. The prisoner, a respectably dressed young woman not uninteresting in appearance seemingly, was seen to walk deliberately into the river off Greenwich marshes and was rescued only just in time for life to be restored. She has persistently refused to open her lips in reply to questions, and the only clew by which she may possibly be identified is a mysterious ring which was found worn on a piece of ribbon about her neck. It's a man's ring made of wrought iron with the devise in Russian characters running around it, 'My life is thine.'"

He found the report under the head of "Police Intelligence:"

Thames Police Court.—A young woman, whose name, age, etc., were marked "unknown" on the charge sheet, was brought up for having attempted to commit suicide. Inspector Lewson explained that he had been unable to fill in the charge sheet, as prisoner had obstinately refused to answer questions, and indeed had not spoken one word since she had been in custody. He could not say whether her silence was the result of perversity or inability to speak or to understand. The only indication of her nationality was a man's ring made of wrought iron, which had been found on a strip of braid tied round her neck, and which had an inscription running round it in foreign characters which he believed were Greek. On the ring being handed up to the magistrate he said the device was in Russian and meant "My life is thine." Addressing the prisoner in this language the magistrate put several questions without effect, prisoner maintaining perfect silence, though showing the utmost anxiety to recover the ring, and seizing it with savage delight when the magistrate had it passed over to her.

Inspector Lewson said that the prisoner was seen from the Warspite police hulk stationed off Greenwich marshes to walk deliberately into the river. A rescue crew was sent off at once, but prisoner was unconscious when picked up. He had been unable to gather any particulars respecting her, excepting that she had been seen in High street, Greenwich, early that morning, with no covering but a light wrap, and completely drenched with exposure to the heavy rain.

The magistrate again addressed the prisoner with his customary kindness and sympathy, but failing to obtain the slightest response remanded her, at the same time expressing a hope that the reporters would give publicity to the case in order that the prisoner's friends—if she had any—might come to her assistance.

The following is a description of the young woman: Height, 5 feet 5 inches; probable age, 21; hair dark chestnut, eyebrows and lashes of a deeper shade; eyes dark brown, features long, irregular, delicate, but pinched and hardened by privation; fingers long; dressed in gray stuff dress, plain but well made, but obviously too large for her slight figure; high heeled button boots, also too large; ears unpierced, and no ornament whatever except the above mentioned ring.

Taras came to me—with what dispatch I can imagine, knowing his unhalting swiftness to relieve distress. I was brooding in the police cell, seated on my bed with my chin resting in my hands, when I heard the grating in the door moved. I had been visited already, questioned and lectured enough, and I sat there motionless under this last inspection in sullen determination to let nothing move me. But at the words, "That is she," I started to my feet, in an instant recognizing the voice of Taras and waited while the door was being opened for him to enter with such trembling fear as I had not felt before the magistrate who might send me to a prison or a madhouse. Did he, too, regard it as a crime to try to end one's misery? Had he come to reproach me with my sins? I hung my head, fearing to read my condemnation in his face.

"My little friend," he said.

The true ring of sympathy in his voice, the look of tender compassion I found in his eyes [illegible] lifted mine, told me that he forgave me, and with an involuntary cry of joy I caught the two hands that he held out to me.

He spoke to the warder, who after a little hesitation withdrew, leaving us alone.

Then I whispered to Taras:

"You've heered all about it."

"As much as I want to know," he replied.

"And you don't mind?"

"I mind so much as this—that if I can make life endurable to you I will."

"I won't do it again if you tell me not to. I'll bear anything—I've made my mind up to it. Will you come and see me again?"

"See you again! Why, you don't think I mean to leave you here?"

"I didn't know Do you think you can get me off?"

"There's very little difficulty about that."

"He's lef' the door ajar, and if I oncet gets in the street"— I stopped, for a smile on his face told me that he did not intend to get me off in this way.

"There's no need to run the gantlet," said he. "The magistrate is a good and reasonable man. I will tell him all I know about you." Then he stopped, seeing my dismay at this proposal.

"Don't you want me to tell him?" he asked.

"I don't mind—not much. Do what you like. I won't complain. Only he won't let me off—he can't. Preaps as you're a foreigner you don't know that in this country what I've done is a hangin job."

"What!" he exclaimed, with another smile, "hang a girl for trying to kill herself?"

I saw that we were playing at cross purposes, and after a minute's silence I said:

"I thought you knew all; but you don't. I thought it 'ud 'a' been in all the newspapers and every one a-talkin about it. I was a-goin to tell you at first, but I turned it off when I see you look at me so terrible. But I'll tell you now, 'cause I can't bear to think I ain't actin square with you—you're so kindlike to me. Only you won't be too angry with me, will you? And you'll come and see me again one of these days 'fore it's all up wi' me, hey?"

"Tell me what you mean, little friend, for heaven's sake!" he said earnestly.

"I done for 'em, not like I made out, but real done for 'em. I smashed the foreigner with a stone and shet 'em both down in the hole and set the cellar all afire—true as heving I did." And then I narrated in detail what took place after I had let him down by the chain and before I rejoined him on the stairs.

He listened in mute amazement, with set features, but with such gentleness melting in his eyes that, having finished my story, I found courage to touch his arm and say, "You ain't a-goin to shrink from me for doin what I didn't know you wouldn't like, are you?"

"God forbid," he said, pressing my hand. "If you did this thing, I am responsible—not you—and if punishment is to follow I will take my full share."

Holding my hand, as if to assure me of the bond of fellowship, he stood for some moments silent in thought. Then, after putting a few rapid questions to me, his face brightened and he said:

"I am hopeful, little friend. That Mongolian head is too hard to be smashed by the slight fall of that stone. The lamp upset on the earthen floor of a brick cellar would not hold sufficient benzine to set fire to the floor above. If the house had been burned down, the bodies of those two rascals would have been unearthed, and the tragedy could not have escaped the notice of my friends in the Minories. I will go and find out the truth. If the men are killed, I will come back and give myself up to the police for my share in the murder. If they are not, you shall leave this cell before noon. In any case I will see you again quite soon."

The cab that brought him stood outside the station. He sprang in, telling the driver to go to Sweet Apple lane. As he neared Ferryboat stairs his first hope was realized. The Mariner's Joy still stood The shutters were down. He stopped the cab, and a minute after stood on the spot where he had been thrown down and overpowered a few nights before. There his second hope was partly gratified. Putty stood behind the bar with one arm in a sling, a patch over his eye and otherwise looking rather the worse for recent events, but still alive. At the sight of Taras standing there before him with that strong, resolute face and formidable proportions, his jaw fell.

"You ain't a-goin to round on us, master, are you?" he asked in a tone of abject remonstrance. "It wasn't no fault of mine. I didn't know what they was after. And look here, I've had a pretty good doin for it one way and another—what of gettin my eye pretty well knocked out, and my arm a-nigh broke, as you may say, along of that feller a-fallin all the way down that hole a-top of me, to say nothin of getting burnt here and there and all down there, and a new suit o' clothes torn off my body, with internal injuries as causes me that ill convenience I can't sleep a wink all night. And got nothin for it neither. Why, I'm bless'd if I don't wish I hadn't never seen the lyin, ugly hound with his hump back."

"Where is he now?" asked Taras sternly.

"Well, that's more 'an I can tell you, master, and I'd round on him if I could—that's as true as heving, for he ain't paid me a farthin' for all the damage done, to say nothin of what he promised, which comes of trustin spies and bein a fool not to stand by you as are a real gentleman and won't be too hard on a poor fellow, I know. However, it's a comfort to know as he got his jimmy cracked by that ere flagstone a-wallopin down on him and serve him right and won't be able to show his ugly face outside a house for weeks to come through gettin burnt along of the lighted ile 10 times wus 'an me, and I give him a tidy dressin down, too, though if you only knew what I suffered down that hole and well nigh drownded, too—the pair of us—and then as near suffocated with smoke as it don't matter, what afore ever we managed to get up out of the cellar."

Taras waited to hear no more, but turned his back and left the Mariner's Joy without a word—doubtless not less to the astonishment than to the satisfaction of the apprehensive Putty.

From Ferryboat stairs Taras hurried back to the Thames police court. It was still early. The magistrate was hearing applications in his private room. Taras sent in his card, with a few words written below and obtained an immediate interview, in which, with characteristic candor and directness, he briefly told what he knew of my history, leaving the magistrate to form his own conclusions as to the cause of my attempt to destroy myself, and offered to give sureties for my better behavior in the future. But before he had arrived at this point the magistrate wrote an order and dispatched it to the station. The officer who brought it took me back to the court. Taras was standing at the door, and I saw by the light in his face that he had good news for me.

"The men are living," he said as I passed him.

The magistrate had just taken his seat when I was led into the dock. He refrained from putting any questions, but spoke to me at some length in a tone of severity. The tone was all I heard, for my thoughts were wholly occupied with conjectures as to the course Taras would take in the future. It mattered very little to me whether I went to prison or returned to such an existence as I had hitherto led in Shadwell. The more important question was whether Taras would come sometimes to give me a kind look, or whether having done so much he would feel himself released from any further concern for my welfare and so leave me to my fate. These speculations were broken off by the warder.

"Come on down," said he, touching my arm. "Don't you hear? You're discharged."

I left the dock, and another "remand" took my place. Taras beckoned me, and taking me out the court put me in the cab waiting there. I did not catch the address he gave to the driver, but to my great joy he stepped up and seated himself beside me.

"Are ye goin to take me back to Shadwell?" I asked.

"No," said he; "we must find a better world than that."

"The Minories?" I asked, with a recollection of the fair haired woman.

He shook his head and said:

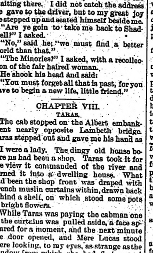
"You must forget all that is past, for you have to begin a new life, little friend."

CHAPTER VIII.

TARAS.

The cab stopped on the Albert embankment nearly opposite Lambeth bridge. Taras stepped out and gave me his hand as if I were a lady. The dingy old house before us had been a shop. Taras took it for the view it commanded of the river and turned it into a dwelling house. What had been the shop front was draped with French muslin curtains within, drawn back behind a shelf, on which stood some pots of bright flowers.

While Taras was paying the cabman one of the curtains was pulled aside, a face appeared for a moment, and the next minute the door opened, and Mere Lucas stood there looking, to my eyes, as strange as the window from which she had first peeped out. She was so stout that she quite filled up the doorway, and her proportions were the more noticeable for a big apron of dazzling whiteness worn over her blue cotton dress. On her head was an equally dazzling kind of a cap I had never seen before, elaborately goffered, with the strings carefully tied in a fine broad bow under her double chin. There was a pretty wave of silvery hair growing low on her forehead, and then came her great broad face, with its expression of healthy cheerfulness, not less remarkable to the eyes of an east ender than the spick and span neatness and cleanliness of her dress.



The next minute the door opened, and Mere Lucas stood there.

Her fine dark eyes looked as if they might flash at times with passionate anger, but the lines about them were pleasant traces left by mirth, and her long upper lip and broad mouth seemed made for laughter and good cheer. Her habitual geniality, however, was less obvious just then, for she scanned me with a distinctly unfavorable eye, and her pursed lips showed that she disapproved of her master bringing home such a visitor. Had I been well dressed, or only tolerably good looking, it would have been another thing. But she respected and loved Taras too well to let him read her dissatisfaction, and drawing back into the passage as he led me in she received us with a profound bow and opened the door of the adjoining room.

"This is my housekeeper, Mere Lucas," said Taras to me as he entered, and turning to her he spoke a few words in French which caused her to gasp an exclamation of astonishment as she clasped her hands together. Then, after regarding me for a moment in silence and round eyed wonder, she addressed me in her unintelligible language, but I understood her tone of apology and self reproach, and the tremulous emotion in her full lips and the affectionate warmth in her soft eyes fully atoned for any hostility she might at first have shown. Finally, as if by an ungovernable impulse, she seized me by the shoulders and planted a couple of sounding kisses on my cheeks, saying as she gave me one last embrace before leaving the room, "Pauvre cherie, va!"

I remember that phrase because for some time after she never looked at me without repeating it in the same tone of compassion. Indeed, with my thinness and careworn expression, I must have seemed to the eyes of the fat, jolly soul deplorable indeed.

We were in the room which had been the shop. It was low ceilinged, but large and very light and bright by reason of the long window, with the white muslin curtains, the flowers and many pictures hung upon the painted walls. But that which astonished me greatly was the surprising neatness and cleanliness of everything, for really this was the first time in my life that I had ever been the inside of a decent room; and next to this the table, which was laid for lunch, excited my wonder.

There was a vase of cut flowers in the middle of the spotless tablecloth, and in the plate set for Taras stood a small loaf set up in a white serviette which would have made me laugh if I had not been so perplexed by the strangeness of everything. The quantity of food also seemed quite ludicrous too. It was the ordinary hour for dinner, and all that was prepared for the repast of a great, hearty man, was a box of sardines, a plate of radishes and some butter, and Mere Lucas brought nothing more except a cover for me and a bottle of wine, which she stood on a small silver plate.

We sat down, and seeing Taras take the loaf out and spread the serviette over his knees I did the same, though it seemed to me about the oddest thing in the world, and then he passed the sardines for me to help myself. I could very well have eaten all the little fishes there were in the box, but out of consideration for him who was three times as big as me, I only took about a quarter of the contents, and I also took about a quarter of the number of radishes, but I could not help looking at Taras in surprise when he took but two sardines and only three or four radishes. "Well, however does he live?" I asked myself.

"May I fill your glass?" he asked, taking up the bottle, "or would you like beer instead?"

"I ain't partic'lar," I said; "winde's good enough for me."

The wine made me shudder. "Four-half" was nectar in comparison with such sour stuff, I thought. However, I gulped it down and said nothing, not to appear too nice. I had scraped out my plate and was screwing up my courage to tell Taras that I would finish up the box if he didn't want any more, when Mere Lucas bustled in, whisked off our plates, knives and forks, and set others in their place, though the cutlery was as bright and clean as if it had just come from the makers. Then she placed a steaming dish on a stand.

"Come," said I to myself, "here's duff to fill up with at any rate."

But I found that it was a savory dish—macaroni au gratin I know now—and that was not half bad, besides which there was plenty of it, and to my great relief Taras took all that I left. Then in came another dish—cutlets, with paper frills around the bones, and potatoes frothed up in a fashion as odd as everything else, and by this time I began to wonder when this sort of thing was going to end. However, there was no more to eat except fruit after that, for which I was thankful, as my appetite was fully satisfied, and I did not like to refuse lest Taras should think I was displeased with my food. But the oddity of the whole meal was capped by Mere Lucas bringing in a large bright pot after dessert and filling two small cups with hot coffee, which we had to drink without milk.

"I usually smoke a pipe with my coffee," said Taras. "Do you object?"

"Garn!" replied. "It ain't likely."

He filled his pipe slowly in grave silence, and I watched him, trembling with anxiety, for I felt that he was about to decide my fate. He had not yet spoken a word with regard to my future, waiting until my bodily needs were satisfied and my mind was in a better condition to grasp fresh ideas before opening a subject which to him at least was of such weighty importance.

"I have been very silent," he said after lifting his eyes and regarding me for a moment with kindly solicitude, "because I have had a great deal to settle in my own mind. But that is settled now, and if you like we will talk about"—he turned his chair round so as to face me and added, after a silent puff at his pipe—"about tomorrow."

"Tomorrer!" I echoed. "What's a-goin to happen then?"

"That is what we must try to decide. Tomorrow at 9 o'clock I shall go to the pottery where I work"—

"You ain't a-goin to send me away till 9 tomorrer mornin?" said I joyfully.

"No. Mere Lucas will take care of you tonight. Have you any notion what you shall do after?"

"Yes," I replied resolutely. "I made my mind up to it while I was in the station 'us. I shall go back to Shadwell. 'Tain't no good. I got to live and face it out like the rest on us. And I can't get a livin where I ain't known. I'll go back to the Joy. Dessay I'll get off with a punch or two. Then Putty'll come round and give me a job, 'cause he knows I don't nick the beer nor the coppers."

"I think I must ask one question. Are you related to that man in any way?"

"Not me. I don't 'member ever havin no relatives."

"He is not even a friend?"

"I told you I ain't got no friends—not one. If I had, do you think I should ha' gone and done what I did down there in the meshes Greenwich way?"

He shook his head. Then, after a pause, he asked me if I thought I could do something better than go back to the old life.

"No," said I. "I can't think of nothing else as I'm fit for and as would do me better. Can you?"

"Yes," he replied, laying down his pipe, and leaning forward with a new light flashing in his deep, earnest eyes he continued: "I can think of something much better. You are fitter for a new life than the old."

"You don't mean an institootion?" I asked, chilled to the heart with the dread that he should think me worse even than I was as I recollected the proposals with regard to living a new life made by the missionary who visited me in the station house cell.

"No, I do not mean anything of the sort," he replied, with a flash of angry repugnance in his eyes. "On the contrary, I am thinking of removing you from all associations with the world you have lived in and its people—of placing you in a position where nothing shall recall the past—of separating you from previous conditions as completely as if you were to be born again upon another earth. To do that you must think that your life begins from today; that the part of your life in the past has been blotted out. You must abandon all the ways and customs to which you have been used. Even the language, such as it is, that you speak today must be changed for a new one. Every link in the chain that connects you with the past must be broken. You must begin just like a child who has everything to learn. Do you understand me?"

"I'm a-gettin at it. Here, it's like as if I'd never been picked up out of the river and was just a-goin straight to heving, ain't it?"

"What is your notion of heaven?"

"Well, I've heered say it's a kinder place where you don't have to do nothin but sit about and enjy yourse'f and never want anything more'n you've got."

"Then it ain't at all like that, for you will have more to do than you have done yet awhile, and there will be pain as well as pleasure, and you will never cease to want something better than you have."

"It stands to reason I must do a lot if I'm to learn everything like a kid, and how I'm a-goin to do it's a licker if I ain't to speak my own language."

"Learn another."

It puzzled me to see how this was to be done, until, seeing my perplexity, Taras said: "We will help you—Mere Lucas and I."

"Will you, master?" said I, my heart leaping with delight at the prospect this promise opened. "I'll do just whatever you tell me—as fur as I can. But I ain't clever."

"That remains to be seen."

"I can't write nor nothink."

"You will soon learn to write with those long fingers."

"But what am I to do for a livin all the time I'm a-learnin?"

"It will be time enough to think of that when you have learnt what you can do best. Mere Lucas will always find something for us to eat and drink, and there's a room up stairs which you can have for yourself."

"What!" I exclaimed. "Here! Ain't you goin to send me away from this place?"

"Not while you wish to stay."

I could not help it. Something rose in my heart and seemed to choke me with a joy too great to bear—the tears would come to my eyes. However, I tried to hide them from him, and turning away as if to look around the room I said as clearly as emotion would let me:

"I shall have to be awful neat and nice if I am to live in such rooms as this here."

"I daresay you will find Mere Lucas a severe teacher in that matter."

"And," still keeping my head turned, "I got to be awful good if I'm to be"—here another sob choked me for a moment or two—"a friend like of yours. It'll be dreadful long 'fore I learn enough for that."

"That's the easiest lesson of all," said he. "There's only one rule to remember if you would be good, and that rule governs rich and poor, witty and simple, all human beings from one end of the earth to the other. It is simply to be honest and treat me and others as you would have me and others to treat you."

Could that be all? I asked myself. Could that rule alone make him so good to me? It took me a long while to realize that the practice of this simple doctrine made him so admirable.

"And now, little friend," said he taking up his pipe and lighting it again, "as the general idea seems pretty clear, let us come to practical particulars. What shall we do this afternoon for a beginning?"

"Whatever you tell me to do I'll try and do it, master."

"Call me Taras. That is my name."

I heard his name then for the first time, and it seemed as strange and uncommon as any part of this new life.

"Taras," I repeated. "What is my name to be?"

"Why, to be sure, you must have a new name. And then after searching for a minute or two in silent thought he said: "I think we will call you Aura. It is pleasant to the ear, and it has a pretty significance."

I know now that Aura is a diminutive form of a word that means the nymph or second state of the chrysalis before it takes wings.

The November term of the district court at Elbow Lake concluded with a verdict of $8,000 against the Soo Railroad company in favor of Mrs. Susie Belyea, wife of the editor of the Grant County Herald. She was injured in the Barrett wreck in August, 1892.

A formal acceptance of a reduction in a verdict of $18,042 to $7,000, in the breach of promise suit brought by Mrs. Lilla J. Clement of Minneapolis, against Seymour Brown of Winona, has been filed in the district court. Brown is yet undecided whether he will appeal.

A special session of the Minnesota Commandery of the Loyal Legion will be held on Feb. 12 at the Ryan hotel, St. Paul, to commemorate the birthday of Abraham Lincoln. At that time a reception will be tendered to General Lucius Fairchild, commander-in-chief of the Loyal Legion.

A TARDY MEMORIAL.

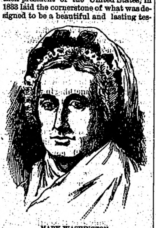
A MONUMENT TO MARY WASHINGTON TO BE DEDICATED AT LAST.

To the Noble and Patriotic Women of America We Owe the Completion of the Work Begun During Jackson's Administration—The Approaching Dedication.

The generous women of America have reason to congratulate themselves on having settled at last a national indebtedness of as great importance in its way as any of which the payment is secured by our government bonds, and one withal of much longer standing than those guaranteed by interest bearing securities.

The obligation had long been recognized, but settlement had been deferred, possibly because it is generally easier to admit a sentimental liability than it is to meet it, and this indebtedness, it should be said, was one of pure sentiment. In brief it was the obligation our nation was under, to prove by some enduring memorial its appreciation of and reverence for the character and virtues of one of our most exalted country women—Mary, the mother of Washington.

As long ago as 60 years back the people realized their duty in this matter, and in response to the sentiment of the time congress made an appropriation for a monument to mark the last resting place of this noble woman. Andrew Jackson, then president of the United States, in 1833 laid the cornerstone of what was designed to be a beautiful and lasting testimonial, and in his speech delivered on that occasion prophesied that the American pilgrim of after days would come up to that high and holy place as to a shrine.



MARY WASHINGTON.

Alas, the pilgrims in the days since then have been numerous enough, and no doubt the reverential feeling in the hearts of most of them was strong, but the place of their pilgrimage was desolate enough to have been the scene of some great national dishonor. The monument was never finished, and the ground around it soon became neglected and forlorn and so remained for years, for decades, for more than half a century. The shrine of a people's loving remembrance had become an abomination of desolation, a national disgrace. Students and bibliophiles of future centuries will sigh over it if they are animated by the spirit of true patriotism, for pictures of the long neglected scene have crept into histories, encyclopedias and other books that are likely to be preserved. Let us venture to hope that the plain lesson it will teach will not be needed to urge them to atonement for some similar offense.

Our own generation has heeded the lesson at last. A band of noble women, appreciating the nobility of character of the mother and mentor of the best and greatest of Americans, and feeling the mockery of pretending to honor him and his deeds while neglecting the memory of her to whom he repeatedly ascribed all that was best in his life and conduct, have devoted the past three years and more to repairing the long neglect and have called upon their American sisters to help them purge the nation of its shameful contempt.

And nobly has their call been answered. On the 23d of October last another cornerstone, containing some of the relics that had been inclosed in the first one and a few other appropriate tokens, was laid upon the site of that forlorn grave at Fredericksburg, Va., and this time the monument will be completed. It is to be dedicated on the 1st of December with fitting ceremonies, Senator John W. Daniel of Virginia delivering the oration. A large number of prominent Washington women have promised to attend, and many government officials and other citizens of distinction will be present.

The celebration is to be, as it should be, distinctively a women's affair. The Daughters of the Revolution and the Colonial Dames, who are in thorough sympathy with the undertaking, will have numerous representatives on the scene, and of course many of the members of the National Mary Washington Memorial association, the ladies who have carried this noble work to a successful conclusion, will be on hand to see the crowning of their achievement.

The monument is a classical monolith, 50 feet in height, severely plain, simple and honest, like the character of the woman in whose memory it is reared. The association has secured several acres of ground around it, and the work of the members will not by any means end with the dedication. The plot is to be beautified and kept in the best possible order and the monument carefully looked after and preserved.

When the present generation of members shall have passed away, this honorable task will be bequeathed to their daughters and their daughters' daughters, as other patents of nobility in other lands descend in the male line from one generation to another. This has been carefully provided for in the constitution of the association, and so far as human provision can see, there will never again be a necessity for the nation to reproach itself with neglecting what is now indeed a sacred shrine.

HEART DISEASE 30 YEARS.

GRAND ISLAND, NEB., April 8th, 1892.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I had been troubled with HEART DISEASE FOR THE LAST 30 YEARS, and although I was treated by able physicians and tried many remedies, I grew steadily worse until I WAS COMPLETELY PROSTRATED AND CONFINED TO MY BED WITHOUT ANY HOPE OF RECOVERY. I would have very bad sinking spells, when my pulse would stop beating altogether, and it was with the greatest difficulty that my circulation could be started, which would bring me back to consciousness again. While in this condition I tried your NEW HEART CURE, and began to improve from the first, and now I am able to do a good day's work for a man 68 years of age. I give DR. MILES' NEW HEART CURE all the credit for my recovery. It is over six months since I have taken any, although I keep a bottle in the house in case I should need it. I have also used your NERVE AND LIVER PILLS, and think a great deal of them. Z. AVERY.

WOMANKIND.

FOR WOMEN AND HOME.

This well-known journal, a union of four leading women's papers, has won its fame because it deals with what really interests the women of America. Fashions from the standpoint of good taste and economy. Fiction of a pure and helpful kind. Music and Art suitable for non-professional tastes. Household hints written by practical women. Suggestions and aids for self-supporting women. It is a paper for women, by women, and its writers are among the most noted authors. Every line is original, every engraving a gem.

It is a paper of to-day without espousing the great questions of religion, politics and temperance, it gives all the news regarding them. It is universally quoted by the press because its views and articles are bright and unique. Send to Springfield, Ohio, for a sample copy. Formerly $1.00, it is now but 50 cents a year. 'Round Home.

If you are delinquent on subscription let us hear from you before December 1st.

W. E. Kelsey was down to Fertile this week on business connected with the agency.

A. A. Miller, who has been on the sick list for about a week, is able to be around again.

E. D. Childs has gone to Mansfield, Ohio on a business trip that will occupy about ten days.

John Wyatt is able to be out again, and now hobbles around with the aid of a cane.

Alex Carlson expects to leave shortly for a trip to Sweden, and will be gone all winter.

The fat and jolly Charley Conger was in from McIntosh, Monday looking after some of his farmer friends.

The Stewart Lumber company reports large sales of lumber to farmers who are fixing up houses, barns and granaries ready for winter.

Alderman Simmons received a telegram last Friday from his wife, who is at Monroe, Wis., saying that her brother had died that morning—just the day after she had arrived.

Will Hoch came back from his claim last week sick—not of the claim, but with a cold and went upon the dry docks for repairs. He expects to return soon and go into winter quarters upon the claim.

A new England supper will be given by the ladies of the Congregational society at the home of Mrs. Fuller, this (Thursday) evening. Baked beans, pumpkin pie, doughnuts, corn beef, coffee, etc., etc.

Andrew Swanson was brought before United States Court Commissioner Christianson Saturday charged with taking liquor onto the Red Lake Reservation. For lack of witness the case was continued.

Engineer Tom Hunt has been laid up with lumbago for about ten days but is now able to be out again. Tom says that for two days he suffered terribly, and had to have help to move in bed. Misfortunes never come singly, and so it is in this case. His second oldest boy, who was working for Marland Hart, was brought home sick a couple of weeks ago, and has just got over a siege of typhoid fever.

Hon. James Hill, of Roberts, Wis., partner of E. D. Childs, was severely injured in a runaway at his home last week. Mr. Childs spent last Sunday with him at which time he appeared to be getting along nicely but on Monday, after arriving in St. Paul, Mr. Childs learned that Mr. Hill had passed a bad night and was decidedly worse.

Union Thanksgiving services will be held in the First Methodist Episcopal Church at ten o'clock on Thanksgiving morning. A beautiful service is being arranged and the Rev. H. F. McDonald of the Baptist church will preach the sermon. The City Minister's Union invites our citizens without respect of creed or denomination to attend this union service.

The pastor of the Congregational church announces that he intends to speak next Sunday morning on "Building Stone," and in the evening on "Some Facts of the History of the Bible Applied to the Present Times."

Last Saturday Chas. Gurlock of Red Lake Falls, while riding on a wagon, upon which was a hay rack was shot through the hand by the accidental discharge of a gun, which he caught by the muzzle to prevent falling from the wagon.

Miss E. Veronneau wishes to announce to her lady friends that she is making sacrifice sales to reduce stock. She has decided to sell her entire stock of fall and winter millinery and has therefore marked the goods at prices that are bound to sell. Call and see her stock before you purchase. It will pay you.

Tollef J. Farden, the only original Tollef J., came in from Grove Park on Friday of last week and paid the JOURNAL a pleasant visit. It was also a visit of profit (for us) to a limited extent. Mr. Farden is one of the kind who show their faith by their works—a mighty good kind to have as subscribers—he said he has faith in the JOURNAL and put up a little stuff to aid in its publication, which emphasized his opinion in a pleasant manner.

Dr. Just now has about as slick a suite of apartments as can be found any place. He has three rooms on the second floor of the I. O. O. F. block, in the southwest corner, all facing the hall. The centre room is a reception—large, pleasant and nicely furnished. On one side of this is his bed room, and on the other a consultation room, with a prescription case, a laboratory, a stock room full of drugs, and shelves covered with all sorts of instruments of torture. The doctor is now prepared for anything in his line, from sawing your leg off to regulating your liver.

Geo. M. Swift was in from Mentor last week to do some trading and, as usual, tackled a JOURNAL scribe for a bit of an argument. George M. is one of those honest, practical farmers who joined the populist craze in the sincere desire to see some good accomplished for the average citizen, but from the run of his talk we judge that he has been bitterly disappointed so far. He has used of his time and talents freely in what he considered a holy cause but how has he been used? How has any and every farmer, who had common-sense, practical views, who could have done some good for others, been used? Snubbed unmercifully and utterly ignored while some ignorant, incompetent demagogue has been elevated to the highest positions within the gift of the people—and men like Swift paid the expenses. But Lincoln's remark about fooling people will be felt sooner or later and then this thing will regulate itself.

John Dillon is billed to appear here next Tuesday evening, November 28th in "A Model Husband."

A very pleasant candy pull was enjoyed by the young people of the First M. E. church last Friday evening.

Landlord Benzie of the Great Northern hotel at Thief River Falls, was doing business in the city Tuesday.

Jim Muir, who hauls coal for Larsen, Carpenter & Co., was laid up the first part of the week with quinsy.

Rev. Squier delivered a short address at the Normal college last Friday evening, taking for his subject "The Art of Public Speaking."

Mrs. L. E. Gossman gave a card party on Friday evening, in honor of her sister, Miss Glenn. A very enjoyable time is reported.

Maj. Hendershot, the drummer boy of the Rappahannock will be at the opera house on Thursday evening, December 5th. Don't miss this rare treat.

D. S. Horwitz, representing Howard, Farwell & Co., of St. Paul, was in the city this week. He sold one piano at Euclid on Monday and went north as far as Hallock in his efforts to sell another.

M. L. Tuve: The debating society meets in the college rooms Monday and Wednesday evenings, and the literary society every Friday evening. You can also say that we have over 90 students enrolled now.

Mrs. Rose has fitted up the room recently occupied by the Red River Dalen in Carl Reidesel's new building on Second street and opens this week a first-class restaurant. She has had a long experience and understands her business thoroughly.

R. B. Field, manager of the Cascade laundry, Minneapolis, has a new preparation for bluing clothes, which is much ahead of anything yet on the market in this line. To introduce it he is giving sample packages free. See advertisement in another column.

On Friday evening after Thanksgiving, a beautiful Thanksgiving entertainment will be given by the Epworth league of the First M. E. church. A typical New England Thanksgiving reunion will be reproduced, several scenes from J. G. Holland's famous book, "Bitter Sweet," will be acted and a fine musical program of solos, duets and quartettes enlisting the best voices in the city will be rendered. Watch for further announcement next week.

Talking with a prominent farmer one day this week he told us that he always makes it a rule to raise at least 5 acres of potatoes and his profits on them for the last year and this have been enormous. Said he: "I have always made money on my potatoes for I always make them pay me at least 25 cents per bushel in clean cash. You may think this a wild statement, as you have seen the time often, when potatoes in our market would not bring over 15 to 20 cents per bushel. Well, I will let you into the secret. When potatoes bring over 25 cents I sell them and when they bring less I boil them and feed them to my hogs and I am satisfied by actual test that I can make them bring me 25 cents per bushel, if I get four cents per pound for my hogs dressed. When I feed potatoes I always have more barley to sell and it has so happened that when potatoes were low barley was high. I have faithfully tried the all wheat experiment and my conclusion is that it will bust the most faithful adherent to the system. We must get out of that rut in Northern Minnesota and the quicker the better."

Larry Mathews, the genial Hibernian who holds the position of traveling passenger agent for the Northern Pacific, was in the city Tuesday and will make regular trips here twice a week for four or five weeks. He is looking after Canadian excursionists from this part of the country. For seven years he has been stationed every summer in the National Park, and looks after tourists to that famous resort. In talking to a JOURNAL man about the Park business he said there had been 4000 foreigners and 2000 Americans carried by the Northern Pacific to the Park during the past summer. The foreigners were all visitors to the World's Fair. "The Park" says Mr. Mathews "will become before many years the great summer resort for all Americans. The trouble is, the American people do not realize what a beautiful spot it is, or they would go there instead of going to Europe. When Secretary Hoke Smith was out there last summer he told me he had no idea there was such a picturesque piece of land in this country. Oh, its a great place," said Larry, as he proceeded to sell another Canadian excursion ticket.

P. J. McGuire went to St. Paul Sunday evening, returning on Tues. morning.

The evening train on the Northern Pacific, going south, now leaves Crookston at 7:51 instead of 7:12 as formerly.

Ira M. DeCamp arrived on Tuesday morning for a visit to old friends in the city. Ira reports that his World's Fair hotel experiment was a good financial success.

On Monday morning quite a body of snow fell—the first of any account this season. With the condition of the ground it makes elegant sleighing—in spots.

Ole Daly, also of Red Lake Falls, died Friday evening, of inflamation of the bowels. He was buried Sunday in the Presbyterian cemetery at Red Lake Falls.

Knute Rollag and wife came up on the Northern Pacific train on Tuesday morning, being summoned by a telegram announcing the serious illness of her son, Gilbert Dahle, who is at the county hospital with typhoid fever.

St. Paul grocers are offering, as a special inducement for trade, potatoes at 50 cents a busdel. Farmers who have potatoes for the market next spring will have a bonanza.

A. C. Rhinehart has completed his drainage ditch in good shape and made a little something in the operation. It was a good thing for Webb that he did not get the work at his bid as Rhinehart just found a bare margin at his own figures which were a good bit higher than Webb's.

Ladies, you will consult the interests of your pocket boyks if you see Miss Veronneau's elegant stock of fall and winter millinery. Never before has new and stylish millinery been sold at such extremely low figures in this city but she has decided to dispose of the entire stock and so they go. Don't miss this chance.

A horse attached to a top buggy broke its fastenings on Sunday afternoon and ran from in front of Sundit's restaurant on Fletcher street to Broadway and along Broadway, crossing the bridge to a point near Walker's planing mill, where a boy caused it to swerve and cross the railroad track where it fell. A freight was approaching but before it reached the place the horse had recovered its standing in society and had vacated the track—by about an inch and a half. The buggy? Busted badly.

Low Rates to the Coast.

The Northern Pacific railroad has just put into effect a series of low round-trip rates to Pacific coast points. These California tickets are good until April 30th, 1894, and are good for stop over points under certain conditions.

These rates will enable those desiring so to do, to spend the winter in Southern California, or to visit the Mid-winter Fair to be held at San Francisco. This latter event will undoubtedly be second only to the World's Fair just closed, and will repay a visit, as it will exhibit the resources and capabilities of California.

THE FIRST CHAPTER

In the Freight Rate Investigation Commenced at St. Paul Last Week.

The Railroad Commission Listens to the Complaint of Elias Steenerson

Which is Submitted by Attorney Halvor Steenerson, with Voluminous Evidence.

The Sworn Reports of the Great Northern Offered in Evidence by the Complainant.

The Railroads are Evidently Frightened by Mr. Steenerson's Bold Move,

As Three Other Corporations Rush to the Rescue of the Great Northern.

The Hearing Postponed to Jan. 10th to Allow the Attorney General to Submit Evidence.

The complaint of Elias Steenerson against the Great Northern railway came on for hearing before the state railroad and warehouse commission last Thursday, and two days were consumed in submitting the evidence on the part of complainant. The case was then adjourned until January 10th.

The complaint charges the Great Northern railroad with charging exorbitant freight rates on wheat, and asks the commission to reduce it about one-third. The complainant alleges that while the price of wheat has been steadily declining, year after year, and the wages of Great Northern employes have been reduced to the minimum, yet the freight rates of said roads have remained the same, and Mr. Steenerson is only voicing the sentiments of every citizen of the Red River valley when he asks the railroad commission to at least reduce the freight rate on wheat, so that the railroads may bear a share of the hardships of the people of the region—and especially the farmers—created by a declining market on the one great staple product of the Red River valley—wheat.

Mr. Steenerson was ably represented by his brother, Hon. Halvor Steenerson, who had gathered an abundance of documentary evidence in support of his charge, besides the sworn testimony of a number of witnesses. Perhaps the strongest evidence submitted was that of the complainant, who took the sworn reports of the Great Northern and offered them in evidence. As is well known, each railroad operating in the state must make a report to the railroad commission every year, setting forth the amount of business done by each department, the cost of operating, the cost per mile of carrying freight, etc. These reports have to be sworn to by the president or manager of the road, and are printed in the report of the railroad commissioners to the governor. Mr. Steenerson had been doing some figuring on one of these reports, and had drawn some strong conclusions therefrom. His reasons for claiming that freight rates were too high were:

First, that all commodities have been reduced in price and that freight rates should suffer a corresponding reduction.

Second, that the rates have always been too high. To prove this assertion reference is made to the report of the Great Northern railroad to the commission. According to this report the cost of carrying freight per ton per mile is 5.14 mills. By taking this as a basis it appears that the cost of carrying a train of twenty freight cars (the average number of loaded cars in a train) the car loads averaging 600 bushels a distance of 300 miles, or from Minneapolis to Duluth, would be $555. The freight charges for this distance, however, are 17 cents per 100 pounds, or $61.20 per car, amounting to $1,224 per train of twenty cars, making a profit of $669. If these charges are reduced one-third there would still be a profit of $361, or more than 50 per cent on the investment, which is considered by the complainant a reasonable profit. From the same report are drawn further conclusions. The cost of conducting transportation on the Great Northern in 1892 is placed at $1,108,338.30. In 1893, wages having been reduced from 10 to 20 per cent, making an average of 15 per cent, a total reduction of $271,250 must have been made in this cost. It is further stated that the cost of maintaining, structure and equipment for 1892 was $1,667,231. As a great part of this must have been the cost of labor, it is held fair to consider this sum reduced in 1893 by 10 per cent, or $166,723, making a total saving to the company of $437,973. The total freight earnings of the road in Minnesota were $5,942,380. The grain traffic on the entire line is given as 52.85 per cent of the whole freight, and assuming that the ratio is the same, in Minnesota alone the total receipts for freight on wheat would be $2,376,922. If this amount would be reduced one-third it would be $792,476, only $254,503 more than the company saves by recent cuts in wages and salaries. Some questions were asked to draw out the fact that by improvements recently adopted, the cost of transportation has been lessened. Among these improvements are the use of steel rails and the introduction of cars carrying one thousand bushels.

In the event that the commission should order a reduction of freight rates, and the railroad should appeal to the courts, as they have a right to do, it would be the duty of the attorney general to act as attorney for commission and to sustain their order in the courts.

When, therefore that officer appeared before the commission and suggested that he had further evidence to offer upon the very complicated question of what is a "reasonable rate," it was proper to give him such time as he might need to prepare to submit his evidence.

This is the reason for the adjournment of the grain rate investigation.

In view of this we may expect that if the commission make an order reducing the charges for transportation of grain it will be an order resting upon the proper foundation and one which the railroad will be bound to respect.

A MIDWINTER POEM.

Canadians attention and right about face,
If you are going home, I can name the place,
Where you can get your tickets and baggage checked through,
This is about all you will have to do.

We are doing business at the same old place,
Down on Second Street you can see my face
Where we will be happy to start you right
On your road toward the morning light.

Our Excursion Tickets are all bran new,
And we have commenced to sell quite a few
To your friends and others too
Who know where and what they want to do.

For Forty dollars we will give you ninety days
To go to the Old Country and raise old hays
And if you get caught we will give you more limit
If you have the money because you got in it.

The Great Northern Railway runs through your city,
We have a nice train in charge of Cond'r Ditty
Who will be pleased to make comfortable any and all,
Who travels on his train and will give him a call.

One office is open both day and night
And if you are going to travel and want some light
Be sure and call before buying elsewhere
And we will do our best to treat you fair.

Hessian Christmas Lore.

The Hessians contend that only those whose consciences are clean can hear the animals talk, and they tell this story in confirmation of the assertion. One Christmas eve a farm servant went to confession by way of preparation for the sacrament. The church was some distance off, so that when he reached home it was late, and to avoid disturbing his master he went to bed in a hay loft over the barn. Underneath was a stall in which was a pair of oxen. The man fell asleep, but was soon awakened by the sound of voices. Listening, he heard one say to another, "Let us blow out this fellows light of life."

"No," was the reply. "He has been to confession today and tomorrow will go to the Lord's table. We cannot do it."

"But he has heard us and will repeat what we have said."

"No matter. Be quiet and let us pray. The time will soon be gone in which we have the power to do so."

Gathering courage, the man crept to the ladder, and looking down saw the oxen on their knees making the sign of the cross with their right forelegs.—Exchange.

Yuletide In Saxony.

My mother has told me of having once seen some place in Saxony a boy, clad as an angel and carrying a cross, let down by a rope from the roof of the church, while he sung "Von Himmel hoch." The practice was continued until on one occasion the rope broke, and the play became a tragedy. Until as late as 1820 it was customary to rock a cradle for an hour at midnight on the tower of the parish church at Tubingen. It contained a doll, and was surrounded by lights, while the trumpets blared and the people sang the choral, "Glory Be to God on High." These customs are mirrors of the spiritual life and thought of the time, just as fairy tales are of the native longings of the natural heart, but how childishly realistic they were at times!—Exchange.

Yuletide Associations.

Christmas is always associated with the good Jesus, who, whether regarded as God or man, was the purest, kindest, noblest being that has walked the earth. He has inspired love in saint and sinner, in devotee and skeptic alike. Men may wrangle about creeds, but about Jesus and his beautiful life there can hardly be any difference of opinion, for he pitied all who suffered and strove to heal every aching heart.

The state flag has been received at the capitol, having been sent from Chicago to be preserved among other state treasures. It has not yet been decided just what disposition will be made of it, but it will probably be preserved in the collection of the Historical society.

At Fergus Falls Judge Baxter has sentenced Clark Hursh of Deer Creek, to two years in the penitentiary for stealing grain; William Clemmer, 18 months for the same crime; Frank Salter to the reformatory for stealing a bicycle; Mike Hart to the reformatory for stealing a coat.

Commissioner Lamoreaux has received a report on the gold discoveries in Minnesota. The special agent states that he is firmly convinced that the country in the vicinity of Rainy lake is distinctly a mineral country unfit for any other purpose whatever. In the quartz of township 71 the evidence of mineral is deemed very rich, and the land has been withdrawn from settlement.

REDWOOD FALLS COAL.

It Is Not Valuable For Shipping Purposes—Good For Immediate Use.

REDWOOD FALLS, Minn., Nov. 24.—State Geologist Winchell has examined specimens of the coal found on the farm of Alfred Moon and pronounces it cretaceous lignite, the same substance which is found in North Dakota in such large quantities. He says this vein extends for miles, horizontally, varying in thickness from three to four feet. He says there is a great deal of ash in it and if exposed to the air for any length of time will crumble and so it would not pay to place expensive machinery in the mine, for they would not be able to ship the coal long distances if exposed to the air. Professor Winchel encourages Mr. Moon to dig all he can for home consumption, and for that purpose it will be very valuable to farmers, who can purchase it much cheaper than coal brought here from Iowa.

ON THE FREE LIST.

THE NEW TARIFF BILL GIVEN TO THE PUBLIC.

Long List of Articles Which Will Be Admitted Free of Duty—The Bounty on Sugar Will Be Reduced One-Eighth Each Year, Till It Is All Gone.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—The new Democratic tariff bill has been given out to the public, and its provisions fulfill every expectation, of those who have predicted that it would be a radical measure. In many respects it is a surprise, even to the Democratic members of congress, as it is unprecedented in many of its provisions.

The free list is of that liberal scope sufficient to satisfy the most radical advocates of reform, and the repudiation of the principle of reciprocity, which has been the pride of the Republicans and the bete noir of the Democrats for a number of years, is Decisive and Emphatic.

The bounty on sugar, which was to be so promptly repealed, is instead, to be repealed by easy gradations, and will not reach its conclusive effect until after the present century.

THE FREE LIST.

Numerous Articles Added Thereto by the New Bill.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—The ways and means committee met at 11 a. m. and after the roll call Chairman Wilson at once laid the bill before the entire committee. On and after March 1, 1894, the following articles are to be added to the free list:

Bacon and hams, beef, mutton and pork, and meats of all kinds prepared or preserved, not specially provided for in this act.

Baryita, all binding twine manufactured in whole or in part from istle or tampico fibre, manilla, sisal grass, or sunna of single-ply, measuring not exceeding 600 feet to the pound.

Birds, stuffed, not suitable for millinery ornaments, and bird skins, prepared for preservation, but not further advanced in manufacture.

Blue vitriol, or sulphate of copper.

Bone char, suitable for use in decorizing sugars.

Coal, bituminous and shale and coal, slack or cut.

Coke, coal tar, crude and all preparations and products of coal tar, not colors or dyes, not specially provided for in this act.

Cobalt, oxide of.

Copper, imported in the form of ores; old copper, fit only for manufacture, clipping from new copper, and all composition metal of which copper is a component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this act; regulus of copper, and black or coarse copper and copper cement; copper in plates, bars, ingots or pigs and other forms, not manufactured, not specially provided for in this act; copperas, or sulphate of iron.

Cotton ties, of iron or steel cut to lengths, punched or not punched, with or without buckles, for belting cotton.

Diamonds, dust or bort, and jewels to be used in the manufacture of watches or clocks.

Downs of all kinds, crude, not specially provided in this act.

Fresh fish.

Furs, undressed.

Iodine, resublimated iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore, also the dross or residium of the burnt pyrites and sulphurous pyrites or sulphuret of iron in its natural list.

Mica and metallic mineral substances in a crude state and metals unwrought, not specially provided for in this act.

Ochre and ochery earths, sienna and sienna earths, umber and umber earths not specially provided for in this act.

Cotton seed oil, paintings in oil or water colors and statuary, not otherwise provided for in this act.

Plows, tools and disc harrows, harvesters, reapers, drills, mowers, horse rakes, cultivators, threshing machines and cotton gins.

Plush, black, for making men's hats.

Quicksilver.

Silk, partially manufactured from cocoons or from waste silk, and not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk.

Salt, soap, all not otherwise specially provided for in this act.

Sulphate of soda, or salt cake, or nitre cake, suphuric acid.

Tallow and wool grease, including that known commercially as degras or brown wool grease.

Straw, burr stones, bound up into millstones; freestone, granite, sandstone, limestone and other building or monumental, except marble, unmanufactured or undressed, not specially provided for in this act.

All wearing apparel and other personal effects shall be admitted free of duty, without regard to their value, upon their identity being established under such rules and regulations as the secretary of the treasury may prescribe.

Timber, hewn and sawed, and timber used for spars and in building wharves; timber, squared or sided, sawed boards, plank, deals and other lumber; laths, pickets and palings; shingles; staves of wood of all lands; wood unmanufactured, provided that if any export duty is laid upon the above mentioned articles or either of them, all said articles imported from said country shall be subject to duty as now provided by law.

Chair cane or reeds, wrought or manufactured from rattans or reeds.

Woods, namely cedar, lignum vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood and all forms of cabinet woods in the log, rough or hewn; bamboo and rattan, manufactured; briar root or briar wood and similar woods, manufactured; reeds and sticks of partridge, pearwood, pimento, orange, myrtle and other woods, in the rough, or not further manufactured than cut into lengths for suitable sticks for umbrellas, parasols, sunshades, walking sticks or whips.

All wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alapaca, and other like animals, and all wool and hair on the skin, noils, yarn waste, card waste, bur waste, rags and flogs, including all waste or rags, composed wholly or in part of wool.

WILSON'S STATEMENT.

The Chairman of the Committee Makes a Plea for the Bill.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—Chairman Wilson of the ways and means committee has made a statement in relation to the new tariff bill, saying it is meant to reform a vast labyrinthian system of class taxation. He details its main features as follows:

First—The adoption, wherever it seemed practicable, of ad valorem instead of specific duties.

Secondly—The freeing from taxes of those great materials of industry that lie at the basis of production.

Specific rates of duty are objectionable for these reasons: They frequently conceal a rate of taxation too enormous to be submitted to if exposed to ad valorem terms as the duty of 8 cents a hundred pounds on salt in bulk, which amounts to over 80 per cent on a common necessary of life. They always bore heavily on the common articles used by the masses and lightly on the expensive articles consumed by the rich, as a tax of $30 on all houses would be little or nothing on the great mansion and very high on the humble home. And, contrary to to common belief, specific duties in administration, for counting and weighing at the custom house are done by the cheapest and most easily corrupted labor, while ad valorem rates are assessed by the best paid and most responsible appraisers. The ad valorem system has worked well in practice, is essentially the fair system because it is a tax upon the actual value of an article, and was declared by Mr. Clay himself to be in theory, and in accordance to every sound principle of justice, entitled to the preference and vindicated by long trial.

The boldest innovation of the bill is its large free list of the raw materials. Taxes upon production are double wrongs. They gather and cumulate on the consumers of the finished products. They hurt labor by narrowing the market for what it produces. Coal and iron are the foundations of modern industry. Material progress is measured by the amount of their consumption. No other country can supply them as abundantly or as cheaply as we can. Untaxed ores, coal, lumber, wool and other things must immensely stimulate production in certain parts of our country.

Not Part of the Message.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—There has been a general belief that the president would discuss the Hawaiian question in his message and more interest than ever has been manifested in the document on this account, but it is stated at the White House that this matter can easily be avoided by an allusion to the Hawaiian affair in the regular message with the statement that it will be treated in a special message on the subject when further and expected information has been received.

Forty Torpedo Cruisers.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The Herald's Washington dispatch says it is understood that at a recent cabinet meeting the president gave his hearty approval of the annual report of Secretary Herbert. The secretary's recommendations, which received the approval of the president, contemplate the construction of one new battleship and 40 torpedo cruisers.

BOMBERGER TO HANG.

CHICAGO, Nov. 28.—Washington Hessing was appointed postmaster of Chicago and William S. Mize was appointed collector of internal revenue, district of Chicago.

Northern Pacific Will Default.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The receivers of the Northern Pacific have decided to default on all the interest due Dec. 1, except on the Duluth and Manitoba bonds, the payment of interest on which is yet to be considered. The total amount due on Dec. 1 is about a million and a half.

Christianity In India.

Recently carefully prepared statistics and data published at Calcutta give a most interesting summary of the progress and results of Christian work in British India. No fewer than 65 Protestant missionary societies are laboring in this field, directing the work of 857 ordained missionaries—namely, 16 Presbyterian societies, with 149 laborers; 18 Baptist societies, with 129 missionaries; 9 societies of the Established Church of England, with 203 missionaries; 7 Lutheran associations, with 125 men and women; 4 Methodist societies, with 110 gospel embassadors; 5 Congregationalist associations, with 76 missionaries; 1 Unitas Fratum and 1 Quaker society, with 16 in their employ; as also 7 independent societies, together with 5 women's associations. In addition to these 857 ordained missionaries, there are 711 ordained European lay helpers, 114 European and semi-European lady assistants, teachers, etc., and 3,491 native lay preachers.

The number of native Protestant Christians is 559,661, an increase of 150,000 in 10 years. Of these, 182,722 are communicant members of churches, an increase of 70.000 in the last decade.

Endeavorers on Shipboard.

How many Christian Endeavor societies, we wonder, have been formed on shipboard? From Australia comes a report of an Endeavor society formed on board her majesty's ship Himalaya at the beginning of this year. Such a blessing was it found to be that the meetings were held every other evening while the company continued on the ship. There was a complete Endeavor organization, even to the Sunday school and sunshine committees. The latter committee, indeed, had its hands full with the sick people on board. One of the newly made members wrote out the pledge on menu cards supplied by the steward. Six of these impromptu Endeavorers have promised to start societies in their churches when they reach home.—Exchange.

CHAPTER IX.

THE FIRST STEP.

"We must think about clothes next, Aura," said Taras when I had agreed to accept the strange name he proposed. "You will want quite a lot of things—some to wear indoors, some to go out in, others to change and so on."

"Why, I ain't got no money," said I, taken aback by the very first condition of living in a new and civilized world.

"Luckily I have—somewhere," said he, feeling in his pockets. "Ah, here it is."

"A lot o' things'll cost a lot o' money," I remarked, as he looked at his purse.

"That's true. If there's not enough here to pay for all you buy, give one of these cards and have the things sent home, to be paid for on delivery."

I looked in the purse and saw gold, more than I had ever before seen at one time. My utmost possession had never amounted to more than a shilling, and no one had thought fit to trust me with a larger sum. I laid the purse down with a vague feeling that I might be taking undo advantage of Taras' generosity. When he spoke, I stopped him.

"Hold on," said I, "I'm tryin to think this out. I ain't sure whether I oughter take all this money or didn't oughter."

"Good. Puzzle it out and take it or refuse it as it seems to you right or wrong."

I stuck my knuckles in my hips, drew a long breath and taxed my sluggish power of reasoning to its utmost, while Taras smoked on in grave silence, too considerate to suffer any sign to appear in his face of the amusement my perplexity must have given him.

"Taras," said I at length, "I'm a-goin to take that money, 'cause if you was in want and I had money I should like you to take it off me."

"Bravo, little friend!" said he joyfully. "You have grasped the meaning of the golden rule already. Now you had better go out and buy what you want. Do you know the neighborhood?"

"No, but if you tell me where the shops is I'll find 'em. I ain't afraid of asting my ways."

"Either of the streets that pass the church will lead you into the Westminster Bridge road, where there are plenty of shops."

I nodded, but made no movement, for the question what sort of things would be suitable to my new state threw me into another spell of cogitation.

"Would you like Mere Lucas to go with you?" Taras asked.

"If you think she knows better 'an me what I oughter wear."

"I would rather you exercised your own judgment. I want you to walk alone as soon as possible."

I understood what he meant by that phrase. It was really as if I were born again and learning to walk.

"You ain't got any fancy, like? It don't matter to you what I wear, do it?"

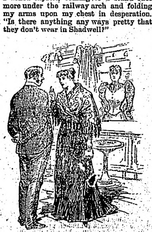
"Oh, yes, it does," he replied, with a laugh. "I should be sorry to see you in rags or ugly clothes."

"Well, look here," said I, after scratching my head in troubled meditation for a minute or two, "I'll do the best I ken."

With that I left him, but before I reached the Westminster Bridge road I had to stop two or three times to "do a think" over the problem before me, and the question was not satisfactorily solved when I found myself in the street of shops. A milliner's gay display attracted me first, and bearing in mind that Taras objected to anything ugly I fixed my attention on a hat with a high crown and turned up rim of crushed strawberry plush, with two ostrich feathers, one emerald and the other magenta, drooping gracefully down the back.

This seemed to my eyes the most lovely thing imaginable, and I think I should have gone in and bought it had it not suddenly occurred to me that I had seen something in this style on high days and holidays in Shadwell, and that I was to sunder myself entirely from all modes of the past. Then a little farther on a show of silk handkerchiefs for the neck, spotted and flowered, in bright yellow and other vivid hues, appealed once more to my sense of the beautiful. But here again I was confronted by a memory of ladies from Jamaica road going off on Whit Monday to Epping forest in a van. The same consideration drew me away from fancy boots and a mantle maker's, where my eyes were fascinated by a long stamped velvet jacket with a trimming of beads and bright steel.

"Whatever in the world am I to wear?" I asked myself, coming to a stand once more under the railway arch and folding my arms upon my chest in desperation. "Is there anything any ways pretty that they don't wear in Shadwell?"



"I wants a reg'lar outfit."

Just at that moment my eyes fell on a girl of about my own age who was stepping into a tram car. There was nothing about her that was ugly. On the contrary, she looked exceedingly pretty; yet, strange to say, I could not remember having seen any one like her in Shadwell. A light burst upon me.

"That's it!" said I to myself with conviction. "I got to dress like one of the upper ten." Without further deliberation I went into the first large draper's I came to, and singling out the nicest looking young lady behind the counter I approached her and said:

"Here, I want a set o' clothes like what you're got on."

The young lady regarded me in frigid astonishment for a moment, and then, without deigning any reply, moved away to another part of the counter. After waiting a reasonable time for her return and finding myself neglected, I turned round and appealed to a shopwalker who had his eye on me.

"Here, ain't nobody a-goin to serve me?" I asked.

"What do you want, my good girl?" he asked in a patronizing tone.

"Why, I've told the young woman up there. I wants a reg'lar outfit. And you needn't run away with the idea as I ain't got enough to pay for it, 'cause I have. There you are," said I, opening the purse. "And if thet ain't enough you're to send the things home to the party as give me that there card, and they'll be paid for on 'livery."

He looked at the card and instantly called in a loud, peremptory tone:

"Forward, Miss Hopkins," and as the stony young lady came down with a flush on her face he added with the same severity, "be good enough to give this young lady every attention."

Looking daggers, Miss Hopkins asked me what I wanted.

"I told ye oncet. I'm a-goin to dress 'xac'ly same as what you are," and examining her dress I added, "Gimme some collars and cuffs with buttons in 'em like yourn."

"One pair?" asked Miss Hopkins, taking the cuffs from a box.

"No. Three sets of everything, and the best you're got."

"Anything else?"

"Course. Gimme a frock like yourn."

"You will have to have that made. It's not my department."

"Well, ain't you got nothin I can wear now?"

"Show the young lady that line in tea gowns," said the shopwalker.

Miss Hopkins brought me a tea gown in pale pink silk, with plaits from the neck, telling me it was the right length and would fit me, as it was intended to be worn loose. It gave me a thrill of delight only to look at it, and my satisfaction was completed by the perfect assurance that I had never seen anything like it in Shadwell.

"That's the sort of frock you'd wear to walk out in along of a gentleman, ain't it?" I asked.

"No; this is only for indoors."

"I'll have it."

Something quiet but still lovely in morning gowns was offered, and I had one of them, and also a dark skirt which I might wear with a jersey as a walking dress.

"Is that all?" asked Miss Hopkins when she had got thus far.

"'Tain't likely! What else are you got on?"

The young woman flushed again with indignation at this question. However, as the shopwalker still hovered near, she was constrained to answer me, and in this way I got all that was requisite for indoor wear.

"I think that is everything," said Miss Hopkins, looking at the pile of things I had bought.

"Hold on!" said I. "What do you wear outside when you're a walkin?"

"I wear a sealskin jacket," she replied, with a little dignity in her voice.

"Let's have a look at it."

The stately shopwalker himself fetched me a jacket.

"This is the only one we have in stock that will fit you," he said, laying it down tenderly before me.

I looked at and touched the beautiful skin in silent delight.

"The price," said the shopwalker with slight hesitation, "is 15 guineas, which includes a toque to match."

"Give us a liker at the toque," said I in doubt. But the small fur cap ravished me; the name itself showed that it could never have been worn in Shadwell.

"We could say £15 pounds for the jacket and toque," said the shopwalker as these reflections passed through my mind.

"It ain't what you'd call cheap, is it?" said I.

"Pardon me, madam; it is very cheap indeed."

"Then I won't have it," said I firmly, but with an inner sigh of disappointment.

However, on the shopwalker explaining that he had employed the term relatively, that no better fur could be bought in London, and that the "article" was fit for a duchess to wear, I altered my decision and told him "I'd have it and chance it."

Some gloves and other things suggested by Miss Hopkins, who became quite amiable in the end, completed my purchases, and as they amounted to a great deal more than Taras' purse contained it was arranged that they should be sent home with a bill.

"You send 'em on sharp, 'cause I wants to put 'em on," said I, and then after getting some information from Miss Hopkins with respect to the kind of boots she wore and where she bought them—a shop, the very best in London, she assured me, and only just across the road—I went off to finish shopping, with a fluttering sense of exultation which had not hitherto presented itself to my imagination in the wildest dream of happiness.

This mental excitement sharpened my wits wonderfully. I felt I had the key to the mystery of that new life which had so perplexed me at first in finding out what distinguished the better class of people from those among whom I had lived and adopting their peculiar ways. To be good and nice I must imitate Taras and Miss Hopkins. I had noticed that this young lady's hands and nails were very clean, that her hair was carefully arranged and also that she walked with an elastic and nimble step and an upright carriage, very different from my shuffling gait and slovenly bearing. So I lifted my feet from the ground, straightened my back and stepped out briskly for Lambeth with my parcel of boots under my arm and my imagination teeming with hopeful ideas.

Mere Lucas opened the door and taking me upstairs showed me a room which she made me understand was to be mine. Then laying her hand on my arm, carefully mouthing her words and speaking in a loud voice that I might better understand her, she made me a little speech, beginning with, "Que je vous dise, ma pauvre petite mam'selle"—a phrase which I remember also because of its frequent after recurrence—and ending with a hearty laugh when she found that I failed altogether to make anything out of it. This laugh, however, she checked suddenly with the recollection of my pitiable condition, and giving me a pat on the cheek she wound up with a tender "pauvre cherie, va!" and left me to myself.

It was a pleasant room, with two windows looking out onto the river, plainly furnished, but with a delightfully fresh and wholesome look about it, due perhaps to the whiteness of the linen, the muslin curtains and the extreme neatness and cleanliness of everything. Taras had given it up to me, removing the things he needed to the garret overhead while I was out spending his money. The only thing he had overlooked was a revolver hanging on the wall over the head of the bedstead. With eager delight I unpacked the things and spread them out to advantage. Then, impelled by an intense feeling of gratitude, I rushed down stairs to fetch Taras that he might share my joy in looking at them. He was not in.

CHAPTER X.

I AM INTRODUCED TO KAVANAGH.

I returned to my room with the ecstatic pleasure before of trying on everything and preparing a great surprise for Taras. In this delicious occupation I spent two hours, and the time was not a minute too long for my requirements. There were unforeseen difficulties to overcome. Some of the garments and the method of fastening them were as strange to me as they would have been to a savage. My hands would not become white like Miss Hopkins', and the more I scrubbed them the redder they seemed to grow, and when I came to dressing my hair I thought I never should succeed in making it presentable. It was so rebellious through having had its own way all my life that no amount of brushing would make it lie flat and smooth. However, the brushing made it very lustrous, and I contrived at last to fasten it up in loose curls on my head with the tortoise shell pins Miss Hopkins had advised me to buy. The choice of dress gave me less trouble; that pink silk tea gown was too lovely to be set aside.

I had only just got the fastenings right when I heard the street door shut and the sonorous voice of Taras calling to Mere Lucas below. I lit the lamp that stood on the table, and with doubt and hope palpitating in my heart looked in the glass. I could scarcely believe that the reflection I saw there was my own. To be sure, I was unused to the luxury of mirrors, and now for the first time perhaps looked at myself with interest; still I had seen my face often enough to believe that all the taunts it drew from the malicious wits of Ferryboat Stairs were merited. But now, as I gazed in the glass, I was almost frightened by the change made in my appearance by a beautiful dress, the care I had bestowed upon my hair and still more by the expression of eager hope which animated my features. It seemed to me that I was no longer ugly, but, on the contrary, nicer even than Miss Hopkins. Would Taras think so also and like me the better for it? I asked myself as I ran downstairs.

I opened the door with a trembling hand and went into the living room. It was softly lit by half a dozen wax candles. Taras was reading. Hearing my steps, he lifted his eyes and glanced across the table, then laying down his book and rising exclaimed, "Aura!" in a low tone of astonishment and stood for a moment regarding me in silent wonder.

"Don't ye like it?" I asked, taking his silence for a token of displeasure.

"Why, that's just what takes my breath away. I never dreamt of such a marvelous change as this," and then he said something about my bursting out winged from the chrysalis which I did not then understand.

"Then ye do like it?" said I, brightening up under the signs of approval in his face and voice.

"Of course I do. It's charming in every way. Why, you make the room look 10 times brighter."

"You won't find anything like this down Shadwell way," said I, turning round that he might see the long plaits behind. "But I ain't got my hair right yet."

"Then I hope you never may, for it cannot look better."

"I'm glad you like my dress anyhow, 'cause I got a lot more up stairs—none on 'em cheap—and a sealskin jacket and gloves with ever so many buttons and all manner."

"Bravo!" said he, rubbing his hands, with a smile; "there's nothing like doing things thoroughly, Aura."

"My shoes is a caution," I said, stepping out into the light and drawing back my skirts to show the glittering buckles.

"Pleasant to walk in, too, I should say."

"Walk! I feel like as if I could a'most dance in 'em, I'm that light. Just like a dream, where you feel's if you could fly. An it don't seem real neither. It kinder frightens me to think as I may wake up presently and find myself on the sacks up in the corner of Baxter's wharf."

"Turn it about. Say that this is the awakening, and Baxter's wharf the dream to be forgotten."

I tried to realize that, but my heart and brain gave way under the strain put upon them.

"It's too much for me all at once," I said, struggling with my hysterical emotion. "It's more'n I can bear. Don't you say another word to me just for a minute or two, or I'll make a fool of myself again." But though he did not speak, and I turned away, biting my lip to stop its quivering, the tears would spring in my eyes and choking sobs rise in my throat.

"I'm a-goin off, I think," said I, with a queer laugh, at length. "It ain't so much these clo's and things—it's this kindness as comes over me. I ain't used to it. This is twice I've give way like this. Here!" suddenly turning, in impatience with my weakness. "I ain't a-goin to carry on this here way no more. I'm a-goin to be reg'lar good, I am."

Taras nodded approvingly, and placing a chair for me seated himself.

"There's the purse you give me; I've only paid for the boots out of it," said I, offering the purse.

"Keep it; you are sure to want other things. You may see some ornaments that you would like for your room—this would look homelier for a few trifles such as you girls delight in."

"There's somethin in here, though, as I must give you, 'cause"—— Not knowing what excuse to make, I took out the iron ring I had stolen from him in silence and held it out to him with a shamed face.

He took it, with a smile, and putting it on told me that if I wanted it again I should have it, but in a tone which led me to think that there was more in his words than I then understood.

At that moment Mere Lucas entered the room with the soup, and her exclamations of astonishment as she recognized me in my new gown gave a new turn to our thoughts. Having set down the tureen, she stepped back, and putting her hands on her hips surveyed me from head to foot with smiling admiration, while she conveyed her thoughts in confidential but perfectly audible asides. I distinguished only the words "elegante" and "propre," but these just served to whet my appetite for flattery.

"She says I'm elegant and proper, but what else does she say?" I asked eagerly.

"Ah! to understand Mere Lucas' compliments you must learn French," Taras replied, laughing. "Come, let us see if her dinner isn't just as nice."

"Dinner!" I exclaimed, "why, we've had one. How many do you have a day, for goodness sake?" That dinner stands out in my recollection as the most delightful I have ever had. There was a greater variety of dishes than at a lunch, and each—especially a wonderful gateau prepared expressly for me—was a fresh surprise. The candles, clustered round a boquet of bright flowers and delicate grasses, shed a soft light over the table, the silver glittered, and the wine shone like ruby in the glasses. It afforded me great satisfaction to be able, after one or two little accidents, to hold my knife and fork as Taras did, to forego the habit of resting my elbows on the table, and to find that after all, thanks to my large French serviette, I had not made a single spot on my new gown.

When we had finished our little cups of black coffee, I ventured to ask Taras what he usually did in the evening.

"Well, usually I saunter along the embankment for half an hour or so," he replied.

"Would you mind me a-goin along with you jest for once?" I asked.

He glanced at my dress with a moment's hesitation, and then, overcoming his qualms, said that he should be very happy to take me.

"Jest you wait a bit," said I, jumping up. "I'll be down in a jiffy."

The "jiffy," I fear, must have been a rather tedious one to Taras, but at length I came down in my dark skirt, my sealskin jacket and toque and a pair of pale kid gloves.

"What d'ye think of me now?" I asked in exultation.

Taras purposely restrained himself from saying all he felt, for fear that praise might do more harm than good at this time, and I felt a little disappointment when he said very quietly that my dress was ladylike and graceful.

We walked over Westminster bridge and along the embankment to the temple and then back. My walking boots were tight and pinched my feet cruelly, but had the pain been 10 times sharper I could have borne it cheerfully and without a murmur. Indeed I almost exulted in this suffering and in the effort to conceal the slightest trace of it from Taras, with the feeling in a minor degree of a martyr enduring torture for a great cause. The gain to me was nothing less than tremendous. But yesterday girls stopped to laugh in my face and jeer at my grotesque distress; now they glanced at me with looks of envy. There was nothing ludicrous in my appearance, nothing anomalous in my walking beside a well dressed gentleman. I appeared to be his equal.

Taras himself seemed pleased to have a companion to talk to—not that I said much, for I was unused to taking any part in conversation; my powers of forming ideas and expressing them were wholly undeveloped, and my chief anxiety was to hold my shoulders back like Miss Hopkins and to find a gait which was neither shuffling nor jerky. He knew my inability to talk, and so kept up an easy running chat which called for nothing beyond "yes" or "no" on my part. I remember he told me the history of Mere Lucas' life—how years ago she had starved with her husband in besieged Paris, when even the rich could not get food; how she had fought beside him on the barricades where he was killed; how she herself narrowly escaped being shot with other communists only to be transported to an island thousands of miles from her country and friends, and how, on her return to Paris, she found her children dead and not a friend to help her.

"She don't look like as if she'd gone through all that," said I.

"No; time brings forgetfulness, thank God!" he replied. But it struck me even then that the old woman owed more to his humanity than to time.

A gentleman stood with his hand on the knocker as we reached our door.

"Come in. I am glad to see you," said Taras, opening the door with his key, and then, as we entered the living room, he introduced us in the simplest manner.

"Barry Kavanagh—Aura."

He was a handsome man—handsomer than Taras in some respects, but of a different type. He was slighter, more delicately molded, with long, perfectly regular features, a dark skin, black hair and mustache and the loveliest soft, sleepy eyes of deep brown. He was 10 years older than Taras, but he looked still more, lacking that expansive simplicity which gave youth to my friend's face. Their dress alone distinguished the different character of the two. Taras in his loose, light tweed suit, flannel shirt and soft, carelessly tied neckerchief, looked like a worker. Kavanagh's tight fitting dark coat, rigid collar and scarf and perfect gloves gave him the air of a well to do idler—a man of the world and society.

He inclined his head to me with serious courtesy and a certain homage in his regard which every friend of Taras commanded from those who knew him. I did not even nod in reply, but setting my hands behind me leaned against the wall and looked at him with, I fear, very ill concealed dislike, the warmth with which Taras greeted him having aroused the first hostile sense of jealousy in my breast.

The two men spoke lightly on general topics, while Taras brought out cigars and a spirit case, Kavanagh, with studious politeness, framing his phrases to include me and inviting me by an occasional glance to join in the conversation, but I lolled against the wall in moody silence and stared at him under my bent brows for response. At length Taras, perceiving that his visitor remained standing, said to me with a laugh:

"Barry Kavanagh will never sit down while you stand, Aura."

"Garn aw'y!" I said in a husky, guttural tone of disgust. "What 'olds 'im? He ain't 'bliged for to stand 'cause I chooses to, is he?"

That pretty little speech coming from the lips of an elegantly dressed young lady and the friend of Taras must have given Kavanagh quite a shock, and indeed, despite the self command of good breeding, a flash of astonishment did pass over his face.

Without waiting to hear out his rejoinder, I jerked myself into an upright posture, slowly walked out of the room and slammed the door to behind me.

CHAPTER XI.

KAVANAGH.

A hushed laugh from the room I had quitted reached my ear and caused me to stop at the foot of the stairs. The suspicion that I was the object of merriment stung my newly awakened pride. Jealous already of Kavanagh's influence and attributing to him the same feeling of animosity that rankled in my heart, I conceived that he would take advantage of my absence to make Taras hate me. A growing desire to hear what he would say against me, to know whether Taras would stand by me or yield to his friend, impelled me to steal back to the door, where I put my ear to the keyhole.

Kavanagh was speaking in a low, musically running tone.

"That's the worst of equality when it's practiced by a thorough going man like you. One never knows what to expect and may get a douche like this at any moment. One day you introduce me to a man with an insignificant name and the look of a broken down tradesman, and I find later on that he's a royal duke, and now—thanks, I'll help myself if I may."

"And now what do you take this friend to be?" Taras asked in a tone of amusement.

"I took her to be an illustrious refugee at the least. A princess, possibly, by her dress, distingue style and a distinctly aristocratic cut of features—probably an exceptionally learned princess. There was the eccentricity of genius in her silence, the sans gene with which she reclined against the wall and stared at me—to say nothing of a decidedly unamiable expression in those fine eyes of hers. Yes, I would have laid ten to one in anything that she was an illustrious refugee—before she opened her lips."

"Then you altered your opinion?"

"Well, yes."

There was a pause. And here I may observe that in giving this dialogue and others I write many words which were not then in my vocabulary, and it must be understood that I give but a very free translation of certain well remembered impressions.

"By the way," added Kavanagh, "I hope I was not indiscreet in accepting your invitation."

"I should not have asked you to come in if I had not wanted to have a chat with you; something more than a chat—a serious talk. I should have hunted you up tomorrow for this very purpose."

"You have the pleasantest way of making a man feel welcome. What is the subject?"

"The girl who has just left the room. In the first place, Barry Kavanagh, there must be no misconception with regard to her position here."

"My dear fellow, no one whose opinion is worth consideration would ever dream of doubting your honor or the honesty of your relations with this young woman."

"That idea never entered my imagination. It is quite another kind of misconception that I wish to avoid. Come, you are one whose opinion is worth consideration. Tell me candidly what conclusion you have formed with regard to her in place of the illustrious refugee theory."

"I should say that she is some unhappy waif whom you have rescued from the slough of despair and the slums of Whitechapel, with an object as wildly impracticable as it is profoundly charitable."

"That is the misconception that I feared," said Taras in a low, earnest voice, contrasting strongly with the light tone of his friend. "I want you to understand that the girl owes nothing to any sentiment of charity on my part in order that no chance word or accidental look may convey such a suspicion to her mind. If I gave her all that I possess in the world, down to the last farthing, it would not repay what I owe her. But for the daring, the bravery and the endurance of that slight, frail looking girl I might now be on the road to Siberia."

"Good heavens! I have not heard a word of this."

"It has all happened since I saw you last. I told you the police would not let me alone, and they have not. They laid a trap for me, and I walked into it with the simplicity of a woman, mainly, I think, because the agent employed to take me represented himself to be an ex-convict and looked the character so perfectly that I never suspected him of being something worse. Usually, you know, the police agent looks impeccable. They got me down in a cellar, bound hand and foot and gagged. I could not get my hands free, but I worked the cord off my feet and ate through my gag. There was a pipe in the cellar, and through that I communicated with the girl whose voice I heard overhead. At the risk of her life she contrived to get herself into the cellar and me out of it. A vessel—from which I had been led to believe that three refugees were to be rescued—lay in the pool waiting for me, and most likely I was to have been carried aboard and shipped off to St. Petersburg the very night that this brave girl saved me."

"Thank God you escaped! Give me your hand, old man. To think that I might have found this room empty—that I might never have smoked another pipe with you!"

"You can understand now my feeling toward that girl."

"By George, it's a heavy debt!" Then in a reflective tone he added after a pause: "I see. You propose to raise this girl to your own level."

"Higher if I may. I aim at giving her a new life."

"You have set yourself an enormous task."

"You may help me now if you will."

"If I will! Why, there's nothing in the world that would give me greater pleasure, if it were only to prove the sincerity of an Irishman's friendship."

"If I had doubted that, I should not have said a word to you on the subject. I felt that I could rely on your help in case of need, but I would not impose a task upon you which beforehand seemed utterly hopeless."

"One moment, old man," said Kavanagh, with a laugh. "You are not going to hand that young lady over to me?"

"Yes. You must promise to look after her if anything happens to me."

"Good heavens! what do you mean?" cried Kavanagh, with bated breath.

"I mean that you must finish what I have begun if I cannot finish it myself. I must make some provision of this kind for the poor girl. What would become of her if in a few weeks, say, she were thrown suddenly upon her own resources? Money alone would make her position only the more perilous. Without a friend to guide her, she would absolutely be worse off than if I had left her in the slums."

"I understand that, but what do you mean by the suggestion that something might happen to you in a few weeks?"

"I told you that the police have tried to kidnap me."

"And failed"——

"They will be more careful next time in consequence. They intend to take me, and probably they will. Three months ago the minister of police received an order from the czar to silence me. He seldom has to repeat an order of that kind."

"I could not believe it when you told me."

"It was credible enough to me. The warning came from a reliable friend in the minister's household. The odd thing is that I have heard nothing since from him or other friends who watch the motions of the police. It looks as if he had found a new agent—one less known to us than the old hands."

"The villainous looking scoundrel you mentioned."

"Oh, dear, no. He is only a subagent employed by the agent in chief, who himself takes care to keep well out of the way. He may be directing the affair from Paris or Berlin. Certainly he would not jeopardize his own life or his position by an attack of this kind. The whole business has to be done by carefully concealed means, like one of those clocks which defy ingenuity to discover where the motive power is situated. It would never do, in case of exposure, for a known emissary of the Russian government to be implicated in a conspiracy against the freedom of a subject on British soil."

"That did not occur to me at the moment. What steps have you taken since this attempt?"

"Made my will and"——

"Surely they will not attempt to assassinate you?" Kavanagh said quickly, interrupting Taras.

"Assassinate me? No! The rascals have too much respect for your hangman and their own necks to venture on that. But they would not hesitate to kill me if they could justify themselves by a plea of self defense. That might have happened the other night if they had not taken me so completely by surprise that I could offer no resistance. Every one of them had his knife ready, and I should have been cut down as sure as fate if their cords had not held me. Taking place in a villainous waterside beerhouse, my death would have been attributed to a drunken brawl, and all evidence of my identity being removed it is doubtful if the papers would take any notice of the inquest. It was all calculated to a nicety—the agent must have gone over the ground and mapped it out clearly. I would give anything to know who he is."

"It is horrible to fight in the dark. You never know when the blow may fall."

"No, nor who may strike it—that's the worst part of the business. It shakes one's faith. The man you trust turns out to be an enemy—your favorite haunt a nest of spies—anything may happen at any moment. I fancy they will give me a respite now. I am all right for a time."

"Is it not possible," said Kavanagh, "is there not just a chance that the attack was intended rather as a warning than anything else, and that they would have suffered you to escape if the girl had not forestalled them? If they silenced you tonight, your works would still exist. They cannot undo them, and they know it. Sent to Siberia, you become a martyr, and greater importance is given to your work. It seems to me that the agents—the minister, the czar himself—will be satisfied with this manifestation of power and drop the affair."

"For awhile possibly—probably, indeed. But when they find that I do not profit by their warning and will not accept their conditions of neutrality—that I am neither a child nor an old woman to be frightened by menaces of future punishment from the course directed by my conscience"——

"But, my dear fellow, it is not as if you were still an active enemy."

"If you think I am nothing but a passive enemy, you are wrong," said Taras, with more fire in his voice than I had yet heard. "They have something to gain by my removal. For months I have been meditating a new attack, and the czar knows it, for he has spies in our camp as we have friends in his. I have only been waiting for the idea, and the idea came to my mind the first time I saw Aura. I owe her that as well, poor girl. Come up with me, and I will show the shell I am preparing to throw at the czar's feet."

As their chairs moved I slipped from the door and ran up to my room to meditate on what I had heard and form a clearer conception of its meaning.

Good Cooking is essential to Good Digestion—in pastry you cannot have either without a good shortening. Lard has always had very objectionable features, causing indigestion and many other dietetic troubles. Science has come to the assistance of the cook, and of weak stomachs, with the new shortening,

Cottolene

It is composed of the choicest beef suet and highly refined vegetable oil, in many respects as good as the finest imported olive oil. Physicians endorse it, cooking experts recommend it, and thousands are now using it in preference to any other shortening. Sold in 3 and 5 lb. pails.

Extract from U. S. Postal Laws Regarding Newspapers.

1. Any person who has taken a paper regularly from the postoffice, whether directed to his name or another's, or whether he has subscribed for it or not, is responsible for the payment.

2. That refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for is a prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

3. If any person orders his paper stopped, he must pay all arrearages, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount with costs, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.

4. Any person continuing to take and read the paper after the term for which they have subscribed has expired, will be held to have subscribed for another year, and must pay the annual rate of subscription, though they may not have expressly renewed their subscription.

THE PROPER WAY.

That some good will result from the action of Messrs. Steenerson in the freight rate matter, the JOURNAL feels confident. They have gone at it in a business-like manner—the only way that anything of this kind can be accomplished. The law of 7887, amended by the session of the legislature in 1891, prescribing the duties and defining the powers of the railroad and warehouse commission, says that "after a hearing on the question of rates, the commission shall make a report showing wherein rates complained of are exhorbitant or unreasonable, and shall make a tariff of rates which shall be substituted for the tariff complained of," and further, that "such tariff of rates shall be deemed and taken in all courts of this state as prima facie evidence that the tariff of rates so made is equal and reasonable, and such tariff so made shall be in full force and effect during the pendency of any appeal that may be taken in the matter to the courts." The first thing, therefore, to be done to secure lower rates, is to convince the railroad commission that the rates now charged are unreasonable, and this was what the hearing last week was for. When the matter comes up again in January the railroads will submit an array of figures in support of their position, the question will be argued by the attorneys and the railroad commission will then consider the matter and decide the case according to the evidence submitted. Should the commission find the rates unreasonable, they will proceed to make a new tariff, which shall be substituted for the tariff complainsd of, and shall be in full force and effect until reversed by the courts.

If the commission declares the rates excessive and establishes a new tariff, then the railroads will carry the case into the courts and attack the constitutionality of the law under which the commission is working.

The fact that three other railroads—the Omaha, the Northern Pacific and the Milwaukee—wanted to intervene in the case and help the Great Northern fight the battle,—shows that Mr. Steenerson has struck an effective blow, and that the railroads fear he may succeed, and they have good reason to think so, for should he prove that the rates are unreasonably high, the commission will undoubtedly make a reduction, but they do not want to make an order of this kind unless it is just and right and will stand the test in the courts.

THE FARMER'S FRIEND.

The JOURNAL cannot help but speak of a little circumstance connected with the frieght investigation last week, which goes to show—once more—that some people are not what they profess to be. In looking round for witnesses to testify before the railroad commission, Halvor Steenerson had figured on Ignatius Donnelly—the great Commoner—as being an important witness, and had written, asking him to co-operate—to which the sage replied not. Meeting him in St. Paul, Mr. Steenerson again asked the Hon. Ignatius—the president of state farmers alliance—to go before the commission and furnish some testimony against the railroad, but the great reformer said nay—he didn't have time, or some such trivial excuse. Now if there is a man in the state of Minnesota—outside of the railroad men—who should be posted on railroad rates, that man is Ignatius Donnelly. Every time he has been in the legislature, he has been a member of the committee on railroads and helped draft much of our railroad legislation. Now that an attempt is being made to take advantage of some of this railroad legislation, the Hon. Ignatius refuses entirely to lend a helping hand. On the contrary, he has—through his paper—advised the farmers from all parts of the state to gather at the state capitol, to make a great demonstration and to DEMAND of the commissioners that they immediately reduce all frieght rates, and failing in this the people are to petition the governor to immediately remove these stubborn servants of the people from office. In accordance with these meaningless, nihilistic utterances, petitions have been circulated among the farmers of the state demanding that ALL frieght rates be immediately reduced fifty per cent. These petitions have been sent to the governor, but what can he do with them? The absurdity of the thing is so apparent that it is probable few of the signers expected to accomplish anything further than to "register a kick." The trouble with Mr. Donnelly just now is probably jealously. He is afraid Mr. Steenerson may accomplish some good for the people and he (Donnelly) would get none of the glory. His occupation as champion of the common people would be infringed on.

Bob Dunn, of the Princeton Union, is mentioned as a candidate for State Auditor on the republican ticket. While Bob would be all right enough what is the matter with P. J. McGuire, the man who was beaten by the Demopop combination at the last election?

Tollemache's Consideration.

Of the late Lord Tollemache's consideration for others an amusing instance has been related by his brother. One day, at Peckforton, he came down earlier than was his wont and happened to look into the drawing room. He found the room "not done" and littered with brushes and dusters. Extremely displeased he rang the bell impetuously, and the inculpated housemaid was summoned, but when she appeared, instead of administering the intended rebuke, he apologized to her for coming into the room so early, and was so full of excuses for his untimely visit that she said at last, "Pray, don't mention it, my lord."—London Tit-Bits.

Malta Drinking Water.

"The best water I ever drank," writes a correspondent, "was at Malta, where it is collected on the flat roofs, which are most carefully cleaned preparatory to the heavy fall of rain which takes place when the weather breaks the first or second week in September. Every house has below it an immense tank, often of the same area as the house, and about 12 feet deep, and into this pours the beautiful fresh water, which comes up cool and sparkling when wanted."

Scared Enough to Dye.

"See here," said the man who had married a widow, "hasn't your hair turned gray rather suddenly since we were wed?"

"Oh," said she, "that's from fright. I was so scared when you proposed to me, don't you know!"—Indianapolis Journal.

The strongest animals in the world are those that live on a vegetable diet, say the vegetarians. The lion is ferocious rather than strong. The bull, horse, reindeer, elephant and antelope, all conspicuous for strength and endurance, choose a vegetable diet.

When you speak of bees, designate the kind referred to. There are 4,500 species popularly known as "wild bees," 3,200 being natives of the Americas. Britain has 70 species of bees and 16 of wasps. Of the latter there are 170 species known to entomologists.

White With a Vengeance.

Here is a state of things which probably not the wealth of the Astors could buy in America. Lord and Lady Alington have a place in Dorset known as the White farm. Everything is accordingly white. All the farm buildings, the house itself, and even all the animals on the place are white. Rabbits, cats, guinea pigs, hens, horses, cows, donkeys and all the creatures are spotless.

But this is not the most remarkable feature. The free and independent British men and maids who till the soil and churn the butter are compelled to attire themselves in white smocks and white frocks to bear out the general impression of whiteness.—New York Recorder.

Appropriate.

One day while his apparatus for deep sea soundings, by means of steel pianoforte wire, was being constructed, Lord Kelvin entered Mr. White's shop in Glasgow along with the great Dr. Joule, celebrated for his determination of the mechanical equivalent of heat. Joule's attention was called to a bundle of the pianoforte wire lying in the shop, and Thomson explained that he intended it for "sounding purposes." "What note?" innocently inquired Joule and was promptly answered, "The deep C."—Argonaut.

DUNN'S BUDGET.

Interesting News and Gossip from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, November 29.—We have just returned from one of the many pleasant excursions of the Gridiron club. This time it was to the sunny South—Asheville, N. C. This is one of the most charming spots in that great country of which the Northern people hear so much about, but in reality know so little. Asheville is in the mountains, near the Tennessee line; that Eastern Tennessee which was known as the most loyal part of the whole country during the war. If the mountain district of North Carolina had had the same opportunity, it is posssible that it, too, would have had the same record. But we did not go to Asheville to fight over the war, or speculate upon what the people of a generation ago might have done. We went for pleasure and we had it. The good people of North Carolina made the trip very pleasant, indeed. They have a great country down there and one which in the future will become well known. It is reached by the Richmond & Danville system, one of the best roads, and running through the best country in the South. Skirting along the foot hills of the Blue Ridge Mountains, or climbing by winding way to near their summits to find Asheville situated amidst their peaks, the Richmond & Danville always affords its passengers a delightful and picturesque journey.

The city of Asheville is well known for several reasons; among them being the famous Battery Park hotel, the magnificent mountain scenery to be viewed from its porticos, the fact that it is the official residence of Bill Nye—and by the way Nye is getting fat—and that within a few miles of Asheville George W. Vanderbilt is erecting one of the grandest piles of masonry in the shape of a country residence that this Republic has ever seen. It is upon an estate of 30,000 acres which he is improving and beautifying in the most lavish manner. He has money to spend and the people of Asheville are helping him to spend it. There are many other attractions in this beautiful mountain city, and the hospitality of the good people of Asheville assisted us to the best there were.

I have been in the South several times before and have been very much impressed with that region. The South is doing well. I become more and more convinced with every trip I make if there could be less talk of equal rights, of free ballot, and if the menace of Negro domination could be withdrawn, a large share of the South would be Republican in politics than now exist. The white people own ninety-five per cent of the property and they do not intend to let the owners of the other five per cent, even if they are in the majority, to control the state municipal affairs; and yet in all the time I have been in the South I never had a colored man come to me and tell me that he was not being treated right. I believe that this part of North Carolina is pretty strong for protection. There are plenty of Republicans who vote the Democratic ticket on the color line alone.

I remember how some Republicans criticised Senator Washburn when he voted to set aside the last force bill. I thought he was right then and still think so. If we could get rid of some of these ideas the Republicans might make some inroads in the South. It would be better for everybody. It would be well to accept certain conditions as we find them, and not try to legislate against the inevitable.

TARIFF FOR REVENUE

PRICES WILL BE HIGHER FOR OUR DAILY SUPPLIES.

A Clear Explanation of the Meaning of a Tariff For Revenue Only—Poor and Rich Must Pay Alike—Increased Customs Taxes, but Decreased Wages.

The longer the delay in framing the new tariff for revenue only, the greater seem to be the complications surrounding it. Yet this should not be. It is the simplest thing in the world. A single paragraph could do it. It is not even necessary to get into any long or elaborate tables, such as have been attached to all previous tariffs that were ever placed upon our statutes. A tariff for revenue only is simplicity itself. It can be so easily understood by anybody who can read. All difficulties at our custom house will be abolished at once. The new bill need merely enact what the amount of this tariff for revenue only is to be—abolish the McKinley tariff, and the thing is done.

As there seems to be so much ignorance upon the subject, and uncertainty as to the amount of revenue that will be derived therefrom, let us take a tariff of 30 per cent ad valorem and apply it to our imports during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1893. This will give, at a glance, the contribution toward revenue that will be derived from each and all of our imports on the same basis of values and it simplifies the matter to the understanding of every member of the majority of the ways and means committee, who appear unable to grasp the situation and to be struggling under outside influences. Here are the figures:

Imports.	Value, year ending June 30.	30 per cent tariff for revenue only.

Totals	$900,447,000	$270,203,000

In round numbers the above figures are correct and show the situation clear as a bell. Every importer of goods can tell at a glance how his business will be affected. Everything under the new system will be fair and equal. The "robber barons" will have no advantage over the poor man, and the constitution will have a Democratic vindication. Compare this with the McKinley tariff, where "protection is a fraud," and see the difference. Thus:

	Value of imports.	Ad valorem.	Duties.
McKinley	$355,527,000	48.71	$173,097,670
Revenue only	900,447,000	30.00	270,203,000

In this table the import values and duties collected, under the McKinley tariff, are for the year ending June 30, 1892, whereas the tariff for revenue only figures are from the treasury statistics of imports for the year ending June 30, 1893, and the duties collectible are on the basis of a 30 per cent tariff for revenue only.

Under the McKinley tariff we find that only about 40 per cent of our imports have been paying any duty at all, and that in those cases the average ad valorem duty was nearly one-half of the actual value of the goods. This was all wrong according to the Democratic theory, for it is well known that the free list has been, with one exception, larger under the McKinley bill than in any other tariff the United States ever had. This was discrimination and unconstitutional, says the Democratic party. Under such a system the "robber barons" grew rich, while the poor remained poor. This is what the free traders claim.

Look at the other side of the picture. Under a tariff for revenue only every dollar's worth of our $900,000,000 of imports will pay its share of duty. There will be no unjust discrimination, whereby $650,000,000 worth of goods will bear no contribution to the revenue and will be admitted free of duty to enrich the "robber barons." Where the duties are paid in future all will be alike, say 30 per cent. The duty on tea, on sugar, on coffee, will be the same for the poor man as for the rich man. Under the McKinley tariff there was no duty on these. Tea, coffee and sugar will cost one-third more than they do now. Coal is another household necessity, and the duty on coal will be higher, so that coal should cost more money. The poor man will not pay any less than the "robber baron." All will be equal under a tariff for revenue only to which the Democratic party is pledged.

Look at the result in our national revenue. Under the alleged unconstitutional McKinley tariff last year, our customs duties contributed only $173,097,670 toward revenue, but under a tariff for revenue only we shall have what it implies, a tariff that will contribute to the revenue to the extent of $270,203,000, nearly $100,000,000 more than the unconstitutional McKinley tariff. This is the only proper method, say the Democrats. It will build up our national revenue as it was intended and we shall hear nothing more of a contemplated deficiency of $50,000,000 before the end of the year. But the poor people will have to pay $100,000,000 more in taxes under the free trade tariff for revenue only system of the Democratic party.

If Mr. Wilson and his colleagues had previously been in doubt as to the course they should pursue, as is indicated by dispatches from Washington, let them study the situation as here set forth. Nothing could be plainer. There is no mystery about it. Everybody will understand it now. Let us hear no more of the word protection from West Virginia or elsewhere. Protection is unconstitutional, says the Democratic creed. The people decided so last November. Mr. Wilson can, in a day, draw up a simple bill of a single paragraph to repeal the existing protection and to fix the tariff for revenue only at 25 per cent or 30 per cent, as the revenue may need. Then the constitution will be vindicated. The poor people will pay more taxes and earn less wages under the execution of a Democratic theory.

A Suggestive Fact.

A few weeks ago the New York Commercial Advertiser published a table showing the earnings of banks in New York city and in other parts of the country to be as follows:

DIVIDENDS, PER CENT.

	New York banks.	Outside banks.
1888	8.0	8.9
1889	7.8	8.5
1890	8.2	9.4
1891	7.6	9.6
1892	7.5	9.8

The Commercial Advertiser, however, failed to bring out the point that this exhibit teaches, but its lost opportunity was "caught on" to by the Springfield (Mass.) Morning Union, which showed that the decrease in the dividends of the New York banks is due to the protective policy of the McKinley tariff, which checks imports, and that "it is the foreign trade that must most largely determine the amount of business transacted by the banks of the commercial metropolis."

On the other hand, The Union points out that the policy of protection has enabled the erection of manufacturing industries throughout other parts of the country, the better use of money, and consequently larger dividends there, with a corresponding decrease of imports and dividends at New York, saying that "the expansion and development of our industries are more advantageous to the larger area of the country than they are to the state or city of New York alone."

Naturally enough, when bankers see diminishing dividends, they intend to make some effort to check the decrease, and, as The Union says, "here may be found the reason why the bankers of New York are so anxious for the repeal of the McKinley tariff." Knowing as we do how the country prospered elsewhere as long as protection was assured, it is not surprising that there should be a change in the relative bank earnings in and out of New York. The reason assigned, too, seems plausible enough, judging by results.—American Economist.

Tobacco Growing Interests.

The tariff on foreign tobacco has not only had the effect of increasing the consumption of domestic tobacco, but it has also had the effect of causing a very marked improvement in the quality of the domestic goods. Tobacco manufacturers have seen the increased demand, and competition has compelled them to vie with one another in placing the best goods on the market. Growers are producing a better quality of tobacco leaf, as they get more money for their crop and take more interest in it. Manufacturers are placing a better article on the market, and the American laborers and workmen get a better 5 or 10 cent domestic cigar for their money today than they ever did before. There is only one class that complains, and that is the Democratic party, whose platform calls for the "cheap comforts" of life. They want cheap imported cigars, as nothing American is good enough for them, and in order to get their cheap imported "comforts" they would sacrifice the industry of the tobacco growers of the United States, together with every other American industry.—Charles R. Buckland.

"A Love For the Republic."

The millions of dollars which, under free trade, this country would pay for commodities to the old world would help to defray the expenses of maintaining monarchies, hostile armies and fleets, and it would largely come from our workingmen. It would take employment from our people and take bread from the mouths of their wives and children. Theorists take no account of this, but practical men ask what good can come to us from robbing our own people purely in the interest of nations that would like to see our republic destroyed and the trial of self government prove a failure. Protection subordinates the scheme and policies of foreign countries to our own national self interests. It places America before Europe. It finds its inspiration in the Declaration of Independence; its authority in the constitution and the first laws passed by the fathers of the republic. Protection is patriotism, a just regard for the welfare of the people. It is "a love for the republic."—Cleveland Leader.

The Best Medicine.

J. O. WILSON, Contractor and Builder, Sulphur Springs, Texas, thus speaks of Ayer's Pills:

"Ayer's Pills are the best medicine I ever tried; and, in my judgment, no better general remedy could be devised. I have used them in my family and recommended them to my friends and employes for more than twenty years. To my certain knowledge, many cases of the following complaints have been completely and by the use of Ayer's Pills alone: Third day chills, dumb ague, bilious fever, sick headache, rheumatism, flux, dyspepsia, constipation, and hard colds. I know that a moderate use of Ayer's Pills, continued for a few days or weeks, as the nature of the complaint required, would be found an absolute cure for the disorders I have named above."

"I have been selling medicine for eight years, and I can safely say that Ayer's Pills give better satisfaction than any other Pill I ever sold."—J. J. Perry, Spottsylvania C. H., Va.

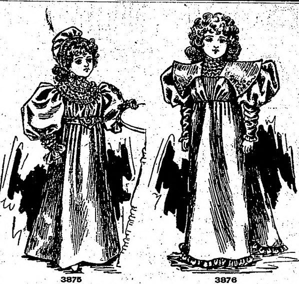
FADS AND FASHIONS.



Two Charming Frocks for the Little Folks.

THE tendency the coming season in the styles of little girls frocks is for extreme length, in spite of the fact that English mammas persist in dressing their darlings in abbreviated little skirts that scarcely reach the bend of the knee. They are certainly the most sensible, those quaint long gowns, for they cover in the little tender legs and do much to promote robust health. These frocks are invariably short-waisted, and have very large bouffant sleeves like those in their elders' gowns. The two models given are the very latest modes designed for the winter season and are especially attractive in every way.

No. 3875 is for little girls from three to five years of age. It may be fashioned of any material, cotton, silk or wool, or may have a wool skirt and silken sleeves and bodice. The one illustrated is of pale sage green cashmere with tan colored silk sleeves and bodice, the belt and intervening pieces to fasten down the shirrings of yoke and waists being enriched by gold braid. The little bonnet is made of the green wool with a border of gold enriched silk. It is cut in three sizes, for children from 8 to 5 years old, and requires, for the medium size, 3¼ yards material 26 inches wide, or 4 yards 27 inches. Price 25 cents.

No. 3876 is a very quaintly fashioned frock for girls from three to five years. It has a long quaint skirt and short gathered bodice with a deep revers collar and huge topped sleeves. The model is of pale blue wool with a silk collar and sleeves of surah to match, the little vest-like front being of cream white lace shirred to fit the throat. There is a piping cord of silk about the waist where bodice and skirt meet, and the tiny ruffle about the bottom is also of silk. It is cut in three sizes, for children from 3 to 5 years old, and requires, for the medium size, 3½ yards material 36 inches wide, or 4 yards 27 inches. Price 25 cents.

These patterns are for ssle by the McCall Co., New York. The JOURNAL will procure them for any lady reader who may desire them.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, onta na' Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

A Prize Number.

The December New Peterson is in many respects ahead of all former months, excellent as those issues have been. The illustrations are more numerous and better than ever, and a glimpse of the contents is enough to make one want to read from the first page to the last. The opening article, "The Land of the Liberator," by M. McCarthy-O'Leary, is a sketch of Irish life and scenery, written in the most captivating manner and illustrated by a series of admirable photogravures. "Figs From Thistles," by Lucy H. Hooper, is a beautiful story and possesses an additional interest from the fact that it is the last written by the gifted authoress only a few months before her death. "Puss in Boots," by Agnes Repplier, is in that popular writer's best vein, and the illustrations are worthy of the sketch. "Pocahontas," by Alexander Brown, is an exceedingly interesting paper by Virginia's noted historian. "Under the Southern Cross" is another charming paper profusely illustrated with excellent photogravures. "Helen," by M. G. McClelland is as intense as it is realistic. "The Laziest Man in the Settlement," by Herbert Bashford, will make the older Western authors look to their laurels. "The Fireside" contains papers by Minot J. Savage and other distinguished essayists. The book reviews, by Robert C. V. Meyers, are the best we have seen among the month's magazines. At its reduced price—$1.00 a year—The New Peterson is certainly the cheapest and best magazine in the world. Send 5 cents for a sample copy. Address The Peterson Magazine Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Coup d'Etat of 1851.

When the sun rose on France, December 2d, 1851, it saw a constitutional republic; when it set, absolute monarchy held Paris and the nation in a grip that was not relaxed for twenty years. Trading upon the reputation of "mon oncle," and aided by political adventurers who loved power better than country, Louis Napoleon made himself master of France. He dreamed of founding a new dynasty, and thought the Empire was built on a rock. Less than twenty years after, he was a defeated exile, his only refuge in "perfidious Albion." And yet this change of twenty years was only the crushing of an individual who had dared to rear his head nearer the stars than the destinies intended for him. In twenty years the Republic on whose borders he meditated conquest in 1863, had grown from twenty to forty millions of people, had fought a great civil war, and was filling up, by aid of thousands of miles of railroad, the great West, with a population and a promise of growth which Napoleon's dreams never could equal. To understand this great West, travel by the Burlington Route through the ten states it links together. Tickets can be had of any railroad agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

Presentation of a Badge to the "Drummer Boy of the Rappahannock."

One of the most pleasant and interesting features of the grand campfire held Wednesday night of the National Encampment week at Indianapolis was the presentation to Comrade Robert Henry Hendershot, the drummer boy of the Rappahannock, with a beautiful badge. Following a drum solo by Comrade Hendershot, which he performed on the original drum Horace Greely presented him after the battle of Fredericksburg in 1862, ex-President Benjamin Harrison, who presided at the campfire, accompanied by Colonel Smith, stepped forward, and in presence of 5,000 veterans, clasping the drummer boy warmly by the hand, in a glowing tribute to his bravery in his boyhood days, presented him with one of the handsomest Grand Army badges ever worn by a veteran. The badge is of solid gold, regulation Grand Army size and insignia.

Each point of the star bears a a diamond, the eagle's eye a ruby, pendant between the star and eagle a small cross emblematic of the Woman's Relief corps bearing four diamonds, below the cross a minature drum and sticks. The reverse of the pendant G. A. R. star bears the following, "Robert H. Hendershot, drummer boy of the Rappahannock from G. A. R. and W. R. C. comrades, Indianapolis, September, 1893. Honor to whom honor is due." Comrade Hendershot passed through Indianapolis in 1861 on his way to the front with his regiment, the Ninth Michigan volunteer infantry. On this visit he was royally greeted by many of the ladies, who, in those stirring days of the war, contributed so much to the comfort of the boys in blue on their way to the front. They recognized in the bronzed and stalwart veteran the little drummer boy who had won their admiration and who had carried with him their best wishes and prayers for his safe return. With the badge was a large number of letters from comrades of both the Grand Army and Woman's Relief corps, from all parts of the United States, bearing commendations couched in patriotic and loving terms, words that made the soldier's hearts beat even quicker than the taps upon the drum now made by hands skilled by years of service. The W. R. C. and comrades also presented Comrade Hendershot with a regulation, inlaid snare drum, heavily mounted and trimmed with silver, bearing upon a silver G. A. R. badge the inscription of presentation. J. C. Hendershot, son of the drummer boy, was presented with a beautiful fife banded in gold. The son as a fifer wins applause wherever he appears.

The presentation speech of the fife and drum was made by that noble woman, Kate B. Sherwood, the founder of the W. R. C., who ever dares to stand up for right and justice. Her remarks brought tears to the eyes of the loyal hearts who have known Robert Hendershot from the time he crossed the Rappahannock in 1862. Even the nurse who took care of the drummer boy while sick at City Point, Va., in 1864, was present. Major Hendershot acted as a spy for General Grant at City Point, Va., in 1861. He went into Richmond twice and into Petersburg three times before the close of the war. General Grant recommended him to Lincoln for West Point for these acts of bravery.

Toilettes for Ladies.

For stylish evening costumes the silks of the present season have never been surpassed in fanciful variety. The interweaving of two or more colors predominates in these tissues and produces novel and original effects in blending shades, which are still enhanced by the glistening moire surface that is given to many of them. Among other novelties the broche moires are particularly attractive, having delicate broche figures of one color standing out against the watered ground of a contrasting color. A rich brocade for reception gowns is called "damas camaieu." This material has repped ground in some solid color with a design in satin of the same color shot with white. The painted bongalines are evening silks with light grounds, having printed Pompadour bouquets which look as if painted in water colors. They are often combined with a new velours peluche. These items, as well as many others equally attractive, are to be found in the McDowell Fashion Magazines just received. The latest numbers of these artistic publications maintain still their high standard of execellence, which makes them of inestimable valuable to all devotees of fashion, and easily accounts for the wide spread admiration they secured at the World's Fair. A special new inducement has been introduced in them in the shape of pattern coupons, by which one can secure many novelties at moderate prices. "La Mode de Paris" and "Album of Fashion" only costs $3.50 a year each, or 35 cents a copy. "The French Dressmaker" is $3.00 per annum, or 30 cents a copy, while "La Mode," the home fashion magazine above all, comes at the very moderate price of $1.50 a year, or 15 cents a copy. If you are unable to procure any of these publications at your newsdealer do not take any substitute from him, but apply by mail to Messrs. A. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th Street New York.

POWDERLY IS OUT.

HIS RESIGNATION ACCEPTED BY THE KNIGHTS.

The Vote Stood 23 to 13—Labor Commissioner Sovereign of Iowa Was Elected to Succeed Him—Third Man to Hold the Office.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 28.—James R. Sovereign of Iowa was elected general master workman of the Knights of Labor during the afternoon by a vote of 23 to 3, James Campbell of Pittsburg being his opponent. Mr. Sovereign is the third man to hold the office of general master workman in the order since its organization in 1869, Mr. Stephens and Mr. Powderly being the two others. The afternoon session was characterized by very peaceful and harmonious proceedings. General Worthy Foreman Bishop occupied the chair. Upon assembling the delegates announced the following nominations for a general executive board, three of whom were to be elected: H. B. Martin, Minnesota; J. W. Kenna, Indiana; James McGuire, District of Columbia; T. Chonforker, Maryland; J. Robinson, Indiana; D. L. Roy, South, Dakota; S. C. French, Massachusetts. Martin, with 24 votes, and Kenna and Roy, each with 18,

Were Declared Elected.

T. B. McGuire of New York was elected on Friday, making a complete board of four. The next business was the resumption of balloting on General Master Workman Powderly's resignation, which was accepted by 23 to 13 votes. James R. Sovereign, James Campbell and T. B. McGuire were then nominated for the office, but McGuire withdrew. Only one ballot was taken. This resulted as follows: Sovereign 23 and Campbell 3. The news of his election was immediately telegraphed to Mr. Sovereign, who is expected to be present before the adjournment of the general assembly.

Mr. Powderly was seen shortly afterwards by an Associated Press reporter. He seemed in excellent humor. When asked his opinion of the assembly's action he said: "The king is dead, long live the king. Mr. Sovereign will have no heartier support by any individual of the order than he will receive from me. He is eminently worthy of the position and I believe he will fill the office as well as anyone can."

SIX PLEADED GUILTY.

Trial of Indicted Smugglers at Portland, Or., Begun.

PORTLAND, Or., Nov. 27.—The trials of 20 persons indicted for smuggling have begun in the United States court. The trials are of unusual interest, owing to the social and political prominence of some of the defendants, among whom is James Letan, ex-collector of customs, and J. C. Mulkey, ex-special agent of the treasury department.

The first case called was that of Nathan Blum, on the charge of smuggling 800 pounds of opium. Blum plead guilty. Sentence was reserved. It is stated that Blum will now be a witness for the government.

When court convened in the afternoon L. C. Sweeney, W. B. Jackling, Robert Garthorne, W. F. Patterson and Thomas Borg also pleaded guilty. Sentence in each case was suspended. The plea of guilty entered by the six defendants will, it is thought, be detrimental to the interests of the remaining defendants.

SEVEN INDICTED.

Officials of the Madison Square Bank Must Stand Trial.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—Thirty-three indictments were presented by the grand jury against seven of the officers of the defunct Madison Square bank. The only two directors who escaped were Frederick Uhlmann and Lewis Thompson, the cashier. Thompson was let off because he turned state's evidence. Several other indictments in connection with the wrecking of the bank were handed in, but they were not made public. The indicted men are: President Joseph F. Blaut, Directors Ronald T. McDonald, Andrew Soulard, Frederick A. Kursheedt, Adolph S. Kalischer, Simon Ottenberg and Charles E. Selover.

Illinois Banker Sentenced.

NORMAL, Ills., Nov. 28.—William H. Schureman, the ex-banker, who was president of the defunct Exchange bank of this city, pleaded guilty to 29 counts of an indictment for embezzlement in receiving money for deposit when the bank was insolvent. He was sentenced to one year in the penitentiary and to pay a fine twice the sum of the deposits involved.

Won by Directum.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 28.—The match race between Directum and Saladin was won by the former. Saladin captured the first heat in 2:10 1-4, but Directum won the next three in 2:10 1-2, 2:11 1-4 and 2:12. The race was for a purse of $2,000 and a side bet of $7,500.

Princess Colonna Seeks Divorce.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—A dispatch to The Herald from Paris says: Princess Colonna, the daughter of Mrs. John W. Mackey, has applied for a legal separation from Prince Ferdinand Gallatro Colonna and for the custody of the three children.

Ex-Congressman Eldridge Dead.

DETROIT, Nov. 28.—A special to The Free Press from Adrian, Mich., says: Ex-Congressman Nathaniel Buell Eldridge is dead. He served through the war in the Thirteenth Michigan as lieutenant colonel. In 1884 he was elected to congress and re-elected in 1888.

Smallpox Epidemic in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Nov. 24.—The health commissioner declares that smallpox is epidemic in Chicago. There are now 18 cases of the disease in the city pest house.

RUSK'S FUNERAL.

Impressive Services Held For the Dead Soldier-Statesman.

VIROQUA, Wis., Nov. 25.—The obsequies over the remains of Hon. Jeremiah Rusk were a fitting finale of the simple life of Wisconsin's commoner, the most picturesque character the state has ever produced. The bitterly cold wind did not prevent the people of the entire country from attending the funeral, and many thousands of strangers were present, large delegations coming from the most distant parts of the Northwest. Three heavy special trains arrived during the day, the first arriving from La Crosse. The second, from Madison, brought Governor Peck, the most of the state officers, judges of the supreme court and a large number of other prominent people. The third and largest special came from Chicago and Milwaukee, bringing 700 notable people, including ex-President Harrison, ex-Attorney General Miller, Captain Meredith, ex-chief of the bureau of printing and engraving; Edward Willets, assistant secretary of agriculture; Senator Philetus Sawyer and John C. Spooner, ex-Governor W. D. Hoard, General Lucius Fairchild, Henry C. Payne, and a large delegation of the Loyal Legion and Masonic fraternities.

The Funeral Services.

The funeral arrangement were in accordance with the wishes of General Rusk. A short service was held at the residence on the previous day in the presence of his family only and the remains were then conveyed to the Methodist church, where they lay in state until the hour of burial. The little church holds only about 350 people, and a continuous stream passed by the bier. There were many affecting scenes as old veterans limped by to get a farewell look at the familiar face and in many instances weeping and audibly expressing their grief and sorrow.

The public services were of an extempore character, and were conducted by Rev. Mr. Muzum of the Methodist church and Professor D. Butler, a warm personal friend of General Rusk. A choir rendered a number of favorite selections, and there were one or two solos. The religious services were followed by the reading of the beautiful burial service of the Masonic blue lodge by E. H. Beitzenberg, commander of the Wisconsin consistory. Immediately following the services the procession formed and proceeded to the cemetery where the last scene in the eventful life of General Rusk was enacted.

A Proud Spirited Woman's Fate.

DAVENPORT, Ia., Nov. 28.—Mrs. John L. Reid committed suicide by hanging herself on the front porch of her home. She was discovered after life had become extinct and cut down by her daughter. Mrs. Reid was deserted by her husband about a year ago. Being proud spirited she suffered much rather than let her friends know of her pressing wants.

Lewelling Out of Danger.

PITTSBURG, Kan., Nov. 28.—Governor Lewelling, who was taken seriously ill here two days ago, is now out of danger. Lieutenant Governor Daniels is still confined to his bed at Girard, though his case is not serious.

Governor Peck Denies.

MADISON, Wis., Nov. 28.—Governor Peck has filed his answer to the Tracy, Gibbs & Co. complaint in which it is set up that the governor, Attorney General O'Connor, Assistant Attorney General Clancy and Colonel C. L. Clark entered into a conspiracy to get $7,500 from them for use by their personal organ, the now defunct Madison Times. Peck denies a conspiracy and says the printing order was given out by him after the attorney general had said it would be lawful for him to so act. Each of the other defendants deny conspiracy. The matter is causing considerable excitement here.

Weekly Supplies for the Needy.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 28.—Governor Peck and the relief party who took two carloads of supplies to the starving miners at Hurley, Wis., have returned to the city. They found the most urgent need for the food and clothing. Governor Peck will send supplies weekly to the distressed people until the people of the towns where the destitution exists pay their annual taxes, when the township officers will assume the burden.

PROBATE NOTICE

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, November 21st, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Mary Jane Knowlton formerly Maloney deceased:

On receiving and filing the petition of Joseph J. Knowlton of the County of Polk, representing, among other things, that Mary Jane Knowlton late of the County of Polk in the State of Minnesota, on the 17th day of November A. D. 1893, at the County of Polk died intestate, and being an inhabitant of this County at the time of her death, leaving goods, chattels, within this County and also real estate in Houston County, Minnesota, and that the said petitioner is the husband of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to Joseph James Knowlton granted.

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before said court, on Wednesday the 20th day of December A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office, in the City of Crookston in said County.

Ordered further, that notice thereof be given to the heirs of said deceased and to all persons interested, by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, Minn., in said County.

Dated at Crookston the 21st day of November A. D. 1893.

By the Court,
C. M. BENSON,
[32-34] Judge of Probate.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court. Special term, November 21st, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Andrew E. Turnbom deceased.

Letters of administration on the estate of said deceased being this day granted unto Knute Oppheim, of said County.

It is ordered, that all claims and demands of all persons against said estate be presented to this Court for examination and allowance, at the Probate office in the City of Crookton, on the third Monday in May A. D. 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

It is further ordered, that six months from the date hereof be allowed to creditors to present their claims against said estate, at the expiration of which time all claims not presented to said Court, or not proven to its satisfaction, shall be forever barred, unless, for cause shown, further time be allowed.

Ordered further, That notice of the time and place of the hearing and examination of said claims and demands shall be given by publishing this order once in each week, for three successive weeks prior to the day appointed for such examination in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said County.

Dated at Crookston the 21st day of November, A. D. 1893.

By the Court,
[32-34] C. M. BENSON, Judge of Probate.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court. Special term, November 13th, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Paul Lee deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of A. L. Hunter, administrator of said estate setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead, of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof, the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to him granted to sell the whole of said real estate of which said deceased died seized. And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses to sell the whole of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered, That all persons interested in said estate, appear before this Court, on Monday the 18th day of December, 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate office in the City of Crookston, in said County then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said administrator to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies and expenses.

And it is further ordered, That this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said County.

Dated at Crookston, the 13th day of November A. D. 1893.

By the Court,
[31-33] C. M. BENSON, Judge of Probate.

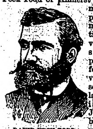
AN ECLIPSE EXPERT.

Professor Todd Preparing For the Next Total Obscuration of the Sun.



DAVID PECK TODD.

There is to be a total eclipse of the sun on Aug. 9, 1896, and Professor David Peck Todd of Amherst college, the famous eclipse expert, is already making preparations to take advantage of it for scientific purposes. The professor intends to view it from Yesso, one of the largest northern islands of the Japanese empire, but whether he will locate on the northeast or the southwest coast of the island depends on the general weather conditions. To ascertain these, some observations were begun at two stations on those coasts last July and continued through August, and during the same months of 1894 and 1895 the same plan will be followed, thus enabling the professor to decide which of the two points offers the best facilities for observations.

The trip of 1896 will be Professor Todd's second visit to Japan for the purpose of making observations of an eclipse and his fifth expedition for astronomical research. He went to Japan in 1887 to see the eclipse of the sun and to Africa in 1889 for the same purpose. He had charge of the expedition which the government sent to Texas to observe the eclipse of 1878 and directed the observations of the transit of Venus at the Lick observatory in 1882.

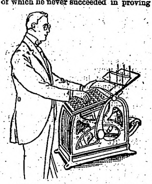
The professor expects to take an unusually great number of instruments with him to Japan, among them about 40 telescopes, with object glasses varying in size from 1 to 10 inches. He has also an automatic photographing apparatus, by which he hopes to secure between 500 and 600 photographs of the sun's corona at different stages of the eclipse. This apparatus makes it possible to employ 16 spectroscopes at once, which will record the composition of the light of the corona in as many different regions. It is the professor's own invention and was tried successfully in the African expedition of 1889.

All of the instruments for the next expedition will be of the finest possible make. The plans for them are now being prepared, and it is none too early, for they have to be manufactured and carefully tested before being transported to their destination, and it will involve no little labor to set them up and test them over again after they are got there. There will be meteorologists, naturalists and other scientific men in the observation party, so that all the scientific research of the expedition will not be confined to the astronomical members.

MECHANICAL COMPUTATION.

An American Machine For the Addition of Pounds, Shillings and Pence.

As long ago as the year 1822 Charles Babbage, an eminent English mathematician, spent about £17,000 of government money trying to perfect a calculating machine which he had invented, but of which he never succeeded in proving the practical utility. There had been computing machines before his time, of which the ancient abacus, which still survives among the Chinese, was the most primitive. There have been adding, subtracting, multiplying and dividing machines invented since, and various others combining the principles of two or more of these. Then there have been machines for calculating the tides, eclipses and other abstruse almanacical data involving much laborious computation, and even a logical machine, which, being fed with premises, will grind out syllogisms.



THE MECHANICAL ARITHMETICIAN.

But these were generally machines of such a complex character or of such meager limitations as to be practically worthless to the commercial world, which wanted something that would add up long ledger columns correctly and set the totals down, thereby saving time, patience and mental strain. Especially did the English commercial world cry out for such a machine, for the labor of computing columns of pounds, shillings and pence, as any schoolboy knows, is thrice that of calculating columns based on the decimal system.

Well, the Englishmen got their machine. A smart Yankee sent it over to them. It looks something like a typewriter and is worked by keys on the same principle, but its internal mechanism is more complex. By pressing down the keys any amount from £1,000,000 down to a penny can be printed on the paper set in the back of the machine, and the length of the columns is only curtailed by the length of the paper. Pounds, shillings and pence fall into their proper places as the keys are touched, and at the end the operator pulls a lever, and the sum is done and the correct totals recorded beneath the columns, the surplus pence all properly reduced to shillings and the shillings to pounds—a great triumph for American ingenuity.

South American ants have been known to construct a tunnel three miles in length, a labor for them proportionate to that which would be required for men to tunnel under the Atlantic from New York to London.

A HOG SELLER'S PLUCKY BLUFF AND ITS SINGULAR SEQUEL.

An Adventure With Highwaymen Who Unloaded a Miner of His Gold and Silver and Where Everybody to the Triangular Transaction Was Satisfied.

We had finished our game of whist on the train when one of the players, a red-headed man, said: "Your speaking of narrow escapes reminds me of one I had years ago in the Sierras. Buckeye House," he continued, "is a public tavern amid the mountains of southern Plumas county and is a lonely spot, being surrounded by dense forests of spruce and pine. On the night of June 4, 187—, I stopped there and was told by the proprietor that a highway robbery had been committed in the vicinity during the preceding day. This made me exceedingly uneasy, for I was carrying $12,500 in greenbacks into the mountains to invest in a quartz mine. The money was wrapped up in my horse blankets and stowed away under the seat of the buggy, while I had about $100 in gold and silver in my pockets.

"Shortly after leaving Buckeye the road ascends a deep declivity and then crosses a narrow, rocky, brush covered plateau. Three miles farther on I passed Palmetto ranch, an abandoned stopping place, where I again entered the dense forest that grew close to the highway. I examined my revolver carefully, placed fresh caps on it and laid it on the seat beside me ready for instant use. Nothing occurred until I reached Frenchman's hill, when as I was climbing one of the steepest parts I was suddenly stopped—so suddenly, in fact, that I had no chance to defend myself. A man sprang into the road and caught my horses by the bridles, while a second robber appeared from behind a tree, holding in his hands a shotgun at full cock. The man with the gun was a tall fellow with a squint eye and a red mustache, while the other man was short and stout.

"'Throw up your hands!' cried the squint eyed man in a harsh voice. I glanced at the muzzle of the gun and then at the revolver on my seat. 'Up with your hands, or I'll give it to you!' and the look on the robber's face indicated that he meant what he said, so I reluctantly gave up all my ideas of defense and slowly and mechanically raised my hands above my head, at the same time cursing my ill luck, for robbery at that time meant ruin to me. 'Git out and keep your hands up,' cried the tall man, 'till Jim takes yer money and yer popgun.' I got out and walked to the head of the horses as commanded and the short robber deftly examined my pockets and took what gold and silver I had, saying as he rattled the coins, 'It pays to drive hogs.'

"'Hogs!' I exclaimed. 'What do you mean by hogs?'

"'Oh, that's all right. He told us you were coming, and we laid in the brush for you,' was the response.

"I glanced up at that second and saw a murderous look on the squint eyed man's face, while his finger was on the trigger of the gun. As I was standing close to the small robber, the weapon, of course, covered us both. I gave an involuntary start, which caused the short man to look up. His face blanched white as he exclaimed, 'Take care there or you will shoot us both,' at the same time stepping back so as to bring my horse between himself and his companion's gun.

"I involuntarily followed his example, when the short man said in a low tone, 'I believe that rascal meant to kill us both. Now,' he continued in a loud voice, at the same time taking my pistol from the seat, 'you pile right in and be off.'

"I had supposed, of course, that they would search my buggy, and now that I was about to escape with my precious greenbacks my heart beat furiously and the blood rushed to my face as though I had just undergone great exertion. I hastily obeyed the injunctions of the robbers to 'drive on and keep a-going,' and as soon as I was out of gunshot I whipped up and drove at full speed until I overtook a little old man, shabbily dressed, driving a lot of fat hogs with the aid of a small dog.

"The old man looked at me with some astonishment as I drove rapidly up and cried, 'Say, did some fellers stop yer back thar?'

"'Yes,' was my reply. 'Did they rob you?'

"The old man laughed and slapped his leg and then laughed again ere he replied. 'Kinder curious how it turned out,' he said, 'but hanged if I knew any one was a-comin in a two hoss buggy.'

"'What do you mean?' I asked, for I saw nothing funny in the whole matter.

"'Why, you see, them fellows stepped out in the road, right in front of my hogs, and cried for me to stop. This scared the hogs, and they broke out in the brush. I pretended not to understand what they meant, and sending Boze out on one side I took the other, at the same time a-cussing them chaps right lively for scaring my hogs. When I got 'em all back again, I turned around and said, "Now, what do you want?"

"'Money,' cried the tall fellow. 'All you've got.'

"'Money?' and I roared so you could have heard me half way back to Buckeye. 'You don't reckon that a chap as has got to go afoot and drive hogs for a living has any money? If you want that, just stop the boss, who is coming along in a two hoss buggy, and you will get some.'

"'Get right on then,' said the tall chap, 'and we'll lay for the boss.'

"'And they got you?' continued the hog drover. 'I hope you did not lose much.'

"'A hundred dollars,' said I, 'but I got off lucky at that.'

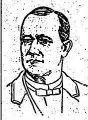
"'So did I,' said the old drover, with a grin, 'for I sold a part of my hogs on the road and had the money with me. It was a case of sheer bluff on my part.'

"'And of luck upon mine,' I answered. 'It was a narrow escape for both of us.'"—San Francisco Call.

HE WAS A "ROUNDHEAD."

Commander William A. Clarke's Record In War and Peace.

Colonel William A. Clarke, the new national commander of the Union Veteran legion, participated in 21 battles during the war with the famous Pennsylvania "Roundheads," an independent volunteer company that went to the front in 1861 and served six months before it was attached to the One Hundredth Pennsylvania as Company B. There never was a promotion in the company until July 30, 1864, when two of the commissioned officers were killed and one disabled in the mine explosion before Petersburg, Va.



COMMANDER CLARKE.

Colonel Clarke enlisted as a private and remained a private throughout his term of service. His title of colonel is honorary and comes of his having been elected commander of Encampment No. 45 of the Veteran legion, which has its headquarters at Butler, Pa. He was only 18 years of age when he enlisted and served over three years, taking part in all the battles of the Ninth Army corps from James island, South Carolina, to the blowing up of Petersburg. He was wounded in the right wrist at the second battle of Bull Run and sent to the field hospital ill of fever and ague after Petersburg, where he was discharged.

Since the war Colonel Clarke's home has been in the Pennsylvania oil fields, where he has accumulated a considerable fortune. He has an elaborate mansion at New Wilmington and is a leading man in the gas and oil business, to which he has devoted himself since the first discovery of the wells. He bears a striking resemblance to Governor McKinley of Ohio, to whom he is not related, though an uncle of the governor married a sister of the commander's mother.

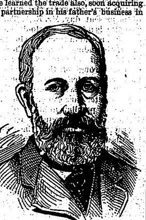
The organization of the Union Veteran legion dates from 1884, though the national organization was not perfected till 1886. Members must have been volunteers in the army, navy or marine corps who enlisted prior to July 1, 1863, for three years and must have served at least two years continuously unless discharged by reason of wounds received in the line of duty. No drafted person, substitute or any one who has borne arms against the United States is eligible to membership.

A PATRON OF ART.

Frederick Layton's Contribution to the Public Institutions of Milwaukee.

The Layton Art gallery in Milwaukee is a handsome structure and contains many rare, costly and beautiful works of art. It was given to the city, completely built, equipped and endowed, by Frederick Layton at a cost of $265,000, estimated to be half the amount of his fortune at the time of the donation. But his generosity did not stop there. He has continued to present pictures to the gallery ever since, and never makes a trip abroad, though he goes frequently, without bringing back one or more paintings for the adornment of its walls. He is a prominent figure at all the great art sales both in America and Europe, and his taste and judgment are considered excellent by artists and connoisseurs. The result is that the Cream City has an art gallery of which she is justifiably proud.

Mr. Layton was born in England, but came to America with his parents in his youth. His father was a butcher, and he learned the trade also, soon acquiring a partnership in his father's business in Milwaukee. From this beginning he naturally branched out into the packing business, organizing, with the late John Plankinton, the firm of Layton & Plankinton, which continued until 1860, laying the foundations of the fortunes of both the partners.



FREDERICK LAYTON.

Personally Mr. Layton is one of the most simple, genial and companionable of men. He lives in an unpretentious cottage, which, though homelike and pretty enough, with its little garden of flowers and shrubbery, would hardly satisfy the ambition of most clerks on a salary of $2,000 a year. As a friend of his said: "Mr. Layton lives in a modest house himself and builds palaces for the use of his fellow citizens, while other wealthy men build palaces for themselves and give nothing to the community."

Abolishing Child Marriages.

The Maharajah of Mysore has decided, if possible, to put an end to marriages between children, or rather infants, in his kingdom. He issued an order recently forbidding girls under 8 years and boys under 14 to marry. In the future no man aged 50 or more may wed a girl under 14. The edict has aroused much opposition in Mysore, but the ruler is said to be an energetic man and capable of executing regulations which he is pleased to promulgate.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Gentlemen: I take pleasure in informing you of the very beneficial results which have followed the use of DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE in the case of myself and wife. For a year I was subject to a distressing pain at the base of the brain and upper portion of the spinal cord. I lost flesh and was greatly troubled with sleeplessness. CURED Your Nervine was highly recommended to me. My case had been so obstinate that I had no confidence in the efficacy of any medicine. Yet as a last resort I consented to give it a trial. Much to my surprise, I experienced marked benefit; my sleeplessness disappeared; my headache was removed; my spirits and general health greatly improved. THOUSANDS I SOON GAINED TWENTY POUNDS. ALL THIS OCCURRED AFTER LEARNED AND WELL KNOWN PHYSICIANS HAD FAILED. My wife is taking the Nervine with the best of results. LOUIS D. VANDERVERE.

WOMANKIND.
FOR WOMEN AND HOME.

This well-known journal, a union of four leading women's papers, has won its fame because it deals with what really interests the women of America. Fashions from the standpoint of good taste and economy. Fiction of a pure and helpful kind. Music and Art suitable for non-professional tastes. Household hints written by practical women. Suggestions and aids for self-supporting women. It is a paper for women, by women, and its writers are among the most noted authors. Every line is original, every engraving a gem.

It is a paper of to-day without espousing the great questions of religion, politics and temperance, it gives all the news regarding them. It is universally quoted by the press because its views and articles are bright and unique. Send to Springfield, Ohio, for a sample copy. Formerly $1.00, it is now but 50 cents a year. Col. Cobham Post has fixed up elegant quarters in the Montgomery block. The overhead part will make an elegant hall for dancing purposes. The Post expects to hold its first meeting in December in the hall.

H. F. Brown has a fancy for a good horse and gratifies that taste by purchasing Chris Greenhalgh's thoroughbred trotter, Black Bess. Brown has now a fine driving animal that will take the dust from no ordinary roadster.

Judge Ives and Stenographer Strawbridge returned from Warren on Friday night, after a five days term of court for Marshall county. Sixty-four cases were on the calendar, of which thirty-five were tax cases, requiring little time to adjust.

Miss E. Veronneau wishes to announce to her lady friends that she is making sacrifice sales to reduce stock. She has decided to sell her entire stock of fall and winter millinery and has therefore marked the goods at prices that are bound to sell. Call and see her stock before you purchase. It will pay you.

Mrs. Rose opened the new restaurant on Monday. She has nicely fitted up the Riedesel building and has everything as neat as wax, which makes it a pleasure to take a meal there. The building is new and no pains have been spared that will add to the comfort of her patrons. A good many people enjoyed the first dinner Monday noon.

Frank M. Brown: I was talking with a man from Montana the other day who told me he had always been a democrat, but, said he, the attitude of the democratic administration on the tariff knocks me out completely. Free wool would ruin us and if the administration persists in the course it has marked out there wont be a democrat in Montana by next election—there's mighty few of them now.

Miss Sarah Pollard and Miss Hellen Stoddard, of Mentor, started for the State of Washington on Friday evening, where they go to bring home Miss Stoddard's sister Myrtle, who was sometime since sent there in hopes the climate would be beneficial. Last reports from her indicate that she is very low with chances all against her recovery.

Owing to the extreme low stage of water in the river the flour-mill was obliged to shut down, which limited the bran supply to that extent that there was none on hand to begin the week with. However it was expected that the mill would be ready to grind by Wednesday, as it was thought the engine would be in shape to run by steam by that time.

O. C. Bergland received a fine Cotswold ram on Saturday to add to his already fine flock, and the animal attracted a great deal of attention when Bergland drove through the streets. It is a prize winner at the World's Fair and one of the finest sheep we ever saw in Polk County, as big as one of Dr. Thomas' Shetland ponies and wool on him six or eight inches long. Bergland believes in having the best of everything as his farm animals all attest. He is the kind of a farmer who will solve the problem of making the farm profitable in this country.

Miss Hannah Johnson died at the hospital on Saturday. She had been but about one year in America.

The greatest comedy success of the season "By Wits Out-witted" will appear at the Grand opera house, Friday December 8th.

Miss Mabel Arnold, who has been more or less in ill health for the past four years, left last Saturday for New Westminister, British Columbia, in the hope of regaining her health in a warmer climate. She went over the Northern Pacific with Misses Pollard and Stoddard, who go as far as Port Angeles, Washington.

Alderman, Sylvester & Elseth made an assignment for the benefit of their creditors last week. The assets exceed the liabilities by several thousand dollars, but slow payments this fall has rendered this step necessary. It is confidently expected that the boys will pull out all right, and we earnestly hope they will.

"By Wits Out-witted" is a sparkling comedy whose plot and situations are so good that it seems impossible that the play can be new at the Grand opera house, Friday December 8th.

Wheat braced up a little as the end of the month approached, but only gained three cents during November. The time never was known before when wheat was so low in this country, and while everything points to better prices in the near future, the better prices do not come and probably will not before farmers have sold all they have on hand to sell. Many have already sold themselves short of seed and flour.

John Dillon appeared in "A Model Husband" on Tuesday evening. John has lost none of his old time vivacity and he has a company with him that ably supports him. There is not a weak spot in it. The play abounds in comical situations that keep the audience in a constant uproar of laughter from the rising of the curtain to the going down thereof.

The Union Thanksgiving service will be held in the First M. E. Church to-day promptly at ten o'clock. The Rev. H. F. Last week the JOURNAL announced the Hendershot entertainment for December 5th. It has since been changed to the 7th. Everybody should turn out.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. McArty went to Thief River Falls on Monday, where he has a fortnight's job painting. McArty and Lash seem to be getting lots of work.

Rev. Mr. Gilfillan of White Earth Indian agency will conduct services on Sunday next in Christ Episcopal Church. Morning service with communion at 11 a. m., evening service at 7:30 p. m.

Joe Morrier remarked on Monday in presence of a JOURNAL scribe that he had patronized every flour-mill in Polk county and gave it as his opinion that the Valley Roller Mills at Crookston give better satisfaction than any of them. He said: I find that the Valley Roller Mills flour makes more bread than any other flour I have used and while some other mill may give a few more pounds yet the difference is made up in the extra amount of bread made and the cost of getting to mill. I shall get my wheat ground at the Valley Roller mill hereafter."

P. H. Konzen, of Hallock, passed through the city on Monday en route for Iowa to see his father who is sick. P. H. says he can't feel too thankful that he is living in the Red River Valley this fall instead of England, for, said he: "I lost ninety tons of hay by a prairie fire and if I had had that hay in England it would have been worth $50 a ton and see what a fortune I would have lost! Here the loss will not exceed a few hundred dollars. I tell you the Red River Valley is the place to live. Our horses are doing nicely, and the democrats are getting thinner in Kittson county and upon the whole the business outlook is very much brighter than last fall when democrats were thicker than fiddlers in hal-ifax. If there are any dems left (excepting always office-holders) they are keeping mighty still."

Braley's barber stuck to it faithfully till Saturday afternoon when he had to quit and go home to indulge in a bit of recreation—typhoid fever. As Braley was also down with the fever the shop had to be left to run itself.

Attorney George received word on Tuesday morning that the case of Beauchene vs. the bondsmen of ex-sheriff John Paterson, in which he was attorney for the plaintiff, had been decided in the Supreme court in favor of the plaintiff. This was a very important and hard fought case, and we should not wonder if Ed feels a little elated over the outcome.

The Valley Roller mills commenced grinding on Monday morning as a good head of water was found—much to the surprise of everybody interested. The mill had been shut down owing to lack of water and the engine was being made ready. Should the water supply fail again the engine will be started up and there will be no lack of water hereafter.

Rev. R. H. Battey: "What do I know about Red Lake Falls?" Well, I should say it is one of the largest and sprightliest villages of the valley. Mr. Rodgers, of Banks & Co's store, said to me the other day that he used to be a good Congregationalist before he came to Red Lake Falls, but as he did not care to have a lot of little struggling denominations of christians in a small town like that, he joined heartily with the Presbyterians. To which I say, amen. I had a little spare time while in Red Lake Falls last Monday and so visited four rooms of the public schools. It was a pleasure to meet such a wide-awake Crookstonite as Prof. Thomas Casey presiding over the schools and teaching the high school. Red Lake Falls people say the Great Northern train is about as regular as the farmer's dog who was always chasing rabbits when the cows got out. We agreed with our neighbors on this point. It was just four hours after getting aboard their train for Crookston last Monday before we arrived at Crookston, too hungry to be good natured.

Si Perkins.

The management desires to call the attention of the theatre goers of this city to the fact that, "Si Perkins" or "The Girl I Left Behind Me" is entirely an original production (not a re-hash of some old play or an adaptation of some dime novel) and written by one of the best known of the very few successful authors of the present day, Mr. E. A. Tacke. The play is a four act melo-dramatic comedy, moral in tone, pure in sentiment, abounding in quaint humor, pathos and uproarious laughing comedy throughout the piece. This piece was written expressly for Mr. Sam T. Burton with a strong Yankee character part especially adapted to the peculiar abilities of Mr. Burton, an another equally effective character part of Zana the Gypsy for Miss Lillie Coleman, who is an acknowledged melo-dramatic artist of rare ability, will appear at the Grand opera house Thursday, November 30th.

Mr Moore, the postmaster at Bradshaw Va., after reading an advertisment of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, concluded to try a small bottle of it. He says: "I used it in two cases of colic and three for diarrhœa with perfect satisfaction. I have handled and used a great deal of patent medicine but never tried any that gave as good results as this." For sale by S. A. Wallace.

Mr. W. M. Terry, who has been in the drug business at Elkton, My., for the past twelve years, says: "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy gives better satisfaction than any other cough medicine I have ever sold." There is good reason for this. No other will cure a cold so quickly; no other is so certain a preventive and cure for croup; no other affords so much relief in cases of whooping cough. For sale by S. Low Rates to the Coast.

The Northern Pacific railroad has just put into effect a series of low round-trip rates to Pacific coast points. These California tickets are good until April 30th, 1894, and are good for stop over points under certain conditions.

These rates will enable those desiring so to do, to spend the winter in Southern California, or to visit the Mid-winter Fair to be held at San Francisco. This latter event will undoubtedly be second only to the World's Fair just closed, and will repay a visit, as it will exhibit the resources and capabilities of California.

St. Paul, Minneapolis & Duluth to Northern Pacific coast points and return $65.50; to San Francisco and return to Missouri river, $80.50 to Los Angeles and return to Missouri river $90.00.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, November 27th; 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Louis Huot, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Godus Huot, administrator, setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained, with the charges of administration; and the taxes, assessments and other charges which are an existing lien upon his estate, and the improvements which are necessary for the preservation of his real estate; and a description of the tracts of land of said deceased which it is proposed to mortgage; and praying that license be to him granted to mortgage the tracts of land so described.

And it appearing by said petition that the personal estate of said Louis Huot, deceased, is insufficiedt to pay his debts, with the charges of administration, and to pay any taxes, assessments or other charges which are an existing lien upon his estate, or to pay for any improvements which are necessary for the preservation of his real estate, or any part thereof.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before this court on Monday, the 8th day of January, A. D. 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in the city of Crookston, in said county, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said Godus Huot, administrator, to mortgage the said real estate of said deceased for the purpose of obtaining funds for the payment of such debts, charges, taxes, assessments and liens, and for the making of such necessary improvements.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspapre printed at published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 27th day of November, A. D. 1893.

By the Court.

Teachers' Meeting.

The Polk county teachers association will hold its initial meeting at the court house Saturday December 2nd. An interesting program has been prepared by those in charge. All teachers are invited to be present.

F. H. GAMBELL, Sec'y.

S. Engebretson was down from St. Hilaire on Tuesday, and gave the JOURNAL a visit of pleasure and profit. Speaking of the efforts to divide the county he said he thought it would fail, for, said he "I don't believe the farmers will be fools enough to vote extra taxes on themselves simply to aid a few ambitious villages and a few schemers. The times are hard enough and we have taxes enough to pay now."

Refined Comedy.

Those who have a taste for pure comedy will find much to enjoy in "By Witts Outwitted," which will be seen at the Opera house, Friday December 8th. The varieties of human nature are drawn in a masterly manner in "By Witts Outwitted." The unraveling of this charming story is exceptionally clever. The play is replete with sparkling wit, while the action of the piece abounds in funny situations.

Refreshing as well as well as commendable is the fact that although By Witts Outwitted relies largely on its honor to please the same is lofty and refined and does not force this clever company of comedians to descend to the level of buffoonery, to create a laugh.

CROOKSTON TO DULUTH.

The Duluth & Winnipeg and South Shore to be Consolidated.

The Combined System to be Controlled by the Canadian Pacific.

The Duluth & Winnipeg to be Extended into the Red River Valley.

Undoubtedly to Crookston.

The following dispatch relating to the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad, which we find in the Pioneer Press of December 2nd, is fraught with great significance to this country, if it be true, and we have no reason to doubt it. The dispatch is as follows:

Duluth, Special, Dec. 1.—Another important deal affecting railroad interests at the head of Lake Superior came to light to-night. It involves the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic and the Duluth & Winnipeg. The annual meeting of the latter road is to be held here on Dec. 14, and preparations are now being made to carry into effect on that date a practical consolidation of the Duluth & Winnipeg with the South Shore system.

The auditor of the South Shore road was here to-day, going over the books of the Duluth & Winnipeg preparatory to the amalgamation of interests. By the agreement which has been made W. H. Fisher, who has been vice-president and general manager of the Duluth & Winnipeg, retires. It is said that he has disposed of all his interests in the road to President Van Horne, of the Canadian Pacific, and his associates, who already hold a big block of Duluth & Winnipeg stock, on terms that are satisfactory to Fisher, who has been anxious for some time past to retire from connection with the road. All the other officers of the Duluth & Winnipeg will be removed, and the South Shore officers will have their duties extended to cover the combined roads, General Manager Fitch, of the South Shore, assuming the management of the consolidated system. This is part of Van Horne's scheme to consolidate all his interests here. It is likewise proposed to remove all the general offices of the South Shore road from Marquette to Duluth, this city being better situated from which to conduct the business of the combined roads.

It is understood that at the meeting here on Dec. 14th plans for the extension of the Duluth & Winnipeg westward next spring will be definitely decided upon. The plans include an extension direct to the Red river valley in the neighborhood of Crookston, and a branch from a point west of Lake Winnibigoshish running northwesterly to Winnipeg through Cass and Kittson counties to Emerson, Man., where connection will be made with the Canadian Pacific line now in operation from the international boundary to Winnipeg. This will give the Canadian Pacific a direct road from its main line at Winnipeg by the way of Duluth to Sault Ste. Marie, then connecting with the Eastern division. The Duluth & Winnipeg plans also contemplate a line from the junction of its Crookston and Winnipeg lines direct south to St. Paul, but it is not likely that any work will be done on that extension next year. It would give the Canadian Pacific system a very short line between Winnipeg and St. Paul.

The Teachers' Meeting.

The first session of the Polk County Teachers' Association, was held at the court house, Saturday, December 2d. The program carried out was excellent in quality, and also showed that the resources of the association are abundant.

Miss Ida K, Hancock in giving the press address, made a strong point of "the advantages of an organization which enabled the teachers to meet and exchange their best thoughts and experiences."

Miss Myrtle Williams gave a charming talk on "Teaching Drawing," illustrating her ideas with sketches on the blackboard.

Miss Nellie Barker gave an exhibition of primary teaching, bringing a class of little ones from the city. The recitation was full of suggestions, as to how a primary class may be conducted, and paved the way for a free for all discussion on the relative values of the phoenic and word methods,

A paper by J. F. Hetler, on "Character and Discipline" was read, and discussed with animation.

Miss Ada F. Brown spoke on "The Teachers' Contract," to the entire dissatisfaction of any one who might look upon it only as binding the district to pay him some thirty odd dollars per mouth.

Prof. John Moore spoke on "Language," and as time did not allow him to finish, and the sample was excellent. the talk should "be continued."

Mr. Benj. R. Norwood read an article on "Natural History," giving personal observations and suggestions as to when to begin and how to continue the study.

Questions were in order after every paper, and, as the answer proved to be ready, the opportunity was improved with a vim.

It was decided to hold another meeting about the 1st of March and the meeting was adjourned.

Those present were enthusiastic over the success of the gathering, and expressed their appreciation of the kindness of those who had lent a hand in preparing the program, and of the inspiration and help which the meeting had been to them. With the experience gained in arranging for the first meeting, and a better idea of the scope of the work to be done, the prospect is that the next meeting will be one that no teacher can afford to miss.

Crookston Normal College.

How many of those that were present at the opening of the Crookston Normal College the 3d of October could have imagined that before the close of the 10th week (first term) that institution should have an enrollment of 106 students. The old saying: "Well begun is half completed," has come true also in this case. Why has the Crookston Normal College made such phenomenal advancements? For this simple reason: There was no guess work as to the plan of the school. The founders had acquainted themselves with all kinds of schools, such as state high schools, church schools, private schools, and the state university. Thus having a knowledge of the general plan and management of those different schools they were able to choose the golden medium.

The fact that this school has made faster progress than any other school in the Northwest, proves that this is the kind of school the people have been waiting for so many years.

The first winter term opens Dec. 12th, and teachers and all others who are going to attend school should thoroughly examine the program of the Crookston Normal College.

There are seven courses: Preparatory, teachers, collegiate, elecutionary, musical and shorthand and typewriting. There will be a class in drawing, an opportunity of which every teacher should avail herself, There will also be a special class in elocution. No teacher can afford to miss this class. As instructor, the school has secured the services of Mr. Loftfield, whose ability as teacher needs no commendation,

Mr. Malm, who as a penman is unsurpassed in the country, will add a special pen art department, which should not be passed unnoticed by any one. There will be a class in blackboard writing every Saturday, charges very small.

Special attention should be given to the musical department. An hour in singing every day, free to any member of the school, This department is under the very able management of Mr. Mayne,

During the past term two debating sections have been doing good work, Next term several more will be organized. The literary society "Nibelung" is prospering above all expectations. It meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock, and a very enjoyable time for those that attend. Citizens could not improve their time Friday evenings to any better advantage than to attend the "Nibelung." Everybody welcome to these meetings.

The Crookston Normal College cannot be too strongly recommended to the public, and it is to be hoped that many will avail themselves of the opportunity never heretofore given in Crookston. The board, which is given for only $1.75 per week, is spoken of in very favorable terms by those who have sampled it. The stay at this school, everything included, is cheaper than board alone at hotels.

With the firm, energetic and enthusiastic proprietors, whose character is to do rather than to speak, at the head of the school, and with the hundreds of friends which they have all over the northwest, they will soon be able to build up a school which will be a pride, not only to Crookston, but also to the entire northwest.

Any information regarding rates, terms, board, etc., will be furnished on application to M. L. TUVE, Principal; or P. J. CHRISTENSEN, Assistant Principal.

DUNN'S BUDGET.

Interesting News and Gossip from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, December 5.—Congress is with us again, but it may not be so bad as the people anticipate. There is a great deal of damage that a congress can do, and there is no telling how much this Democratic body will be able to accomplish. The chances are against us, but we will have to make the best of it. I am informed that the tariff bill which has recently been reported will cause a great deal of trouble to Democrats before they are able to land it on Cleveland's desk, but there seems a disposition among them to put it through at all hazards. It is a pretty bad bill for Minnesota, and Minnesota will not really be responsible for it. She will, only furnish three votes for it in the House and none in the Senate.

I always was of the opinion that the greatest wrong of the McKinley law was the opportunity it gave all sorts of middle men to raise prices and rob thousands of people. If the Republicans of the fifty-first Congress had reduced some articles and in fact made a gradual reduction of a number of schedules, without increasing anything, there would have been nothing of the fright which the people experienced in 1890, and which after all was more fright than anything else, as there was little reason for the great advance made in prices by the dealers all over the country. Time will tell whether the Democratic rearrangement of the tariff will be of any advantage, I do not believe to the people. Too many people handle the goods before they reach the farmers of the northwest, and they all want to make some profit out of the tariff.

Senator Washburn will be busy this winter securing adequate appropriations for the rivers and harbors of Minnesota. The Mississippi will have to be looked atter and the harbors of Lake Superior need money, to carry on the improvements underway. Being on the Senate committee on commerce he will be able to do a great deal, as he has done in the past.

It will be curious to see what Maj. Baldwin will do with the tariff bill which hits so hard at the interests of Duluth and adjacent country. Free iron ore is in the bill, and Baldwin will vote for the bill. And the sixth district will send a Republican here next time.

I am inclined to think that Minnesotains will be interested in the speech which Senator Davis will make on Hawaii. He is a member of the committee on foreign relations which deals with the subject and I am inclined to think he will rip Paramount Blount up the back.

My friend McCleary will make a speech on the tariff bill. I hope he will get a better hearing than Tawney did in the election bill debate. The first district man was held off until near six o'clock when the House was about to adjourn and only about a handful of members heard him. I want Mac to show us some good Minnesota oratory in the House.

I am somewhat interested in Boen. I do not believe he will be left very much in the long run. The way he inquired about things and tries to find out if there are any jobs or woodchucks indicates that he thinks congress a big boodle affair and he is glad he is in it, to prevent these jobs, of course. Boen is another man who will not come back.

ROBBERS REIGNED.

THREE MASKED MEN DO BOLD WORK AT BELLE PLAINE, IA.

Used the Depot For a Lockup—Every Citizen Putting In an Appearance Robbed and Imprisoned—They Secured About $500 From Various Persons.

BELLE PLAINE, Ia., Dec. 4.—A bold robbery was committed last night by three men at Luzerne, three miles from here. They went into the Chicago and Northwestern depot, and, presenting revolvers at the head of Agent Thompson, compelled him to give up what money he had. They then locked him in the freight house, telling him that he would be killed if he made a noise. When the night operator appeared he met with the same fate. Whenever a citizen or would-be passenger presented himself he was promptly robbed and locked up, until there were over a dozen men imprisoned. When train No. 8, eastbound, stopped at this place the operator informed Conductor Ward that something was wrong at Luzerne, as he could not get the station by telegraph. Ward and a companion at once started out to ascertain

The Cause of the Trouble.

As he approached the depot three men left it and disappeared in the darkness. Ward, after hunting through the building for some time, found and liberated the imprisoned men. His first thought on hearing their story was that it was an attempt to rob his train, and with a companion he at once hurried back to Belle Plaine. Rushing into the smoker he called: "Everybody with a gun turn out. Robbers are going to attack the train." Fifteen men responded at once, and others from the other portion of the train joined them. No robbers appeared, however, and after waiting for some time the train proceeded on its way. The robbers secured about $500 at the station from the various men who were unlucky enough to stroll into the depot.

FATAL SNOWSLIDE.

Five Persons Killed by an Avalanche In a Montana Town.

BUTTE, Mon., Dec. 4.—The Hecla, a small mining camp fifty miles southwest of this city, was the scene of two snowslides within the past two days which resulted in the instant death of five persons, others being fatally hurt, and many more or less injured. The first slide came down the mountain side Wednesday night, demolishing the cabins of William Sparks and Robert Rush, miners, and a Chinese cook. Saturday night another immense slide, a short distance from the first avalanche, fell, burying and crushing three houses. One of these was occupied by Nicholas Berghman, his wife and three children, all of whom were asleep. Berghman and two children, aged 10 and 14, were killed. Mrs. Berghman and babe were rescued alive, but cannot recover.

TWO SCORE DEAD.

Horrible Accident to a Passenger Train On an Italian Railroad.

MILAN, Nov. 30.—An express train bound from this city to Venice, came into collision at 3 a. m. with a heavy freight train, which was stationary on the rails at the limits of the first station between Milan and Treviglio. It is reported that 43 people met death in the wreck and that 283 others were severely injured. Nearly every passenger on the train was more or less injured. It is stated that a majority of the killed and injured were immigrants who were going to America by way of Venice.

FROZEN TO DEATH.

Sad Fate of a Minnesota Woman and Daughter.

PINE CITY, Minn., Dec. 4.—Mrs. Russell and oldest daughter, 13 years old, were found frozen to death in the woods three miles from their home. They followed a horse till lost, and failing to catch him could not reach home and so perished. They are the widow and oldest child of the Settler Russell, who was killed at the same place by a bull last September. Several small children who were found at home by the party who found the woman and daughter were almost frozen.

Cronin Jury Matter.

CHICAGO, Nov. 30.—Jurors Gates and Wilson, who were charged with securing places on the Coughlin jury in an irregular manner, were formally dismissed by Presiding Judge Tuthill.

Clerk Jerry Flynn of the criminal court, who has been suspected of complicity in the irregular proceedings by which Gates and Wilson were put on the jury, has been suspended, pending an investigation. It is rumored that the prosecution has reconsidered its announced intention, and will take proceedings against Juror Wilson.

Weekly Supplies for the Needy.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 28.—Governor Peck and the relief party who took two carloads of supplies to the starving miners at Hurley, Wis., have returned to the city. They found the most urgent need for the food and clothing. Governor Peck will send supplies weekly to the distressed people until the people of the towns where the destitution exists pay their annual taxes, when the township officers will assume the burden.

Too Much Liquor.

EMPORIA, Kan., Dec. 1.—Harry Dell, who has just arrived here from Admire, north of here, reports that Monday a party of 12 young men of that vicinity bought two large kegs of beer and some whisky and started out on a drunken spree. Three men, he says, died from the effects.

Almost a Centenarian.

BELOIT, Wis., Dec. 4.—Mrs. Horace Cole of Roscoe township, Illinois, died Saturday, at the age of 99 years.

DISTRESS ON THE RANGE.

Thousands of People Starving in Michigan.

LANSING, Mich., Dec. 4.—The committee headed by ex-Congressman W. C. Maybury, sent to the upper peninsula mining regions to investigate the condition of the needy, wire a lengthy report to Gov. Rich, and assert that the reports have not been overdrawn. The recitals of distress are dreadful, says the report: "Five thousand persons at Ironwood, 2,000 at Bessemer and 500 at Wakefield must be assisted through the entire winter. In addition to an enforced idleness of several months by closing down the mines there has been a fearful epidemic of typhoid fever along the Gogebic range; and the bread winners are disabled as well as destitute. An appeal is made for clothing and shoes for women and children. There is two feet of snow on the ground at Ironwood, with the thermometer 10 degrees below zero, and the women and children have no covering for their feet.

General Alger's Plea.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Dec. 4.—General Russell A. Alger of Detroit has been in Cleveland several days in consultation, it is said, with some of the heaviest stockholders in the Michigan iron mines. He is trying to induce them to resume operations, so that the starving miners may find employment. General Alger says that if the men can be given work only part of the time the State of Michigan will appropriate money to help them through the winter. He has met with little encouragement here, however, the mine owners seeing no immediate prospect of a market for their ore.

Delegates to the Prison Congress.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 4.—Governor Nelson has appointed delegates to represent this state at a congress of the National Prison association to be held in St. Paul, June 16, 1894. The delegates are: John S. Pillsbury, Minneapolis; William R. Merriam, St. Paul; William R. Marshall, St. Paul; John De Laittre, Minneapolis; D. C. Bell, Minneapolis; H. R. Wells, Preston; W. M. Campbell and John W. Willis, St. Paul; H. H. Young, Minneapolis; John D. Ludden, St. Paul; H. M. Richardson, Rochester; Paul Shervey, Duluth; George H. Monroe, Morris.

No More Football.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 4.—The police authorities have declared against football playing under the present rules, and state that in the future no such degrading and brutal exhibitions as had been witnessed on the football grounds during the past season would be permitted in this city. They state further that they have information that the authorities in other cities will take similar action.

Investigating the Curtis Trial.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 4.—The grand jury has summoned Frank McManus and ex-Senator Dunn to testify in relation to the recent trial of M. B. Curtis, the actor, who was acquitted of the murder of Policeman Grant. It is reported that McManus and Dunn will give the grand jury information that will warrant the indictment of Curtis for jury bribing. Curtis is now in the East.

Big Price for a Dog.

APPLETON, Minn., Dec. 4.—George Gray, the dog trainer, has sold his wonderful "Strideway" for $1,000 to E. O. Damon, proprietor of the Meadow City kennels, at Northampton, Mass. He will, however, remain in the hands of his old owner during the winter, and compete for further honors afield.

Arthur and Clark Confer.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 4.—N. P. Arthur, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, arrived at the Bingham house during the evening from Cleveland. He and Chairman Clark had a long interview in which the latter outlined the work in hand, and the plans for the future conduct of the Lehigh Valley strike.

Passenger Agents Confer.

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—General Passenger Agents Lomax, of the Union Pacific, and Whitney, of the Great Northern, were in consultation during the day over the question of transcontinental rates. Nothing definite was arranged, and both left for St. Paul, where the conference will be continued.

Six States to Rebel.

EL PASO, Tex., Dec. 4.—Private letters from American citizens in two Mexican states say a very uneasy feeling exists in the public mind, and revolutionists' information is that in at least six states there will be a general uprising within a few weeks.

Cholera in High Places.

ROME, Dec. 4.—The wife of one of the official messengers of the royal palace has been attacked with cholera symptoms, and she and her family have been sent to the hospital.

Dissolved a Life Society.

CHICAGO, Nov. 29.—Upon the application of Attorney General Maloney, Judge Horton has entered a decree dissolving the Total Abstinence Life association of America, against which an information had been filed some time ago.

Against Prize Fighting.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Nov. 30.—A bill prohibiting prize fighting in South Carolina has passed the general assembly. The penalty is three years imprisonment and $1,000 fine for principals and seconds.

Public Debt Increase.

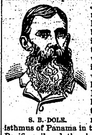
WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—The public debt statement issued Friday shows the net increase of the public debt, less cash in the treasury, during the month of November, to have been $6,718,498.

All Quiet at Honolulu.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 1.—The American brig John D. Spreckles arrived during the morning, 11 days from Kahului, Hawaiian Islands. Up to the time of her departure there had been no new developments in the Hawaiian situation.

A PROVISIONAL PRESIDENT.

S. B. Dole Was Born In Honolulu and Educated In America.



S. B. DOLE.

Sanford Ballard Dole, who was declared temporary president of the provisional government of Hawaii organized at the inception of the revolution in January last, is a native of the islands and was born in Honolulu in 1844. His father and mother were both American missionaries, who had made a long voyage from Maine to the islands in 1840. As there was no route across the isthmus of Panama in those days and no Pacific railroad, they had to go around the Horn, and a very tempestuous trip they had of it. When the son was old enough to attend school, he was sent to Pubahan college, but the educational facilities of that institution did not satisfy his aspirations. He wanted something broader and better and resolved upon coming to the United States to get it.

His father was in financial circumstances of too modest an order to afford him any assistance in his educational project, and he had to earn the money necessary to carry it out. In this he was successful, and the result was that he was enabled by his own exertions to take a year's course at Williams college in Massachusetts, which he found exceedingly profitable.

While at school in Honolulu young Dole had decided upon adopting the legal profession, and in furtherance of this decision upon graduating from Williams he entered the office of William Brigham in Boston to study law. After spending a year there he was admitted to the Massachusetts bar. He did not practice in Boston, but returned to Honolulu, where he was admitted at once to the Hawaiian bar, and settled down to the practice of his profession.

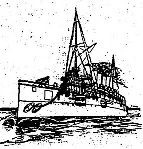
Mr. Dole achieved his first political distinction in 1884, when he was elected a member of the Hawaiian parliament, to which body he was again returned five years later. While in the legislature he was a member of the executive council, and his influence was potent in restraining much rash action advocated by other members. Nevertheless he was prominent in the reform movement which culminated in the abortive revolution of 1887, and in that same year was elevated to the bench of the supreme court of the kingdom. Mr. Dole was married in 1873 to Miss Anna P. Cate of Massachusetts.

COLUMBIA RULES THE WAVE.

A Description of the Latest and Swiftest of Cruisers.

The latest and the fastest of the vessels of our new navy is the triple screw cruiser Columbia, which has developed a speed which should enable her, if the occasion arises, to overtake the fastest of the famous ocean greyhounds. Ex-Secretary of the Navy Tracy says that a fleet of six such cruisers would be sufficient to exterminate the commerce of any country in the world if it were no better protected than commercial vessels are under existing conditions. There are only two other naval vessels like the Columbia in the matter of triple screws—the Kaiserin Augusta of the German navy and the Dupuy de Lorme of the French—and both of those are smaller than our cruiser.

The Columbia, to give her measurements in land lubber fashion, is 412 feet long and 58 feet wide. Her normal draft is a little over 22 feet, which means that she sinks in the water to that extent when carrying an ordinary load. But when her immense coal bunkers, which have a capacity of 2,000 tons, are full she will sink three feet deeper. Her displacement is 7,350 tons, and the small boy with a pencil can reduce that to pounds for himself and get a better notion of her actual weight.



UNITED STATES CRUISER COLUMBIA.

The triple screws of the Columbia are arranged one on each quarter and one on the center of the stern, the center screw being of smaller dimensions than the other two, though some designers of high standing think it should be larger. The engines are of the triple expansion vertical inverted cylinder type. Each of them is placed in a separate water tight compartment and is complete in every respect. There are three sets, and the vessel can be propelled at a slow speed by the center screw alone, by the two other screws at a medium speed, or by the three together when the highest rate of speed is required. On her preliminary trial by her builders for speed she made the previously unheard of time of nearly 25 knots—24.95 knots, to be exact—and on the official trial a few days later, under the supervision of the government board, made the record of 22.81 knots.

CHAPTER XII.

THE FIGHT FOR LIFE.

Taras gave me his hand when we met the next morning down stairs. I took it in silence, being unprepared for this form of greeting, which I had never before exchanged with any one, and which now kindled an emotion in my breast that threw all my ideas into confusion. But before I let his warm palm leave my clinging fingers the earnest purpose I had come to in the night reasserted itself, and I said:

"Here, I'm a-goin to begin today in real earnest."

"That's right," said he, smiling, but with serious feeling in his deep eyes.

"I ain't a-goin to talk dilecks to any living soul again 'ceptin you. I'm a-goin to talk French like Mere Lucas does. Presen'ly I'll go in the kitchen and p'int out things, and I'll jist listen to her till I can make out what she's drivin at. And I'm a-goin to take stock of everything you do, too, and say things softer like and more pleasant, same as what you do. And I'll set to and learn readin and writin if you only show me how—jist for a start. But I ain't a-goin to be no 'normous trouble. I won't be a bit more trouble 'an I can help. Whatever you tell me to do, I'll take and do it, whether I likes it or not—see?"

"Yes."

"Here"—after swallowing my compunction—"I heered all what you said last night."

"So I perceive."

"When you're a-goin out, and don't want to take me along of you, do you mind tellin me where you are goin and 'bout what time you'll be home?"

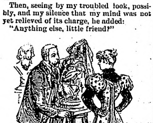
"I am not sure that I should quite like that."

"Oh, don't fancy I'm a-goin to foller you about and be a nuisance. No fear! I shouldn't like that myself. But if you didn't turn up, say two or three hours arter the time, I might jist take a skivvey round and see if it was all right, doncher know? It shouldn't make no difference to you, 'cause I'd take care you didn't know it, but it'd make a lot of difference to me, 'cause I shouldn't have to do it underhanded like, and I should feel a lump easier."

"In that case, I will tell you when I think of it."

Then, seeing by my troubled look, possibly, and my silence that my mind was not yet relieved of its charge, he added:

"Anything else, little friend?"



"There it is," said Taras.

"Yes, I got sunthin else to say, but it kinder sticks half way. Here, don't you bother about makin 'rangements with that feller to look arter me in case anything—you know, don't you? I can't say it. It's too dreffle to talk about. But I don't want to be held by any one. You wouldn't like that. If you go away, I shall just come arter you, and it don't matter where nor how—d'ye hear?"

There was pain in his face as he nodded assent, but to disguise the feeling he asked lightly:

"Is there nothing else?"

"Nothin 'ticler," I replied with a sigh of relief. "I've got up the wust of it. But you might tell us what this thing is you're a-goin to heave at somebody's feet, else. I know I'll have to go pokin and pryin about to find out."

"Well, as Mere Lucas has only just taken in the milk, we can go into the workshop and satisfy your curiosity without keeping breakfast waiting. This is a pretty frock. I have not seen it before, I think."

"Course you ain't," said I, stopping and turning around slowly, with huge delight, to be admired. "Tea gowns is for arternoons, walkin dresses is for outdoors, but this here is for mornin's."

"I ought to have known that—it's so crisp and bright and fresh," said he.

We passed through the back yard and up a few steps into a long glazed workshop, which had been rented from the cabinet maker next door. I looked around, expecting to see some terrible instrument. Innumerable plaster casts hung from the rafters. The end wall was covered with rough sketches in charcoal. A potter's wheel stood near the window, with a trough of clay beside it. Some odd looking tools lay on a bench, but they only looked like misshapen spoons. In the middle of the workshop, however, there was something on a stout stand, carefully enveloped in a damp cloth, and a little farther on stood another stool bearing a smaller mass similarly covered. Taras went up to the larger of the two things and began carefully to remove the cloth, while I stood by waiting in eager curiosity to know what it was that excited the animosity of the police to such an extent.

"There it is," said Taras, lifting the last fold of the cloth and revealing a group of three figures, roughly modeled in clay.

I walked round the stand, touched the soft clay, and then, looking at Taras in perplexity, said:

"Why, it's only images."

"That is all."

"Well, what harm will it do any one if you throw that at his feet? It wouldn't kill him if you threw it at his head."

"Ah, but this is only a sketch of a much larger one I shall make," said he, with a twinkle of merriment in his eye. "The figures will be life size, and they will be burned hard in a kiln, which, you see, would make a difference if it came to throwing it at anybody's head, but that was only a manner of speaking. Come, I will make it clear to you if I can. This female figure represents my country in the last stage of despair and humiliation. The man tearing the dress from her shoulders is a brutal executioner with an iron thonged whip in his hand. The third figure is the czar, who has given the order for this helpless woman to be flogged and is standing by to see his order carried out, callous to his victim's suffering."

"What has the woman done?"

"She has dared to tell the czar that she is not his slave."

"What's this down alongside the woman?" I asked.

"The czar's dog—licking her hand."

"To show he's got more feelin than the man has?"

"That's it. You begin to see what I mean."

"It's a-comin to me," I said after a few moments of profound thinking. "I'm gettin at it by a little at a time. That woman, your country, 's got a look like mine was, all mis'able and wretched like, and you're a-goin to give her new life like you're givin me and alter her face so as people shall hardly know her again."

"Would to heaven I might!" he exclaimed fervently. "One life is too short for such a work—one hand too feeble. I can but hope to awaken the sympathy of humanity and start the cry of indignation which shall shame the czar to mercy."

The group had a new interest for me. The longer I looked at it the more it fascinated me. The central figure ceased to be an image. It was a living woman suffering as I had suffered.

"I guess she feels like I felt," said I. "Like as if nothin could make her feel wus, and it didn't matter what happened."

Taras assented.

"Better she hadn't got no soul nor nothin. Better she was dead if she hain't got a friend to help her up and give her new life."

"That's it. But we must find friends to help her, warm the hearts of other nations toward her and kindle a spirit of hope and courage into that poor fainting heart, and we will if we can keep out of the hands of the police."

If he could keep out of the hands of the police! My existence also depended upon that. Recognizing so much, the instinct of self preservation inspired me with a fierce desire and determination to find out and fight this secret emissary of the czar. The enemy once discovered, I would meet cunning with cunning, dare anything, hesitate at nothing to save the man who made the world dear to me. It would be a fight for life, and one of us must fall.

CHAPTER XIII.

AN ODD DIARY.

In my room there was a table with an empty drawer which fastened with a key. It is half full of rubbish—odds and ends of all sorts secreted there as souvenirs of those early days when I was incapable of keeping any other kind of diary. They have served their purpose. There is not a scrap which fails to recall the very sentiment of the moment when I laid it away, and it would be easy for me to compile a minute record of my life in Lambeth from them alone. A few of these trifles will suffice to indicate the course of events during the early months of my new life.

Here at the very bottom are three penny novelettes, bought for the illustrations on the cover, which alone were intelligible to me. In one "Lady Ermyntrude overhears the conspiracy" and is represented listening, with horror on her face, at a half opened door; in another "Gwendoline denounces the baronet," who is quailing in terror before her outstretched finger, and in the third "Beryl says 'Die!' and shoots the villain"—and a most unmistakable villain he is—"through the heart." Those pictures fascinated me. The heroines were all tall and beautiful, and a couple of them were in evening dress. I put myself in their place. The ladylike accomplishment of eavesdropping I had already practiced. I had only to unmask the secret enemy of Taras and shoot him through the heart to be perfectly satisfied. And the means seemed almost within my reach. The revolver had not been removed from my room. For weeks I carried that dangerous and rather cumbrous weapon in my dress pocket. I smile now at my simplicity, but my purpose was no laughing matter then; I was in terrible earnest.

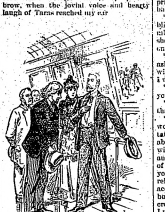
A long claspknife marks the day when I thought I might dispense with part of my portable armory which knocked against my knee whenever I moved about. The complete absence of fear shown by Taras and the mild manner and innocent look of all his visitors had greatly calmed my apprehensions, and in addition to this a wider intelligence showed me that the hand counted for less than the brain in coping with the subtle enemy of Taras.

One night Taras took me to the Westminster Music hall. Here is the programme of the spectacles which constituted two-thirds of the entertainment. I had never before been inside a theater, and when I stood in the stalls and looked round and above me I was quite overcome with astonishment at the vastness and brilliancy of the house.

"I should think this is the grandest place in all the world," I said in a lowered voice to Taras.

A little farther on there is another programme, showing that soon after we went to the Lyceum theater. The play made less impression on my mind. I could not understand it all. My intelligence was not yet sufficiently expanded to comprehend the higher art, and perhaps this was why Taras took me first to the music hall. Still that evening's experience was delightful, and the long talks it led to afterward opened quite a new field of ideas.

Very different emotions are recalled by this handkerchief, torn and shredded in a passion of furious jealousy. I must have used my teeth to rend it in this way. It was that evening when George Gordon dropped in after dinner and Kavanagh with a couple of friends, came in after. As usual when a visitor called, I went up to my room to avoid unpleasantness, for I had stuck scrupulously to my determination to speak English only to Taras, and I was only just beginning to make myself understood in French to Mere Lucas. The men staid and played cards until 2 in the morning, and I sat on the stairs listening to the sounds that came from below, with venomous jealousy rankling in my breast, the cold sweat of rage beading my lips and brow, when the jovial voice and hearty laugh of Taras reached my ear.



"If you were not a liar you would know that I am Prince Borgensky."

When the party broke up, I went down, ostensibly with the pretext of saying "good night" to Taras, but with the covert intention of picking a quarrel—of imparting to him something of the vindictive misery I felt. Seeing my condition, he made me sit down, and having lit a pipe seated himself in the chair opposite and chatted about the friends who were gone, as though it were the most natural thing in the world to enter into genial conversation at that hour.

Little by little he led up to my occupation during the evening, and after bringing me by my own confession to see how childishly selfish, weak and inconsistently foolish my jealousy was he drew tears of regret and shame into my eyes by a sympathetic word and then inspired me with the consoling hope that my own self esteem would save me from any renewal of this humiliation. A second handkerchief, scarcely crumpled and laid away in triumph after a hard struggle with myself, shows that I profited by this lesson later on when the friends met again. Indeed my temper was every day growing more amenable to reason, and I grew braver and I hope better under the gentle, humanizing influences which my dear friend constantly brought to bear upon me.

A day spent in the beautiful country beyond Woking is chronicled in this bunch of withered flowers. This was a fresh revelation to me, for with the exception of my memorable wandering to Greenwich I had never been out of London. It was in the first week of June. My astonishment began soon after we passed Clapham and increased as the houses grew fewer and the expanse of country wider, and I could not help bursting out into exclamations of delight now and then.

Taras caught my enthusiasm and was as ready as I to point out any fresh aspect. When we were fairly in the country and away from the station and people, I felt that I must sing or run or cry to give vent to my exuberant emotion. It seemed as if Taras and I were one—I saw with his eyes, heard with his ears, and in my heart was a sentiment of pure, ineffable love and divine tenderness which belonged more to his nature than to mine. He picked these flowers for me; I strewed them on my pillow and pressed my burning face on their cool petals when I lay down that night.

One more extract from this odd collection shall close the list. It is a collection of paintings by Prince Borgensky, exhibited at the Modern gallery in Bond street. I had often heard the word "nihilism" and "nihilist" spoken in Lambeth, and one morning when we were walking in the park—we never failed to go out for an hour or two before lunch—I asked Taras to tell me what a nihilist was.

"A Russian nihilist," said he, "is a man who desires freedom for his country such as we enjoy here in England, if we can get it. But he would be quite content with less."

"Are you a nihilist?" said I.

He nodded.

"Have you always been a nihilist?" I asked.

"No; I was once a servant—I might almost say a friend—of the czar, who is now my enemy."

"What made you become a nihilist?"

He reflected longer than he usually did before replying to my questions and then said:

"I will show you, Aura," and turning from the path he led me across the park and over Piccadilly into Bond street. There we entered a large gallery which was already crowded with well dressed people. The walls were covered with pictures. I may say without exaggeration that there were hundreds of paintings. There were some large ones representing battle scenes, and others quite small, for the most part portraits; but the greater number, and those which attracted most attention, illustrated prison and exile life in Russia and scenes relating to the march of prisoners into Siberia. The misery of this awful march, the attendant horrors of the etapes, where men and women, old and young, where the habitual criminal and the tenderly nurtured girl, condemned without trial by the administrative process, were herded together in loathsome garments without regard to decency or health and with less care for their preservation than would be bestowed upon cattle, were shown in such vivid reality that one turned with a feeling of sickness from the canvas, as if the reek of pollution and disease steamed from them.

"This is what made me a nihilist," Taras said in a low voice.

"You have seen all this?" I asked.

He nodded.

A plethoric young man with long hair was passing judgment on the picture in the loud tone of conceit.

"Vigor, I grant you," he said. "But the thing is overdone. The effect he aims at is spoiled by exaggeration. Borgensky may be a rabid nihilist, but it is equally clear that he is making capital out of a political boom; in fact"—he added in a confidential tone—"he almost admitted the fact when I taxed him with it here the other day."

"That is not true!" said Taras, raising his voice.

The knot of admirers about the stout young dilettante turned round, and the youth himself, scanning Taras from head to foot, said, with impudent contempt:

"Beg pardon, may I ask who you are?"

"If you were not a liar," replied Taras, "you would know that I am Prince Borgensky."

It was in this way that I came to know who Taras was.

CHAPTER XIV.

A WARNING.

One morning I was particularly bright and happy. Taras and I had risen early, by arrangement made over night, and gone to the flower market at Covent Garden, from which we returned ladened with flowers, and I was then disposing them about our pretty living room. Mere Lucas surprised me by repeating a phrase which she had not used for a long time.

"Pauvre cherie, va!" said she in a trembling voice, regarding me with tender commiseration in her broad, motherly face as she stood before me with her hands planted on her massive hips.

"Why do you say that, Mere Lucas?" I asked, for I could now speak in French with tolerable fluency. "I have everything I want."

"It is true, it is true. Thank heaven, you have everything you desire."

"Then why do you say 'poor dearie' with that look of sadness?"

"Why do I say it?" she said, echoing my words to get time for reflection. She hesitated. Her lips trembled as if she were about to tell something that prudence withheld, and then taking me by the arms and drawing me to her breast she got out of the difficulty by saying: "Because I love you. Go," and with a sounding kiss she released me and went off to her kitchen. I accepted this feminine explanation then, but before long the same expression cropped up again apropos of nothing when I was singing from sheer want of thought. That set me wondering. What was there in my condition that appealed to her sympathy? I was no longer the deplorable creature that first excited her pity. Why would a merry laugh now and then be checked by a sigh as she squeezed my hand, or end in a rueful shake of the head and a look of tearful sadness?

Another phase of her affectionate regard added to my perplexity before long. She became remarkably urgent in her praise of George Gordon and lost no opportunity of bringing us together.

"Good day, Mme. Lucas," Gordon would cry in his cheery voice and execrable French when the door was opened to him. "Fine weather, isn't it? Is M. Taras in his studio?"

"I will go and see," Mere Lucas responded in good Norman, "but behold ma'm'selle all alone," and opening the sitting room door she gave the poor man no option but to enter and pass a quarter of an hour with me, and a bad quarter of an hour it usually was for him owing to his very limited knowledge of French and my obstinate perseverance in speaking English only to Taras.

He was a nice fellow and the most intimate friend of Taras. A stronger bond of friendship existed between them than between Taras and Kavanagh, perhaps because there was more weakness in Gordon's character. Kavanagh was undoubtedly stronger in purpose and action, which was the reason, I believe, for Taras choosing him rather than Gordon as a guardian for me in case of accident.

I liked Gordon for his honest simplicity, his obvious kindness of heart and for a certain resemblance to Taras in personal appearance and some phases of character. Like Taras, he was strong and big, fair and blue eyed, careless with regard to dress—in striking contrast to Kavanagh, who always dressed perfectly and had never a hair astray—and his voice was hearty and outspoken.

They had both the same good laugh, the same honest, open way of looking you full in the eyes, the same gentleness and ready sympathy. Both might have been cast from the same mold, but Gordon was the rough cast, still needing the finishing touch and polish which gave Taras his immense superiority. Gordon's eyes lacked the artistic depth and his expression the high intelligence and serious bent that distinguished Taras—just as his manner was wanting in some quality which marked the high breeding and refinement of his friend. In their hands more than anything the difference between them found expression. Gordon's were pretty, with tapering fingers and a dimple in the knuckle, soft and slow in movement. Taras had long, thin fingers with spatula tips, and they were full of nervous energy.

"Ah, what a good husband he would make, that good M. Gordon!" Mere Lucas more than once exclaimed. "So rich, so amiable, so gay and with such a good heart and so easy to lead!"

But it never occurred to me that I should lead him. No idea of marriage ever entered my head at that time.

Seeing that I failed to profit by her hints and that I was as far as ever from regarding Gordon as a possible husband, Mere Lucas took more decisive means of warning me against the danger which lay unseen beneath my ever increasing attachment to Taras. She found me one morning alone in his workshop setting some fresh flowers in the brown jar by the window.

"It is good to put flowers where he may see them when he turns from his work," said she, "for his heart must be heavy, like a sick person without hope, when he thinks and thinks hour after hour of the misery of his country. How grand it is!" she added turning to the life size group, now nearly finished, which Taras had modeled in the past month from the smaller sketch. "How it strikes one with pity and stirs up one's heart! One would say that poor beaten creature had no hope in the world. It is magnificent. And to think that out of a piece of soft, shapeless clay he makes a figure which fills one with sympathy for that poor Russian! It is grand to have that power and the courage to practice it. But the gift was not meant for him. It should have been given to one with no wish to live, no love for home and friends, not to my dear master. How fond he is of the world, of simple things, of us, look you! See how sweet he is with children and think what happiness it would have been to such a man to have a dear wife and children of his own to love!"

The idea of Taras with a wife for his companion presenting itself to my selfish mind for the first time filled me with jealous terror.

"Why should he not marry?" I asked, giving expression to my fear.

"Because he ought not to marry. That is reason enough for him. His choice is made. He has offered to sacrifice his life for his country, and with that fate hanging over him he will never marry. Believe me, my poor little friend, for I know my master, and I tell you that he will never marry—never, never!"

CHAPTER XV.

AWAKENING.

I understood now the meaning of Mere Lucas' ominous headshakings, of her endeavor to promote an attachment between me and Gordon, and of this last measure by which she had shown me that Taras would never marry. She feared that my affection for him was ripening into love and that I should expect him to make me his wife.

The relation quite stupefied me, and I sank down silently on the stool by his bench, with tears that I could not account for gathering in my eyes and a feeling of desolation and loss in my heart.

Mere Lucas kissed me and went away with a little sob of sympathy. "He will never marry me," I said to myself, trying to realize my situation and find an explanation of the sadness that oppressed me. Undoubtedly love, unknown to me, had been smoldering in my breast from the first moment that Taras smiled at me, and to burst up into flame it only needed that unfortunate touch by which old Mere Lucas attempted to stifle it.

"He will not marry me," I said, repeating her words with a little addition of my own. Then slowly the graver import of her warning dawned upon me. His reason for avoiding marriage was not because he could not love, but because he would not doom his wife to widowhood or exile to Siberia—because he knew that ere long he must die or be taken prisoner to Russia.

At this perception a cold sweat burst out upon my brow, as if I had become aware for the first time of this impending fate.

Going to my room, I took myself to task for my want of vigilance. What had I done to guard his life since the night when I learned that it was in danger? Nothing beyond carrying weapons in my pocket for a few weeks and listening when I found the chance to scraps of conversation that I could not understand, and even these feeble attempts had been abandoned lately, and I had suffered myself to be lulled into a state of carelessness by the absence of any open sign of hostility toward Taras and by his own disregard of precaution.

But this apathy on the part of the secret enemy I had been led to expect from the conversation of Taras and his friend Kavanagh. They had said that probably no further attempt would be made for some months. Those months were now passed. The critical time was at hand, for I had gathered from one or two remarks that any fresh offense to the czar would be the signal for a renewed and final effort to silence Taras. That fresh offense was about to be committed. The group of statuary was finished. The work of casting and burning done, the striking allegory would be publicly exhibited for all the world to talk of.

I recalled now, almost with stupefaction at my incredible indifference, an incident which proved that the secret enemy was on the alert and fully acquainted with Taras' design. The proprietor of the pottery at which it was intended to burn the clay group had called to inquire if the subject was of a political character. Taras of course admitted frankly that it was, and when Mr. H——, for commercial reasons, had begged to decline to give any assistance in the production he asked Mr. H—— what reason he had for suspecting that the work was a political one.

"My information, sir," said Mr. H——, "came in the form of an anonymous letter, and for that reason I felt that in justice to you I ought to have a personal verification of the fact before declining the commission."

When Gordon heard of this, he laughed and declared that there was not a word of truth in the statement.

"No anonymous letter was needed. Old H—— has found out that you are Borgensky, the nihilist, and with the hope of knighthood before him and the dread of losing a sale or two in Russia he thinks it best to decline the job."

At the time that explanation was accepted by me as readily as it was by Taras, but it was different with me now. I felt sure that the secret enemy had made this communication.

Who could he be? Clearly some one who had seen the group, and, not less obviously, one of the Russian visitors who called on Taras. But which of them? To my eyes they seemed all pretty much alike—meek, gloomy, unhappy looking men, dreadfully out at elbow, and the shrug of pity or frown of discontent with which Mere Lucas expressed her feeling regarding them was usually accompanied with a significant movement of the thumb and finger, which led me to understand that their object was to get money out of Taras. There was none who looked like a traitor, and I could not believe that any would be base enough to betray him to the police, for, however unhappy they looked on arriving, not one went away with disappointment in his face, and though Taras was careful to conceal his generosity I had reason to know that he gave away to his distressed countrymen infinitely more than he spent upon himself.

All through the night I taxed my brain with conjectures and surmises without arriving at any definite conclusion with regard to the identity of this dreaded enemy, and all I could do to silence my self reproach for past neglect was to vow that I would be more watchful and vigilant in the future.

And this vow was not made in vain.

FLOWER SUPERSTITIONS.

Maidens' Barometers For Divining the Depths of Their Sweethearts' Love.

It is singular to see how many meaningless ceremonies are now practiced by young women—ceremonies which were formerly used in earnest as love charms or incantations. Most of these have an amatory origin, and in connection with not a few certain flowers are used, presumably as a means of foretelling the future. In several parts of New England when a young lady expects a visit from her lover she will pluck a marigold, take it in her hand when he arrives and carry it until the end of his visit, when from its fresh or faded condition she will judge of the strength of his affection.

A German girl, after having been called on by her lover, will put a star flower or dandelion in water and leave it there until his next visit, drawing an omen from its condition, while a Spanish maiden will take a moss rosebud, wear it on her breast, and if it expands to become a perfect flower the omen is considered exceedingly fortunate. A superstition of the same kind is shown by the East Indian maiden who places a poppy in her hair. In England the primrose is used for the same purpose, and in country districts of New England the spikes of the rib wort plantain are taken, wrapped in dock leaves, placed beneath a stone, and if the next day signs of new buds appear the omen is considered happy.

In France young ladies desirous of ascertaining the extent of a lover's affection take the common daisy and pull off its leaves one by one, with the question, "Does he love me? Does he love me little? Does he love me much? Does he love me with all his soul?" Marguerite in "Faust" uses the common blue bottle with similar questions. In England the ash leaf is sometimes employed to ascertain the faithfulness of an absent lover, and the Irish maiden learns of her future by putting a shamrock in her shoe, after which she walks abroad, and the first man she meets or one of his name will be her husband.—New York Advertiser.

A woman wearing stays as loosely as is possible for such articles to be worn exerts a pressure of 40 pounds on the organs which they compress. Such figures in cold print are startling.

A BUNDLE OF OLD SERMONS.

The ink is brown, the paper soiled,
How long ago the writer toiled
Upon these pages;
And as we read their old world lore,
Their quaint allusions—they restore
The past to us; we live once more
In bygone days.

We hear as if by magic charm
Once more the "Tate and Brady" psalm,
Which pleased so vastly.
The church and rustic flock grow plain,
The high oak pews, the latticed pane—
We hear the sermon preached again
From the text to "lastly."

No novel views of ancient sense,
No daring flights of eloquence
Were here embodied.
The placid hearers felt no thrill,
But sat in sleepy comfort still,
While Jack demurely glanced at Jill
And parents nodded.

Indeed, none listened much, I fear,
To all these periods, painting clear
The saint and sinner,
Until at length there came the close
To stir the drowsy from repose,
And priest and people both arose
And went to dinner.

Ah, sermons of the long ago,
Yours was another age, we know;
And now our preachers,
Each furnished with his special plan
To benefit bewildered man,
Denounce as loudly as they can
Their rival teachers.

Yet, as your pages we retrace
In this our age of cultured grace,
The question lingers:
If all of us are happier men
Than those who filled our places when
Your sage designer took the pen
Between his fingers?

An Editor Suicides.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 28.—About 11 a. m. Albert Wolf of 220 Prescott street, West Side, was killed in the Union depot, being horribly mangled by a Kansas City transfer train. From what could be observed of the man's actions around the depot and prior to his death it was a case of suicide and was attempted twice before it was accomplished. He was formerly editor of The Volkzeitung, and was quite prominent in politics.

CROOKSTON'S OPPORTUNITY.

In our news column, will be found a dispatch from Duluth stating that the Duluth & Winnipeg and the South Shore railroads are to be consolidated, and that the combined system will be operated by the Canadian Pacific railway. President Fisher of the Duluth & Winnipeg, is said to have disposed of his interests to President Van Home of the Canadian Pacific, who has in addition to this, a large block of Duluth & Winnipeg stock.

On December 14th there will be a meeting held in Duluth for the purpose of making the consolidation and to formulate plans for extending the Duluth & Winnipeg next summer. It is said the plan now talked of is to extend the line to some point in the Red River Valley, probably Crookston, and to run another line in a northwesterly direction from some point west of Lake Winnibigoshish to Emerson, Manitoba, to connect with the Canadain Pacific.

If the latter extension is contemplated it will probably be abandoned when prospected by the engineers, for it would be found that a road running from Lake Winnibigoshish in a northwesterly line to Emerson would run through a country which, owing to its swampy nature, would almost be impossible to build through, and the line when built would never pay the operating expenses, as far as local business was concerned.

But a line from Duluth to Crookston, and from Crookston to Emerson along the east side of the Red River would traverse a country every mile of which would pay tribute to a railroad. The best land in the Red River valley is found within fifteen miles of the river, and a road running north from Crookston along the east side of the river would tap the most productive portion of the northern part of the valley.

Then a line running due west from Crookston to connect with the Canadian Pacific's other line—the Soo—at a point in North Dakota, would run through a great wheat producing section, and give the Canadian Pacific a direct line from the coast to Duluth two hundred miles shorter than by way of St. Paul, A direct line from Crookston west would cross the Red River about twelve miles south of Grand Forks, run through the southern part of the counties of Grand Forks and Nelson in North Dakota, and the northern part of Eddy, to a junction with the Soo line at Emrich. This road would strike the famous Cheyenne valley—in fact it would traverse the valley for fifty miles.

This route is the one proposed by the promoters of the Crookston, Fort Stevenson & Montana railroad, which was organized here a couple of years ago and authorized by a congressional measure. It might not be amiss to mention the promoters of that organization at this time. With one exception they are all Crookston parties: John McLean president; John Cromb, Felix Fournet, M. R. Brown, Lewis Ellington and Senator Burkhardt.

The JOURNAL would suggest that the citizens, or the city council, take enough interest in this matter to send a representative or two to attend the railroad meeting at Duluth on the 14th inst. to lay before the directors the advantages of an extension into the Red River valley at Crookston.

THE democratic congress has resumed its labors again and will make another grand bluff on the tariff. In all probability no very material changes will be made, but the party will be able to keep up the agitation and make the question so much a matter of doubt as to prolong the uncertainty indefinitely and thus prolong the present state of things until the Republicans again take charge of affairs, which will be at the next general election. A definite policy, one way or the other, would be far preferable to this state of things.

THE Times, in an attack upon Halvor Steenerson, sneers at the efforts of the farmers to obtain a reasonable reduction in wheat rates. This is nothing unusual for the Times whose only province seems to be to find fault with every earnest endeavor to better the condition of the farmer. So far as Mr. S. is concerned he is only an instrument in the hands of the farmers and is not the leader of the movement.

His nibs, Congressman Boen, is in favor of an income tax and would put the limit at $3,000. When he gets that and his canal scheme through he will be happy.

IT is said that Cleveland will retire Queen Lil of Hawaii on a pension of $500,000. If she was the wife or mother of some faithful Union soldier she would have the hardest kind of a time trying to get a pension of $5, and it is very questionable whether she would get it. But Queen Lil is an ignorant heathen and that makes a difference—with Grover.

THE president's message seems to be more a matter of disappointment to his friends than anything else, in the fact that upon all leading questions there is evidence of vacillation and insincerity which to them is inexplicable but to the keen student of human nature it is no more than we expected—of Cleveland. His views and recommendations upon the tariff questions are as clear as mud and in full consonance with the average intelligence of his party.

THE city of Grand Forks seems to be getting extremely high-toned in these days, and a few days since some nineteen or twenty farmers were hauled up and fined for bringing produce to the city to sell and scattering a little hay. Crookston provides a market place for such things thus avoids the painful necessity of arresting her customers. Grand Forks should build a Chinese wall and include East Grand Forks within the charmed circle.

St. Hilaire Spectator: "Michael Jeffers, the venerable sage of Gervais township, was in town last Monday. He has always been a democrat of the Jeffersonian stripe, but remarks that on Thanksgiving day he will give thanks that he did not vote for King Grover at the last election. That is one sin I will not have to answer for, said he, as he started for home."

Michael reminds us of what natural history says of the ostrich, that when closely pursued and in danger will hide its head in the sand and imagine its whole body is hid. By voting for Weaver, Michael did more to elect Grover than he would have done had he voted for him direct, for it was the populist vote that made Grover's election sure.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Recommendations of Mr. Cleveland to the Fifty-third Congress.

REPORTS OF THE DEPARTMENTS.

Tariff the Principal Topic—The Sherman Law—Civil Service.

To the Congress of the United States:

The constitutional duty which requires the president from time to time to give to the congress information of the state of the Union and recommend to their consideration such as he shall judge necessary is fittingly entered upon by commending to the congress a careful examination of the detailed statements and well supported recommendations contained in the reports of departments who are chiefly charged with executive work of the government.

In an effort to abridge this communication as much as is consistent with its purpose I shall supplement a brief reference to the contents of these departmental reports by the mention of such executive business and incidents as are not embraced herein, and by such recommendations as appear to be at this particular time appropriate.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

They Have Not Been Entirely Free From Perplexities.

While our foreign relations have not at all times during the past year been entirely free from perplexity, no embarrassing situations remain that will not yield to the spirit of fairness and love of justice which, joined with consistent firmness, characterize a truly American foreign policy. My predecessor having accepted the office of arbitrator of the long-standing missions boundary dispute, tendered to the president by the Argentine Republic and Brazil it has been my agreeable duty to receive the special envoys commissioned by those states to lay before me evidence and arguments in behalf of their respective governments. The outbreak of domestic hostilities in the republic of Brazil found the United States alert to watch the interests of our citizens in that country, with which we carry on important commerce. Several vessels of our new navy are now, and for some time have been, stationed at Rio de Janerio. The struggle being between the established government which controls the machinery of administration and with which we maintain friendly relations, and certain officers of the navy employing the vessels of their command in an attack upon the national capital and chief seaport, and lacking, as it does, the elements of divided administration, I have failed to see that the insurgents can reasonably claim recognition as beligerants. Thus far the position of our government has been that of an

of the unfortunate conflict. Emphasizing our fixed policy of impartial neutrality in such a condition of affairs as now exists I deemed it necessary to disavow in a manner not to be misunderstood, the unauthorized action of our late naval commander in those waters in saluting the revolting Brazilian admiral, being indisposed to countenance an act calculated to give sanction to the local insurrection.

The Chilian Affair.

The convention between our government and Chili, having for its object the settlement and adjustment of the demands of the two countries against each other, has been made effective by the organization of the claims commission provided for. The two governments failing to agree upon the third member of the commission, the good offices of the president of the Swiss republic were invoked as provided in the treaty, and the selection of the Swiss representative in this country to complete the organisation was gratifying to the United States and Chili.

The vexatious question of a so-called legation asylum for offenders against the state and its laws, was presented anew in Chili by the unauthorized action of the late United States minister in sheltering in his official residence two persons who had failed in an attempt at revelation and against whom criminal charges were pending, growing out of a former abortive disturbance.

Not Sanctioned by Best Precedent.

The doctrine of asylum as applied to this case is not sanctioned by the best precedents, and, when allowed, tends to encourage sedition and strife. Under no circumstances can the representations of the government be permitted, under the ill-defined fiction of extra-territoriality, to interrupt the administration of criminal justice in the countries to which they are accredited. A temperate demand having been made by the Chilian government for the correction of this conduct, the minister was instructed to no longer harbor the offender.

The Geary Law.

The legislation of last year known as the Geary law, requiring the registration of all Chinese laborers entitled to residence in the United States, and the deportation of all not complying with the provision of the act within the time prescribed met with much opposition from Chinamen in this country. Acting upon the advice of eminent counsel that the law was unconstitutional, the great mass of Chinese laborers, pending judicial inquiry as to its validity in good faith, declined to apply for the certificates required by its provision, and a test upon the proceeding by habeas corpus was brought before the supreme court, and on May 15, 1893, a decision was made by that tribunal sustaining the law.

It is believed that under the recent amendment of the act extending the time for the registration of the Chinese laborers thereto entitled who desire to reside in this country will now avail themselves of the renewed privileges thus afforded of establishing by lawful procedure their right to remain, and that thereby the necessity of enforced deportation may be to a great degree avoided. It has devolved upon the United States minister at Peking as dean of the diplomatic body, and in the absence of a representative of Sweden and Norway to press upon the Chinese government reparation for the recent murder of Swedish missionaries at Sung Pu. This question is of vital interest to all countries whose citizens engage in missionary work in the interior.

African Slave Trade.

By Article XII of the general act of Brussels, signed July 2, 1890, for the suppression of the slave trade or the restriction of certain injurious commerce in the independent states of the Congo and in the adjacent zone of Central Africa, the United States and the other signatory powers agreed to adopt appropriate means for the punishment of persons selling arms and ammunition to the natives and for the confiscation of the inhibited articles. It being the plain duty of this government to aid in suppressing the nefarious traffic, imparing as it does the praiseworthy and civilizing effort now in progress in that region, I recommend that an act be passed prohibiting the sale of arms and intoxicants to natives in the regulated zone by our citizens.

Extradition Treaties.

Costa Rica has lately testified its friendliness by surrendering to the United States, in the absence of a convention of extradition but upon duly submitted evidence of criminality, a noted fugitive from justice. It is trusted that the negotiation of a treaty with that country to meet recurring cases of that kind will soon be accomplished. In my opinion, treaties for reciprocal extradition should be concluded with all those countries with which the United States has not already conventional arrangements of that character.

Our Relations With England.

The questions affecting our relations with Great Britain have been treated in a spirit of friendliness. Negotiations are in progress between the two governments with a view to such concurrent action as will make the award and regulations agreed upon by the Behring Sea tribunal of arbitration practically effective, and it is not doubted that Great Britain will co-operate freely with this country for the accomplishment of that purpose. The dispute growing out of the discriminating tolls imposed in the Welland canal, upon cargoes of cereals bound to and from the lake ports of the United States, was adjusted by the substitution of a more equitable schedule of charges, and my predecessor thereupon suspended his proclamation imposing discriminating tolls upon British transit through our canals. A request for additions to the list of extraditable offenses covered by the existing treaty between the two countries, is under consideration.

Mr. Baker's Good Offices.

Nicaragua has recently passed through two revolutions, the party at first successful having in turn been displaced by another. Our newly appointed minister, by his timely good offices, aided in a peaceful adjustment of the controversy involved in the first conflict. The large American interests established in that country in connection with the Nicaragua canal were not molested. The canal company has unfortunately become financially seriously embarrassed, but a generous treatment has been extended to it by the government of Nicaragua. The United States are especially interested in the successful achievement of the vast undertaking this company has in charge. That it should be accomplished under and its enjoyment assured not only to the vessels of this country as a channel of commercial communication between our Atlantic and Pacific seaboards, but to the ships of the world in the interests of civilization, is a proposition which, in my judgment, does not admit of question.

Russian and Norwegian Treaties.

An extradition treaty with Norway has recently been exchanged and proclaimed. The extradition treaty with Russia signed in March, 1887, and amended and confirmed by the senate in February last, was duly proclaimed last year.

Should Give Thanks for Caravels.

The reproduced caravel, Santa Maria, built by Spain and sent to the Columbian exposition, has been presented to the United States in token of amity and in commemoration of the event it was designed to celebrate. I recommend that in accepting this gift congress make grateful recognition of the sincere friendship which prompted it.

Minor Foreign Matters.

The president treats at considerable length of the troubles of missionaries in Turkey, and briefly of less importance with minor powers of this and other continents. In all cases the belief in an amicable settlement is stated.

HAWAIIAN MATTERS.

The Present Trouble on the Islands Discussed.

It is hardly necessary for me to state that the questions arising from our relations with Hawaii have caused serious embarrassment.

Just prior to the installment of the present administration the existing government of Hawaii had been suddenly overthrown and a treaty of annexation had been negotiated between the provisional government of the islands and the United States, and submitted to the senate for ratification. This treaty I withdrew for examination and despatched Hon. James H. Blount of Georgia to Honolulu as a special commissioner, to make an impartial investigation of the circumstances attending the change of government, and of all the conditions bearing upon the subject of the treaty. After a thorough and exhaustive examination Mr. Blount submitted to me his report, showing beyond all question that the constitutional government of Hawaii

Had Been Subverted

with the active aid of our representative to that government and through the intimidation caused by the presence of an armed naval force of the United States which was landed for that purpose at the instance of our minister. Upon the facts developed it seemed to me the only honorable course for our government to pursue was to undo the wrong that had been done by those representing us and to restore as far as practicable the status existing at the time of our forcible intervention. With a view of accomplishing this result within the constitutional limits of executive power, and recognizing all our obligations and responsibilities growing out of any changed condition brought about by our

Unjustifiable Interference,

our present minister at Honolulu has received appropriate instructions to that end. Thus far no information of the accomplishment of any definite results has been received from him. Additional advices are soon expected, and when received they will be promply sent to congress, together with all other information at hand, accompanied by a special executive message fully detailing all the facts necessary to a complete understanding of the case, and presenting a history of all the national events leading up to the present situation.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Extract From the Report of Secretary Carlisle.

The secretary of the treasury reports that the receipts of the government from all sources during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1893, amounted to $461,716,561.94, and its expenditures to $459,374,674.29. There was collected from customs $205,355,016.73, and from internal revenue $161,027,623.93; our dutiable imports amounted to $421,856,711, an increase of $52,453,907 over the preceding year, and importations free of duty amounted to $444,544,211, a decrease from the preceding year of $13,455,447. Internal revenue receipts exceeded those of the preceding year by $7,147,445.32. The total tax collected on distilled spirits was $94,720,260.55; on manufactured tobacco, $31,889,711.74, and on fermented liquors, $32,548,983.07. We exported merchandise during the year amounting to $847,665,194, a decrease of $182,612,954 from the preceding year. The amount of gold exported was larger than in any previous year in the history of the government, amounting to $108,680,844, and exceeding the amount exported during the preceding year by $58,485,577. The sum paid from the treasury for sugar bounty was $9,375,130.88, an increase over the preceding year of $20,335,309.

It is estimated upon the basis of present revenue laws that the receipts of the government for the year ending June 30, 1894, will be $430,121,365.38 and its expenditures $458,121,365.33, resulting in a deficiency of $28,000,000.

Per Capita Circulation.

On the 1st day of November, 1893, the amount of money of all kinds in circulation included in treasury holdings was $1,718,544,682, an increase for the year of $112,404,947.

Estimating our population at 67,426,000 at the time mentioned the per capita circulation was $25.49.

On the same date there was in the treasury gold bullion amounting to $96,657,273 and silver bullion which was purchased at a cost of $126,261,553.

Silver Purchases.

The purchases of silver under the law of July 14, 1890, during the last fiscal year aggregated 54,008,162.59 fine ounces, which cost $45,531,474.53. The total amount of silver purchased from the time that the law became operative until the repeal of its purchasing clause, on the 1st day of November, 1893, was 168,674,590.46 fine ounces, which cost $155,930,940.84. Between the 1st day of March, 1873, and the 1st day of November, 1893, the government purchased under all laws 503,003,717 fine ounces of silver at a cost of $516,622,948. The silver dollars that have been coined under the act of July 14, 1890, number 36,087,285. The seignorage arising from such coinage was 6,977,078, leaving on hand in the mints 140,699,760 fine ounces of silver, which cost $126,578,218.

Production of Precious Metals.

Our total coinage of all metals during the last fiscal year consisted of 97,280,875 pieces, valued at $43,685,178.80, of which there was $30,038,140 in gold coin, $5,343,715 in silver dollars, $7,217,220.90 in subsidiary silver coin and $1,086,102.90 in minor coins. During the calendar year 1892 the production of precious metals in the United States was estimated to be 1,596,375 fine ounces of gold, of the commercial and coinage value of $33,000,000, and 58,000,000 fine ounces of silver, of the bullion or market value of $50,750,000 and of the coinage value of $74,989,900.

It is estimated that on the first day of July, 1896, the metallic stock of money in the United States, consisting of coin and bullion, amounted to $1,213,559,169 of which $597,697,685 was gold and $615,861,484 was silver.

National Banks.

One hundred and nineteen national banks were organized during the year ending Oct. 31, 1893, with a capital of $11,230,000. Forty-six went into voluntary liquidation, and 158 suspended; 65 of the suspended banks were insolvent, 86 resumed business, and seven remained in the hands of bank examiners with prospects of speedy resumption. Of the new banks organized, 44 were located in the Eastern states, 41 west of the Mississippi river and 34 in the Central and Southern states.

The total number of national banks in existence the 31st day of October, 1893, was 3,796, having an aggregate capital of $695,558,120.

The net increase in the circulation of these banks during the year was $36,886,972.

THE SHERMAN LAW.

Its Repeal Has Changed the Complexion of Our Currency Laws.

The recent repeal of the provision of the law requiring the purchase of silver bullion by the government as a feature of our monetary scheme has made an entire change in the complexion of our currency affairs and do not doubt that the ultimate result of this action will be most salutary and far-reaching.

In the nature of things, however, it is impossible to know at this time precisely what conditions will be brought about by the change, or what, if any, supplementary legislation may, in the light of such conditions, appear to be essential or expedient. Of course, after the recent financial perturbation for the re-establishment of business confidence. When, however, through this restored confidence the money which has been frightened into hoarding places is returned to trade and enterprise, a survey of the situation will probably disclose as safe a path leading to a permanently sound currency, abundantly sufficient to meet every requirement of our increasing population and its business. In the pursuit of this object we should resolutely turn away from alluring and tempting expedients, determined to be content with nothing less than a lasting and comprehensive financial plan. In these circumstances I am convinced that a reasonable delay in dealing with this subject, instead of being injurious, will increase the probability of wise action.

The Monetary Conference, which assembled at Brussels upon our invitation, was adjourned to the present year. The considerations just stated and the fact that a definite proposition from us seemed to be expected upon the reassembling of the conference led me to express a willingness to have the meeting still further postponed. It seems to me that it would be wise to give general authority to the president to invite other nations to such a conference at any time when there should be a fair prospect of accomplishing an international agreement on the subject of coinage.

Authority to Issue Bonds.

I desire also to earnestly suggest the wisdom of amending the existing status in regard to the issuance of government bonds The authority now vested in the secretary of the treasury to issue bonds is not as clear as it should be, and the bonds authorized are disadvantageous to the government, both as to the time of their maturity and rate of interest.

As to Immigration.

The superintendent of immigration, through the secretary of the treasury, reports that during the last fiscal year there arrived at our ports 440,793 immigrants; of these 1,063 were not permitted to land under the limitations of the law and 577 were returned to the countries from which they came by reason of their having become public charges. The total arrivals were 141,034 less than for the previous year.

Quarantine Regulations.

The secretary in his report gives an account of the operation of the Marine hospital service and of the good work done under its supervision in preventing the entrance and spread of contagious diseases. The admonitions of the last two years touching our public health and the demonstrated danger of the introduction of contagious diseases from foreign ports has invested the subject of national quarantine with increased interest. A more general and harmonious system than now exists, acting promptly and directly everywhere, and constantly operating by preventive means to shield our country from the invasion of disease, and at the same time having due regard to the right and duties of local agencies, would, I believe, add greatly to the safety of our people.

THE POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Large Deficit Instead of the Surplus Anticipated.

The report of the postmaster general contains a detailed statement of the operations of the postoffice department during the last fiscal year, and much interesting information touching this important branch of the public service. The business of the mails indicates with absolute certainty the condition of the business of the country and depression in financial affairs inevitably and quickly reduces the postal revenues. That there was a larger discrepancy than usual between the postoffice receipts and expenditures is the expected and unavoidable result of the distressing stringency which has prevailed throughout the country during much of the time covered by the postmaster general's report. At a date when better times were anticipated it was estimated by his predecessor that the deficiency on the 30th day of June, 1893, would be but a little over a million and a half dollars. It amounted, however, to more than five millions. At the same time and under the influence of like anticipations estimates were made for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, which exhibited a surplus of revenue over expenditures of $872,245.71, but now in view of the actual receipts and expenditures during that part of the current fiscal year already expired, the present postmaster-general estimates that at it is close, instead of a surplus, there will be a deficiency of nearly eight million dollars.

THE INTERIOR.

Report of the Secretary Contains Much of Interest—Pensions and Indians.

The secretary of the interior has the supervision of so many important subjects that his report is of especial value and interest.

The 30th day of June, 1893, there were on the pension rolls 966,012 names, an increase of 89,944 over the number on the rolls June 30, 1892. The number added to the rolls during the year was 123,634, and the number dropped was 33,690. The first payments on pensions allowed during the year amounted to $33,596,549.98.

Pension Frauds.

The president discusses pension frauds at considerable length, and concludes:

I am unable to understand why frauds in the pension rolls should not [illegible] and corrected with thoroughness and vigor. Every name fraudulently put upon these rolls is a wicked imposition upon the kindly sentiment in which pensions have their origin; every fraudulent pensioner has become a bad citizen; every false oath in support of a pension has made perjury more common and false, and undeserving pensioners rob the people, not only of their money, but of the patriotic sentiment which the survivors of a war fought for the preservation of the Union ought to inspire.

The sum expended on account of pensions for the year ending June 30, 1893, was $156,740,467.14. The commissioner estimates that $165,000,000 will be required to

"When I was a Boy,"

Writes Postmaster J. C. WOODSON, Forest Hill, W. Va., "I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character, that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary medicines, and advised me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and one bottle cured me. For the last fifteen years, I have used this preparation with good effect whenever I take and I know of numbers of people who keep it in the house all the time, not considering it safe to be without it."

"I have been using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for 30 years, with the most satisfactory results, and can cheerfully recommend it as being especially adapted to all pulmonary complaints. I have, for many years, made pulmonary and other medicines a special study, and I have come to the conclusion that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral occupies a position pre-eminent over other medicines of the class."—Chas. Davenport, Dover, N. J.

pay pensions during the year ending June 30, 1894.

As to Indians.

Our Indians number about 248,000. About 110,000 of these Indians have, to a large degree, adopted civilized customs. Lands in severalty have been allotted to many of them. Such allotments have been made to 10,000 individuals during the last fiscal year, embracing about 1,000,000 acres.

The appropriations on account of the Indian bureau for the year ending June 30, 1894, amount to $7,954,962.99, a decrease as compared with the year preceding it of $387,131.95.

As to Land Laws.

The secretary's recommendations regarding land entries and the opening of reservations are recommended to careful consideration.

AS TO AGRICULTURE.

What Has Been Done in the Bureau Presided Over by Mr. Morton.

After reviewing, with a word of commendation, the efforts at economy made by Secretary Morton, the president details the work which has been done in the matter of stamping out contagious dieases. Much progress has been made in the division of animal pathology, but the work should be extended.

The exports of agricultural products from the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, attained the enormous figure of $800,000,000 in round numbers, being 78.7 per cent of our total exports.

In the last fiscal year this aggregate was greatly reduced, being 75.1 per cent of all American commodities exported.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Some Changes Which the President Thinks Badly Needed.

The report of the attorney general contains the usual summary of the affairs and proceedings of the department of justice for the past year, together with certain recommendations as to needed legislation on various subjects. I cannot too heartily indorse the proposition that the fee system as applicable to the compensation of United States attorneys, marshals, clerks of federal courts and United States commissioners should be abolished with as little delay as possible. It is clearly in the interest of the community that the business of the courts, both civil and criminal, shall be as small and as inexpensively transacted as the ends of justice will allow. The system is therefore thoroughly vicious, which makes the compensation of court officials depend upon the volume of such business, and thus creates a conflict between a proper execution of the law and private gain which cannot fail to be dangerous to the rights and freedom of the citizens, an irresistible temptation to the unjustifiable expenditure of public funds. If in addition to this reform another was inaugurated which would give to United States commissioners the final disposition of petty offenses within the grade of misdemeanors, especially those coming under the internal revenue laws, a great advance would be made toward a more decent administration of the criminal laws.

THE NAVY.

A Satisfactory Account of the Progress Made During the Year.

The report of the secretary of the navy contains a history of the operations of his department during the past year and exhibits a most gratifying condition of the personnel of our navy. He presents a satisfactory account of the progress which has been made in the construction of vessels and makes a number of recommendations to which attention is especially invited.

Many Calls for Cruisers.

During the past six months the demands for cruising vessels have been many and urgent. There have been resolutions calling for vessels to protect American interests in Nicaragua, Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Argentena and Brazil, while the condition of affairs in Honolulu has required the constant presence of one or more ships. With all these calls upon our navy it became necessary, in order to make up a sufficient fleet to patrol the Behring sea under the modus vivendi agreed upon with Great Britain, to detail to that service one vessel from the fish commission and three from the revenue marine.

Construction Somewhat Slow.

Progress in the construction of new vessels has not been as rapid as was anticipated. There have been delays in the completion of unarmored vessels, but for the most part they have been such as are constantly occurring even in countries having the largest experience in naval ship building. The most serious delays, however, have been in the work upon armored ships. The trouble has been the failure of contractors to deliver armor as agreed. Difficulties seem now, however, to have been all overcome, and armor is being delivered with satisfactory promptness.

The president recommends that no new vessels be commenced until some of those already under way are completed.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

What Has Been Done and What Could Be Profitably Accomplished.

The secretary of war reports that the strength of the army on the thirtieth day of September last was 25,778 enlisted men, and 2,144 officers. The total expenses of the department for the year ending June 30, 1893, amounted to $51,966,074.39; of this sum $1,992,581.95 was for salaried and contingent expenses, $23,377,828.35 for the support of the military establishment, $6,077,033.18 for miscellaneous objects and $20,518,631.41 for public works. This latter sum includes $15,296,876.46 for river and harbor improvements, and $3,266,141.20 for fortifications and other works of defense.

The Militia.

The total enrollment of the militia of the several states was, on the 31st of October of the current year, 112,597 officers and enlisted men. The officers of the army detailed for the inspection and instruction of this reserve of our military force report that increased interest and marked progress are apparent in the discipline and efficiency of the organization.

A Peaceful Year Internally.

Neither Indian outbreaks or domestic violence have called the army into service during the year, and the only active military duty required of it has been in the department of Texas, where violations of the neutrality laws of the United States and Mexico were promptly and efficiently dealt with by the troops, eliciting the warm approval of the civil and military authorities of both countries.

The operation of wise laws and the influence of civilization constantly tending to relieve the country from the dangers of Indian hostilities, together with the increasing ability of the states through the efficiency of the national guard organizations to protect their citizens from domestic violence, lead to the suggestion that the time is fast approaching when there should be a reorganization of our army on the lines of the present necessities of the country. This change contemplates neither increase in number nor added expense, but a redistribution of the force and an encouragement of measures tending to greater efficiency among the men and improvement of the service. The adoption of battalion formations for infantry regiments, the strengthening of the artillery force, the abandonment of smaller and unnecessary posts and the massing of the troops at important and accessible stations all promise to promote the usefulness of the army.

Coast Defenses.

It is gratifying to note that we have begun to attain complex results in the comprehensive scheme of sea coast defense and fortification entered upon eight years ago. A large sum has been already expended, but the cost of maintenance will be inconsiderable as compared with the expense of construction, and ordnance. At the end of the current calendar year the war department will have nine 12-inch guns, 20 10-inch and 34 8-inch guns ready to be mounted on gun lifts and carriages and 75 12-inch mortars. In addition to the product of the army gun factory now complete at Watervliet, the government has contracted with private parties for the purchase of 100 guns of these calibres, the first of which should be delivered to the department for test before July 1, 1894. The manufacture of heavy ordinance keeps pace with current needs; but to render these guns available for the purposes they are designed to meet, emplacements must be prepared for them. Progress has been made in this direction, and it is desirable that congress by adequate appropriations should provide for the uninterrupted prosecution of this necessary work.

Infantry Equipment.

After much preliminary work and exhaustive examination in accordance with the requirements of law, the board appointed to select a magazine rifle of modern type to replace the obsolete Springfield rifle of the infantry service, completed its labors during the last year, and the work of manufacture is now in progress at the national armory at Springfield. It is confidently expected that by the end of the current year our infantry will be supplied with a weapon equal to that of the most progressive armies of the world.

Chickamauga and Gettysburg.

The work on the projected Chickamauga and Chattanooga national military park has been prosecuted with zeal and judgment, and its opening will be celebrated during the coming year. Over nine square miles of the Chickamauga battlefield have been acquired, 25 miles of roadway have been constructed and permanent tablets have been placed at many historical points, while the invitation to the states to mark the positions of their troops participating in the battle has been very generally accepted. The work of locating and preserving the lines of battle at the Gettysburg battlefield is making satisfactory progress on the plans directed by the last congress.

The reports of the military academy at West Point and the several schools for special instruction of officers show marked advance in education of the army and a commendable ambition among its officers to excel in the military profession and to fit themselves for the highest service to the country under the supervision of the adjutant.

CIVIL SERVICE.

The President More Than Ever Impressed With Its Benefits.

The continued intelligent execution of the civil service law, and the increasing approval by the people of its operation are most gratifying. The recent extension of its limitation and regulations to the employes at free delivery postoffices which has been honestly and promptly accomplished by the commission with the hearty cooperation of the postmaster general is an immensely important advance in the usefulness of the system.

I am, if possible, more than ever convinced of the incalculable benefits conferred by the civil service law, not only in its effect upon the public service, but also what is even more important, in its effect in elevating the tone of political life generally.

TARIFF REFORM.

The President Wants Tariff Reduction at Once.

At this time, when a depleted public treasury confronts us, when many of our people are engaged in a hard struggle for the necessaries of life and when enforced economy is pressing upon the great mass of our countrymen, I desire to urge with all the earnestness at my command that congressional legislation be so limited by strict economy as to exhibit an appreciation of the condition of the treasury and a sympathy with the strained circumstances of our fellow citizens.

The duty of public economy is also of immense importance in its intimate and necessary relation to the task now in hand of providing revenue to meet government expenditures and yet reducing the people's burden of federal taxation.

After a Hard Struggle tariff reform is directly before us. Nothing so important claims our attention and nothing so clearly presents itself as both an opportunity and a duty—an opportunity to deserve the gratitude of our fellow citizens, a duty imposed upon us by our oft repeated professions and by the emphatic mandate of the people. After full discussion our countrymen have spoken in favor of this reform and they have confided the work of its accomplishment in the hands of those who are Solemnly Pledged to it.

If there is anything in the theory of a representation in public places of the people and their desires; if public officers are really the servants of the people, and its political promises and professions have any binding force, our failure to give the relief so long awaited will be sheer recreancy. Nothing should intervene to distract our attention or disturb our effort until this reform is accomplished by wise and careful legislation.

Discriminating Care Necessary.

While we should staunchly adhere to the principle that only the necessity of revenue justifies the imposition of tariff duties and other federal taxation, and that they should be limited by strict economy, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that conditions have grown up among us which in justice and fairness call for discriminating care in the distribution of such duties and taxation as the emergencies of our government actually demand.

Manifestly if we are to aid the people directly through tariff reform one of its most obvious features should be a reduction in the present tariff charges

Upon the Necessaries of Life.

The benefits of such a reduction would be palpable and substantial, seen and felt by thousands who would be better fed and better clothed and better sheltered. These gifts should be the willing benefactions of a government whose highest function is the promotion of the welfare of the people. Not less closely related to our people's prosperity and well-being is the removal of restrictions upon the importation of the raw materials necessary to our manufacturers. The world should be open to our national ingenuity and enterprise. This cannot be while federal legislation, through the imposition of high tariff, forbids to American manufacturers as cheap material as those used by their competitors. It is quite obvious that the enhancement of the price of our manufactured products resulting from this policy not only confines the market for these products within our own borders, to the direct disadvantage of our manufacturers, but also increases their cost to our citizens.

The Interests of Labor

are certainly though indirectly involved in this feature of our tariff system. The sharp competition and active struggle among our manufacturers to supply the limited demand for their goods soon fills the narrow market to which they are confined. Then follows a suspension of work in mills and factories, a discharge of employes, and distress in the homes of our workingmen. Even if the often disproved assertion could be made good that a lower rate of wages would result from free raw materials and low tariff, does not the intelligence of our workingmen lead them quickly to discover that their steady employment permitted by free raw materials is the most important factor in their relation to tariff legislation?

Wilson Bill Commended.

A measure has been prepared by the appropriate congressional committee embodying tariff reform on the lines herein suggested, which will be promptly submitted for legislative action. It is the result of much patriotic and unselfish work, and I believe it deals with its subject consistently and thoroughly as existing conditions permit. I am satisfied that the reduced tariff duties provided for in the proposed legislation, added to existing internal revenue taxation, will in the near future, though perhaps not immediately, produce sufficient revenue to meet the needs of the government.

The Tax on Corporations.

The committee, after full consideration and to provide for a temporary deficiency, which may exist before the business of the country adjusts itself to the new tariff schedules, have wisely embraced in their plan a few additional internal revenue taxes, including a small tax upon incomes derived from certain corporate investments. These new assessments are not only absolutely just and easily borne, but they have the further merit of being such as can be remitted without unfavorable disturbance whenever the necessity of their imposition no longer exists.

In my great desire for the success of this measure I cannot restrain the suggestion that its success can only be obtained by means of unselfish counsel on the part of the friends of tariff reform and as a result of their willingness to subordinate personal desires and ambitions to the general good. The local interests affected by the proposed reform are so numerous and so varied that if all are insisted upon the legislation embodying the reform must inevitably fail.

In Conclusion.

In conclusion, my intense feeling of responsibility impels me to invoke for the manifold interests of a generous and confiding people the most scrupulous care, and to pledge my willing support to every legislative effort for the advancement of the greatness and prosperity of our beloved country.

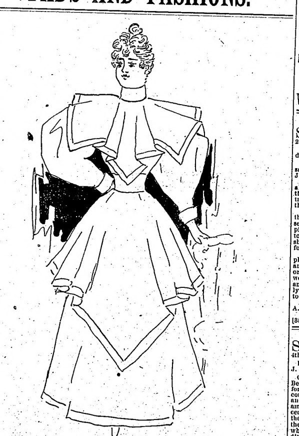
FADS AND FASHIONS.



3,900.

An Overskirt Costume.

THIS handsome and novel costume is in "handkerchief" fashion and is altogether very chic and unusual. Back and front are exactly alike as regards the collar, or shoulder cape, and the overskirt.

It is one of the simplest creations ever designed in the way of a gown and is suitable for any material, although heavy weight, smooth-faced stuffs make up the most satisfactorily.

The skirt is simply a four-gored affair, and the bodice is in two parts drawn over a fitted lining. The belt is a straight, wide band and the sleeves are leg-o'-mutton style.

Both overskirt and collar fasten in the back.

Cape and overskirt pattern No. 3900 is cut in 7 sizes, for ladies from 28 to 40 inches bust measure, and requires, for the medium size, 3⅛ yards material 44 inches wide. Price 25 cents.

These patterns are for sale by the McCall Co., New York. The JOURNAL will procure them for any lady reader who may desire them.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court. General term December 4th, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of the estate of J. G. Meen deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Martin Benson administrator of said estate setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof; the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to him granted to sell all of the real estate of which said deceased died seized. And it appearing by said petition that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before this court on Tuesday, the 9th day of January, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate office in the City of Crookston in said County, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said Martin Benson administrator aforesaid to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies or expenses.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, Minn., in said County.

Dated at Crookston, the 4th day of December, A. D., 1893.

By the Court, C. M. BENSON, Judge of Probate.

THOUSANDS SUFFERING.

What an Investigation in the Michigan Iron Regions Showed.

ASHLAND, Wis., Dec. 1.—So much has been lately written and said about the destitute condition of miners and their families in the upper peninsula of Michigan that a reporter has taken pains to personally investigate the situation in Gogebic and Iron counties. The first impression made upon his mind was that the condition of things had not been exaggerated—indeed the whole truth has not yet been fully told. A conservative estimate of the number of destitute people in the locality named is placed at 5,000, but the real number is at least 1,000 more if one is to believe the statements of intelligent residents in each precinct, and the evidence of his own eyes.

Half Are Destitute.

Over one half of the people in Gogebic county are practically impoverished and a charge upon the public. Richard H. Mertz of Gladstone wired that he would ship some provisions at once. The state employes at Lansing have contributed a liberal collection and The Morning Democrat of Grand Rapids has collected and shipped a full carload of provisions. Yet these contributions are merely only one drop in the bucket, but it is hoped that the generosity of the charitable will keep pace with the demands of the starving stomachs. There is more suffering in Ironwood than in Hurley, simply because there are more people to hunger, and, besides, they have just emerged from an almost unprecedent seige of typhoid fever.

POWDERLY IS OUT.

His Resignation as Master Workman of the K. of L. Accepted—His Successor.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 28.—James R. Sovereign of Iowa was elected general master workman of the Knights of Labor during the afternoon by a vote of 23 to 3, James Campbell of Pittsburg being his opponent. Mr. Sovereign is the third man to hold the office of general master workman in the order since its organization in 1869, Mr. Stephens and Mr. Powderly being the two others.

Mr. Powderly's resignation was accepted by a vote of 23 to 13.

Powderly's Successor at Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 1.—General Master Workman James R. Sovereign of the Knights of Labor arrived here at 8:30 p. m. He is at the Windsor hotel where he was received by Worthy Foreman Bishop and H. B. Martin of the general executive board. Mr. Sovereign declined to say anything further than that he would assume his duties at once.

The state auditor has issued warrants in payments for the bounty for tree planting at the rate of $2.50 per acre. There are 2,084 farmers entitled to warrants, and the total amount of the payment is $16,703.31. The largest amount paid in one county is $3,684.47, which is the share of Renville county.

The St. Paul Globe says a sensational rumor is current that J. H. Burke will sue the Guaranty Loan company for $1,000,000 on account of books and papers alleged to have been stolen in Chicago and which are said to contain incriminating evidence against men charged with crookedness in Guaranty Loan deals.

GRAIN INSPECTION.

Extracts From the Report of Chief Inspector Clausen.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 4.—The annual report of the grain inspection department of the railroad and warehouse commission has just been completed. The report is of unusual interest, as it embodies some results of the working of the grain law of 1893. Mr. Clausen refers to the operation of the law as wholly beneficial. The report embraces the transactions of the department for the year ending Aug. 31, 1893.

The receipts of grain, which have been subject to inspection during the season just closed, have been as follows: At Minneapolis, 100,165 cars of wheat, 4,129 cars of corn, 4,689 cars of oats, 552 cars of rye, 3,949 cars of barley, 1,345 cars of flax; total, 115,279 cars. At Duluth, 65,741 cars of wheat, 493 cars of corn 235 cars of oats, 131 cars of rye, 146 cars of barley, 579 cars of flax; total, 67,325 cars. At St. Paul, 990 cars of wheat, 251 cars of corn, 922 cars of oats, 8 cars of rye, 100 cars of barley, 229 cars of flax; total, 2,500 cars. At St. Cloud, 1,241 cars of wheat, making a grand total of 186,345 cars of all kinds of grain or 123,107,050 bushels.

At the beginning of the last crop year the inspection fees were reduced to 15 cents per car, and that fact, in connection with the small business of the year, has resulted in a deficit. The inspector recommends that the inspection rates be raised to the old basis.

A MOTHER.

Could I but have my baby back again
From the dim vastness of the great unknown,
How would it ease my poor heart's silent pain
As I sit here in shadow and alone!

That heaven is vast but makes me more afraid,
Who shall its hesitating footsteps guide?
Far cozier the nest my love had made,
Or so my heart feels, since my baby died.

Cold was the night it left my bosom warm—
A night of wintry tempest harsh and wild!
Into that world of darkness and of storm
Went forth alone my little toddling child.

I say alone, for who hears angels' feet
Pause at the threshold, though we dream they come?
We hear not even death, the robber fleet!
We only know a void is in our home.

Mother! the very name is sorrow's own,
A synonym for heartache and for trial;
'Tis she must tread the wine press all alone,
And when the tears would start must wear a smile.

What is the faith of priest, of Christian brother,
Of mitered bishop, though they kiss the rod?
Weak seems their worship when a trusting mother
Yields up her pretty, smiling babe to God.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, November 27th, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Louis Huot, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Godus Huot, administrator, setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained, with the charges of administration; and the taxes, assessments and other charges which are an existing lien upon his estate, and the improvements which are necessary for the preservation of his real estate; and a description of the tracts of land of said deceased which it is proposed to mortgage; and praying that license be to him granted to mortgage the tracts of land so described.

And it appearing by said petition that the personal estate of said Louis Huot, deceased, is insufficient to pay his debts, with the charges of administration, and to pay any taxes, assessments or other charges which are an existing lien upon his estate, or to pay for any improvements which are necessary for the preservation of his real estate, or any part thereof.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before this court on Monday, the 8th day of January, A. D. 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in the city of Crookston, in said county, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said Godus Huot, administrator, to mortgage the said real estate of said deceased for the purpose of obtaining funds for the payment of such debts, charges, taxes, assessments and liens, and for the making of such necessary improvements.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspapre printed at published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 27th day of November, A. D. 1893.

TARIFF COMES FIRST.

WILSON BILL TO HAVE RIGHT OF WAY IN THE HOUSE.

It Will Probably Be Introduced on Thursday — Debate on the Measure, However, Will Not Commence This Week.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Interest in the regular session of congress, which convened at high noon, will center in the house wing of the capitol, where the new tariff bill is on the way. An enormous pressure for legislation of all kinds, public and private, beneficial and otherwise, will exist from the first, but as soon as the decks can be cleared the tariff bill will have the right of way. The extraordinary session showed the purpose not only of eliminating the silver question, but advancing the tariff problem four months on the road to solution. The Wilson bill will be introduced in the house the latter part of the week, probably Thursday. On that day the 10 days allowed by the rule under which the tariff bill was filed during the recess will expire. The to be derived from the tariff bill are completed. They show that the deficit in the revenues on the basis of a governmental expenditure of $955,000,000 a year will be raised to $65,000,000, which might be raised from increased internal revenue taxes or an income tax. It is not probable that the tax on whisky will be increased more than 10 cents per gallon, which will increase the revenue from this source $10,000,000. Although it was at one time last week practically decided in an informal way to impose a tax on the incomes of corporations and legacies, there has been a change of sentiment and it is almost certain that a straight tax on individual incomes over $5,000 will be recommended. Even if the Wilson bill is reported this week, it is not expected debate can begin until next week.

THE ELECTIONS LAW.

Bill for Its Repeal Will Be Early Taken Up in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The bill for the repeal of the general elections law is expected to receive the attention of the senate at an early day, but whether the subject will be taken up on the bill now on the calendar, which was introduced by Senator Hill early in the extra session and reported by the judiciary committee, or whether the senate will elect to wait until the committee can consider and report upon the bill which passed the house, cannot be stated. It is not now believed that the subject will give rise to prolonged debate, but that Republicans senators will content themselves with putting on record their protests.

Van Alen Declines.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—J. J. Van Alen, recently appointed ambassador to Italy by President Cleveland and over whose confirmation quite a fight was made in the senate, has declined the office. Mr. Van Alen said his reason for declining was the charge made in the public press that he received the appointment in return for a contribution of $50,000 to the Democratic campaign fund. He admits making the contribution, but did so without selfish motives and without expecting reward. Self-respect, he says, now compels him to decline.

Croker to Retire.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—The World says: A rumor has been current in the inner circles of Tammany Hall for several days past that Richard Croker has resolved to give up his leadership of that organization and retire from politics. The change, it is said, will be made when the new committees for 1894 are made up in January. Mr. Croker, the rumor says, has grown tired of his leadership, and feels that he has borne the burden long enough. Besides, he is rich, and desires to devote all his attention in the future to his racing and stock raising interests.

These Attracted Attention.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The recommendations relative to an international monetary conference and the request for further authority for the issue of bonds caused many significant shakes of the head on the part of extreme silver men. The president's bold endorsement of the pension policy of the interior department, of civil service reform and his appeal for rigid economy in appropriations also attracted attention.

Polled On the Income Tax.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—A morning paper prints opinions of 171 members of congress on the subject of taxing incomes. Of these 71 favor an income tax in some form, 62 oppose it, 5 are against it, but may reconsider, while 33 asked to be excused from expressing an opinion.

Women Can Vote.

DENVER, Dec. 4.—The state canvassing board completed its work during the morning. The count shows that woman suffrage was carried by 6,347 majority. Governor Waite, in accordance with the above, issued a proclamation giving them the right to vote at all elections in this state.

Jerry Rusk's Will.

VIROQUA, Wis., Nov. 29.—The will of ex-Secretary Rusk was presented for probate in the Vernon county court. The estate is valued at $50,000. The entire property is to be sold at the discretion of the executors and the proceeds divided among the family, the widow taking one-half.

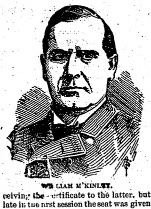
Unusually Reticent.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—An effort to learn from the officials on duty in the treasury department whether the revenue cutter Corwin has been turned over to the state department to convey messages to Minister Willis meets with but little success. An unusual amount of reticence is manifested in connection with the subject.

PROTECTION'S CHAMPION.

A Brief Biography of Governor William McKinley.

William McKinley of Canton, O., was born at Niles, O., Feb. 26, 1844, and is now therefore in his fiftieth year. He enlisted in the United States army in May, 1861, as a private soldier in the Twenty-third Ohio Volunteer infantry, and was mustered out as captain of the same regiment and brevet major in September, 1865. He was prosecuting attorney of Stark county, O., from 1869 to 1871. He was elected to the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth congresses, receiving the certificate to the latter, but late in the first session the seat was given by the house to his opponent. He was elected to the Forty-ninth and re-elected to the Fiftieth congress as a Republican, receiving 18,776 votes against 16,217 votes for Phelps, the Democratic candidate. He was first elected governor of Ohio in November, 1891, by a majority of 21,511 votes over Campbell, the Democratic candidate, assuming that office on Jan. 8, 1892, his term expiring on Jan. 8, 1894. His re-election on Nov. 7 continues Hon. William McKinley as governor of the Buckeye State until Jan. 8, 1896. The overwhelming majority by which he defeated the free trade candidate, Larry Neal, is a firm protest from the people of Ohio against the carrying out of the Democratic free trade plank of the Chicago platform. Ohio will have protection. What is good for Ohio is equally good for other states.



WILLIAM M'KINLEY.

Manufacturers Not Hampered.

American manufacturers are now in no way hampered in the matter of raw material. This is proved by the fact that under the McKinley law our imports of foreign wool were much greater than ever before. We imported foreign raw wool, during the year ending June 30, 1893, in round figures over 168,000,000 pounds, an increase of 32 per cent over the heaviest imports of any one year under the previous tariff law. The cost of this wool to the American manufacturer was less, including duties, than it had ever been before. Now, with the larger quantities of wool imported, and with its cost lessened, wherein is there any ground for the statement that the American woolen manufacturer is handicapped in the matter of raw material? Besides, the McKinley law provides that exported goods made of imported wool shall entitle the exporter to a return of all such duties paid on such raw material, save 1 per cent. Thus, for export purposes, the American manufacturer has free raw material. Now, why don't he export his cloth? Because the labor he employs costs from two to three times the labor of his foreign free trade competitor, making his product more costly. Our imports of manufactures of wool under the McKinley law have practically not increased at all, and the great increase in our imports of raw material (wool) shows that protection, as adjusted by the McKinley law, has stimulated woolen manufacturing in the United States to such an extent and to have increased the American market for wool so greatly that the American mills have required not only all of the American clip, none of which is exported, but in addition have had to import over 168,000,000 pounds of foreign wool to supply their needs, and this has been done without in any manner increasing the cost of clothing to our people. If there has been any change, the cost of a suit of clothing today under the McKinley law is lower than ever before in the history of the country.—Theodore Justice of Philadelphia.

A Free Trade Lesson.

A very large dry goods house (H. B. Claflin & Co.) of New York has just issued its regular dividend notice to stockholders, and takes occasion to refer to the good free trade times promised by the party now in power, as follows: "For the months of July, August and September our sales were over 30 per cent less than those of the corresponding months of 1892, and they are now improving but slowly." Naturally a large house, carrying a large stock of goods that needs constant care and attention, cannot curtail its expenses in a day, but that will come later when the stock of goods is smaller. The stockholders have been prepared for this:

"It is not possible to reduce expenses to a considerable extent until December, and it is therefore evident to us that we cannot hope to do more than to earn dividends on our preferred stock for the current half year."

Much of the common stock in this company is held by the employees, who thus anticipate an absence of dividends and a possible loss of positions after December. A surplus fund has enabled the declaration of a present dividend at 6 per cent instead of at the former rate of 9 per cent, but the outlook is decidedly gloomy. It is rather a remarkable fact that many of the employees of this house were free traders, who voted the free trade ticket at last year's election, although earning their living and holding stock in a company whose business was dependent upon protection.—American Economist.

The only Tolleff, from Grove Park, was doing a bit of Thanksgiving business in the city on Friday and Saturday of last week. It always seemed to us that Thanksgiving celebrations require a somewhat different style than is customary on Fourth of July.

While it is undoubtedly true that this country never saw quite so close times as the present fall has been it is said that other localities are suffering far worse. While this is not a matter to gloat over it is consoling to think that we do not live in the worst country in the world. It is by comparison, sometimes that our lot is rendered endurable.

In charging the Grand Jury, Monday Judge Ives instructed them to look into the matter of the care of prisoners in the county jail, as there had been complaints made to him in regard to the manner in which prisoners were treated, especially the insufficiency of food supplied them. Some of these complaints, he said, came from outside counties.

A farmer from some town in North Dakota passed through this city some ten days ago, with a dozen or so good young horses bound for Bagley's lumber-camp where he intended to engage with his teams for the winter. When he arrived he found he could not hire to Mr. B., who made the excuse that the horses were all too young for lumbering purposes and after he had in vain sought for employment elsewhere, he offered to let Mr. B. have them until spring for their keep, but Mr. B. could find no use for them even on these terms. Team work must be exceedingly cheap in the woods this winter, and we are told that lots of men are working just for their board.

E. M. Walsh: I think the Canadian Pacific will undoubtedly extend the Duluth & Winnipeg road into the Red River valley, and the citizens here should get together and place before the directors the advantages of an extension to Crookston. Grand Forks is already agitating the matter of presenting her claims, and we should also get a move on, for we ought to have that road.

John McLean: I tell you that if the Canadian Pacific railway should extend the Duluth & Winnipeg road into the Red River valley and across North Dakota to the Soo Line, on the route proposed for the Crookston, Fort Stevenson and Montana railway, they will get the cream of this country. The road would run through a country which is thickly settled, and well developed, but lacks a railroad. They could carry wheat from this country to Duluth for six cents a bushel and coin money.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, onta na' Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

DISTRICT COURT

Convened in the City Monday for the Regular December Term.

Ninety-two Cases on the Calendar—A Long Term Will Probably Result.

District Court convened promptly at 11 o'clock Monday morning to begin the regular December term.

The Crookston bar was present, also some outside legal lights, among whom were; W. H. Averill, Fosston; E. D. Jackson, Minneapolis; M. A. Brattland, Ada; and Mr. Bacon of Minneapolis.

The court room presented a very pleasant and agreeable appearance the walls handsomely and artistically papered, the floor cleanly scrubbed, and the room heated by steam supplied from the steam plant in the jail. The county commissioners deserve the thanks of the court, the officers and the attorneys for this much-needed improvement.

The calling of the Grand Jury found nineteen present of the twenty-three summoned. After the court had instructed them as to their duty, W. A. Marin was appointed foreman and they entered upon the work before them.

Counting the cases moved on the calendar, there are eighty-four civil and eight criminal cases. From present appearances it looks as though this would be an extraordinary long term.

The county attorney requested the dismissal of the cases of State vs. Robert Ridley and P. J. Horan, State vs. Ole Dahl, and State vs. Herrick. The complaining witness failed to appear and prosecute the cases. Herrick and Ridley were confined in jail. The request was granted.

The afternoon session was partly consumed in the argument of ex-parte motions.

The jury having been summoned for the first day of court instead of the third, as ordered by the court, no one was ready for trial, as the attorneys had notified their clients not to appear until Wednesday.

Miss E. Veronneau wishes to announce to her lady friends that she is making sacrifice sales to reduce stock. She has decided to sell her entire stock of fall and winter millinery and has therefore marked the goods at prices that are bound to sell. Call and see her stock before you purchase. It will pay you.

Lane's Medicine moves the bowels each day. In order to be healthy this is necessary.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in De Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of that state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

The promptness with which Ayer's Cherry Pectoral stops a hacking cough and induces refreshing sleep is something marvelous. It never fails to give instant relief, even in the worst cases of throat and lung trouble, and is the best remedy for whooping cough.

When on a visit to Iowa, Mr. K. Dalton, of Luray, Russell county, Kansas, called at the laboratory of Chamberlain & Co., Des Moines, to show them his six year old boy, whose life had been saved by Chamberlain's Cough remedy, it having cured him of a very severe attack of croup. Mr. Dalton is certain that it saved his boy's life and is enthusiastic in his praise of the remedy. For sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

For pity's sake, don't growl and grumble because you are troubled with indigestion. No good was ever affected by snarling and fretting. Be a man (unless you happen to be a woman), and take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which will relieve you, whether man or woman.

For a sore throat there is nothing better than a flannel bandage dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It will nearly always effect a cure in one night's time. This remedy is also a favorite for rheumatism and has cured many very severe cases. 50 cent bottle for sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

By Wits Outwitted

A refined comedy which has been such a pronounced success in all the eastern cities, will be seen at the opera house Friday evening, December 8th. The comedy fairly sparkles with witticisms. The audience is kept in continual laughter by the brilliancy of the repartee in which it abounds, as well as the many prevalent ludicrous situations. It is a play which appeals to the intellect of the better classes. The company is composed of a list of well known players who give a masterly interpretation of this exceptionally funny comedy.

Mr. J. C. Boswell, one of the best known and most respected citizens of Brownwood, Texas, suffered with diarrhœa for a long time and tried many different remedies without benefit, until Chamberlain's colic, cholera, and diarrhœa remedy was used; that relieved him at once. For sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

"By Wits Out-witted" is a sparkling comedy whose plot and situations are so good that it seems impossible that the play can be new at the Grand opera house, Friday December 8th.

Low Rates to the Coast.

The Northern Pacific railroad has just put into effect a series of low round-trip rates to Pacific coast points. These California tickets are good until April 30th, 1894, and are good for stop over points under certain conditions.

These rates will enable those desiring so to do, to spend the winter in Southern California, or to visit the Mid-winter Fair to be held at San Francisco. This latter event will undoubtedly be second only to the World's Fair just closed, and will repay a visit, as it will exhibit the resources and capabilities of California.

St. Paul, Minneapolis & Duluth to Northern Pacific coast points and return $65.50; to San Francisco and return to Missouri river, $80.50 to Los Angeles and return to Missouri river $90.00.

DISTRICT COURT

The Doings of the Court, in Detail, Since Our Last Issue.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 6TH.

The first jury case to be called was that of Inge Skjegstad vs Carl F. Hasselton, Messrs. Vaule and Watts counsel for plaintiff and B. S. Bennet of Fosston and E. M. Stanton counsel for defendant. This was an action to recover damage for trespass and assault, the trespass made on plaintiff's land by defendant driving a binder on part of the plaintiff's wheat, and the assault made by defendant on the person of the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued for $600 damage. It seemed to be a sort of nationality squabble. The plaintiff, a very small Norwegian, declared in his testimony in relating what took place when he interviewed the defendant and warned him not to return over his field again, that he would shoot the whole outfit. The defendant, a Swede, retorted that he would have to pay for it if he did. The plaintiff thereupon stated that he would rather go to states prison than to live among Swedish—of—. The jury returned a verdict for defendant, finding him not guilty of the charge.

A jury was drawn in the case of Elsie Stuhr vs Henry Oesterloh. This was an action to recover from defendant for not plowing ten acres of land cropped for plaintiff and for mustard claimed to have been brought on the farm, and a share of the wheat grown on the land owned by Mrs. Stuhr, which plaintiff claimed she never received.

The jury brought in a sealed verdict Thursday morning for $25 for plaintiff. Upon motion of the county attorney, the case of State of Minnesota vs Gunsten Jorgenson for selling intoxicating liquor without license was dismissed.

The grand jury brought in two verdicts; one against John G. Reeve for forgery in the second degree; he having forged an order on E. Taylor & Co., of Euclid for $48.57. The defendant stood up and pleaded guilty of the charge, and was sentenced to the state reformatory at St. Cloud. She second indictment was against E. P. O'Brien; the offense being grand larceny in the second degree. The crime was committed in the town of Tilden and the goods taken consisted of gloves and other goods, and belonged to Shaw, Carlson & Co.

On Thursday morning the case of Levi Steenerson Myers vs Carrie Melland was taken up immediately after convening. The plaintiff sued to recover for lumber furnished the defendant and Mrs. Katie Twite for a combination house they built in Fosston. Amount of bill $252. Defendant claims that all the bill except about $40 or $50 should not be against her, but against Mrs. Twite who used it in the construction of her portion of the house. Verdict for plaintiff for $14.92. Mr. Averill and E. M. Stanton for plaintiff and Vaule and Wm. Watts for defendant.

The case of Daniel Scully vs Town of Gentilly came on for trial at the afternoon session. Montague & Bucklen for plaintiff, and A. A. Miller for defendant. This is quite an important case and will take some time to try. The plaintiff sues to recover for damages sustained by reason of the Town of Gentilly consrtucting a grade road alongside his land and causing the water to flow over about 50 acres of his land. The damage to this land has continued from year to year since 1887 and '88. The total damage claimed up to date is $1200.

The grand jury returned an indictment against one Thos. Maroney of grand larceny in the second degree. The defendant is charged with having stolen on October 28th last, from Robert Bain, of Fisher, one gold watch and some other articles valued at $12. He pleaded guilty and will go to Stillwater for eight months. The grand jury recommended that the court make the sentence eight.

Friday morning the Scully case was resumed, and by five o'clock p. m. the evidence was all in. From that time to the time for adjournment being insufficient for the counsels to argue the case to the jury, it was laid over until Saturday morning and the case of Aultman, Miller & Co., vs John Ellingson, was taken up. This was an appeal from justice court. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover $48, the price of a mower, which the defendant got three or four years ago from the company's agent, Melquiss, of Fisher, to take as a sample to his farm and there sell some mowers, binders and twine to his neighbors. He was to receive a certain sum for each mower and binder and for every pound of twine sold. The defendant sold several binders and mowers and some twine, returning the orders to the agent at Fisher. The Fisher agent skipped the country. The company sued the defendant for the binder and got judgment in justice court. The defendant appeals and sets up a counter claim for commission on the goods sold. The case was short and the jury brought in a verdict for defendant for $110.81.

Saturday morning the Scully case was again resumed and given the jury for their final decision in this court. They did not deliberate long and brought in a verdict of $300 for the plaintiff.

In the afternoon the case of Geo. H. Rodenbach vs Fontaine & Anglim was called. This case was before the court last May term and was dismissed on motion to amend the complaint, and after proceeding with the plaintiff's evidence this time it was dismissed on motion of defense, on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to establish his cause of action. This was a case to recover $117 claimed to be due him from defendant on account of the co-operative plan upon which they worked during the time plaintiff worked for defendants.

Waller Bros. vs T. O. Midboe, dismissed on motion of plaintiff. And Waller Bros. vs P. O. Skaalrud also dismissed on motion of plaintiff.

Case of John Swenson vs Martin Swanson, settled.

Charley Menson vs E. N. Grunhood dismissed by consent of both parties.

Case of P. Walling vs Chas. E. Boughton moved on calendar and the judgment of the lower court affirmed against defendant and his sureties.

The case of Wm. H. Holey vs Wm. Holey moved on calendar by plaintiff and judgment below affirmed against defendant and his sureties on appeal bond.

Case of Geo. W. Peake vs Sven Morvin put on calendar and judgment of lower court affirmed against appellant and his sureties.

The civil cases on the calendar to begin with and the number of appeals moved on run the number up to 101 at this time, Saturday afternoon.

MONDAY, 11TH.

Court convened at 9 o'clock. A jury was called in the case of John N. Burgess vs. the Northern Pacific Railroad company. The plaintiff brought suit to recover damages which he alleges he received by being thrown from a flat car on May 14th, 1890, while in the employ of the company. Two flat cars were loaded with long bridge timbers; the train was switching at the Y south of Crookston, and in attempting to set the brake on said car, or after he thought he had it set and was just in the act of leaving it, the brake loosened, flew back and threw him over the end of the bumpers to the ground, causing as he claims, permanent injury to his left knee. The brake is claimed to have been loose and defective. He sued for $2,000. After plaintiff's evidence was all in the case was dismissed on motion of defendant on the ground that there was no evidence to show negligence on the part of defendant, and that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. H. Steenerson for plaintiff, and Wm. Watts and W. P. Miller for defendant. Sixty days stay granted plaintiff.

C. L. Couvrette vs. A. P. Anderson Continued.

Case of Nelson Soland vs. John P. Ripple. Settled.

Case of A. L. Elford vs. James W. Craig. Appeal from Justice court. Judgment of the court below reversed and judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed.

Case of David Stellman vs. Levi Steenerson. Dismissed with cost to plaintiff.

The case of Julia Larson vs. Hunt & McClatchie was settled by stipulation.

A jury was called in the case of Katie Marin vs. Duluth, Crookston & Northern and N. P. R. R. Co. This is another one of those cases in which the defendant is charged for damming, and in this case the charge is $2,000. The defendants in building their road across defendant's farm in town of Fairfax, in Sec. 25, is claimed to have dammed the water that ran down a branch of Burnham's creek and flooded plaintiff's land. After calling the jury and opening the case court adjourned until 9 a. m. Tuesday morning.

Court convened Tuesday morning soon after 9 o'clock and began work under difficulties. When the jury took their places they kept on their overcoats and were allowed to keep on their hats to keep their heads warm. Even the blood of the counsels was too cold to get up a scrap, try as best they could. The words of the witnesses grew cold before the reporter could record them. Finally the voice of the Court breaks through the frosty air: "Gentlemen, we will adjourn until this place gets warm enough to hold court in." But at the request of counsel the time of adjournment was fixed at 2 o'clock p. m. No objections being heard the order was obeyed.

The multiplicity and excellence of other magazines, far from lessening the usefulness of the Review of Reviews, makes this unique periodical more and more a necessity. Its indexes, condensations of leading articles, classified lists of new books, and general survey of things written things said, and things done during the month preceding, its issue, would suffice to keep the busy reader in touch with the current of life and thought, even if he were able to read nothing else. The December number is as full of variety and freshness as its predecessors have regularly been; and to those who know the Review of Reviews this is a sufficient commendation.

SNUFFED OUT.

A Policeman's Gun Ushers Andrew Thompson From Time Into Eternity in an Instant.

On Friday morning of last week, Andrew Thompson, who with three others had been sent from East Grand Forks to the county jail for stealing the camp outfit from Ole Bang's wood-camp, was released on a writ of habeas corpus. Friday evening he got full and raised a disturbance in Martin Halla's saloon. Mr. Halla went after a policeman returning shortly with patrolman H. N. Tweten but Thompson had "lit oat" and the officer did not find him until about 11 o'clock when he discovered him skulking about the Great Northern depot, arrested him and put him in the lock-up. About 11:30 Tweten came back to the lock-up found everything all right and went away to attend to his duties about town returning about 12:30 when he discovered that Thompson and several others had escaped. He at once commenced to search for the escaped prisoners and later on he went down to the Great Northern depot, where tramps are wont to put up for the night. Trying the door of the gentlemen's waiting room, it did not open readily and appeared to be locked. He then went around to the east-side, lit a match and looking into the room, saw a number of men, some lying on benches and others sitting near the stove. Raising up the window he climbed in and going up to the ticket window he turned on the electric light and began to look for his man. He soon discovered a man that he supposed to be Thompson, lying on a bench, with a big slouch hat partly covering his face and slipping up in front of him said: "Come with me." The man paid no attention further than to open his eyes and look at Tweten, who then saw that it was the man he wanted and he again spoke, saying; "You broke jail this evening and I want you; come with me." The man said not a word but arose as if to go along but no sooner had he gained his feet than in a flash he sprang upon the officer seized him by the neck and before the officer could realize just what had happened he was on the floor and being vigorously choked and every thing began to get black. He was in such a position that he could not have used his club even if he could have got it, so with his right hand he secured his revolver, a 38 self-cocker, and raising his hand above his head fired at random the ball striking Thompson in the left temple, about a half inch over the left eye. With a groan the man relaxed his hold upon the officer's neck and fell upon him; rolling him off the officer struggled to his feet and, seeing the man was dangerously hurt he got out of the window and went and reported to Chief Gonyea, who told him to go and get Dr. Watts and bring him to the depot. The chief went to the depot and soon Tweten and the doctor arrived; this was about 1:30 a. m. and the man lived about 5 minutes afterward. The corner was notified and by his order the body was taken to Wyatt's undertaking rooms and officer Tweten went home under arrest, by order of the chief. On Saturday Coroner Shepard impanelled a jury consisting of F. L. Durand, Louis Fontaine, T. H. Bjoin, C. F. Lindell, Anton Erickson and F. W. Markman. The jury was taken to the undertaking rooms and sworn, examined the body and went to city hall to examine witnesses. Dr. Watts testified as to the fact of examining the wound and the nature thereof. Thomas Thompson testified as to what happened at the depot. Said that Andrew Thompson came to the depot about 12:30, somewhat intoxicated and told how that he had just broke out of the lock-up where he had been put for striking Martin Halla. After a little he laid down on a bench and went to sleep; about one o'clock I heard some one come and try the door, and he went to the window, struck a match and then raised the window and came in; the lights were turned down the man went up to the ticket window and turned up one then commenced to look about at the men; soon I saw the struggle had commenced, Thompson seemed to be pushing the officer backward and downward; I got out of the way so that they should not fall on me; then the gun went off and I was excited; I saw the officer leap out of the window and heard him say: "That's what you will get if you monkey with me;" I then went out on the platform; the door was not locked then and had not been; It opens hard; I had to push on it hard when I came in. To a question as to whether he had any personal spite against the officer he said he could not say that he had in particular, the officer had arrested him many times but he could not say just how many. Was not a particular "pard" of A. Thompson's; knew him in Brainerd last winter and was with him some just before this event. I think he was 25 or 26 years old.

J. F. Moran swore as to condition of door at the depot. Said he was a Great Northern employe, that the door opens hard requiring some effort to open. A man could easily suppose it was locked.

W. G. Johnson, an entire stranger in the city, said that he was a Great Northern employe at some place in Montana; that he came in on No 4 from Montana and was in the depot at the time of the shooting waiting for a freight for Barnesville; was asleep when the officer entered; was awakened by the scuffle; the officer seemed to be getting the worst of it when I heard the report of the revolver; the officer sprang through the window and fled. There were five or six men in the depot when I came in; they talked in Norsk about something I did not understand; they all went out and were gone some time; I do not know how long, guess I was asleep when they returned; am an entire stranger in this city.

John Brown testified that Thompson shoved the officer down; they fell over the bench; do not think Thompson was very drunk; but he had been drinking; he went out with the others after he first came and reported that he had just broke out of the lock-up; I should think he had been in about ¾ of an hour when the officer came; do not know whether he was asleep when the officer spoke to him first.

Officer Halvor N. Tweten testified as to what occurred from the time that Martin Halla called him at about 10:30 to arrest Thompson; told of the arrest and the discovering of the general jail delivery, of the subsequent hunt and finding him at the depot. Said that he did not lay his hands on Thompson but told him "to come with me," that Thompson opened his eyes looked at him a second that he then said: "you broke jail this evening and I want you, you most go with me;" Thompson did not say a word but slowly got upon his feet and then in a flash he grabbed me by the neck and choked me till all got black and blue. (Here he showed to the jury marks upon his neck and blood upon his coat.) I saw no possible chance to get away from him; I could not use my club, after awhile succeeded in drawing my revolver and fired at random; felt his hold on my neck relax and he fell upon me; I then managed to pull myself loose and got on my feet; seeing the man was apparently badly hurt I went to the chief and reported the circumstances who told me to get Dr. Watts to the depot just as quick as I could; I did so; the man lived probably five minutes after the doctor arrived. I went home by order of the chief. The jury took the case about 5:30 and in a few minutes rendered a verdict pronouncing the action of the officer justifiable.

An Excellent Number.

Among the excellent articles in the North American Review for December are three articles on the Hawaiian situation by Eugene Tyler Chamberlain, Hon. John L. Stevens, ex-minister to Hawai and Hon. Wm. M. Springer. These letters are invaluable to those looking for facts in regard to this question. Governor Russell, of Massachusetts, discusses the "Political Causes of the Business Depression," Senator Peffer explains the mission of the Populist party.

Catarrh in the Head

Is undoubtedly a disease of the blood, and as such only a reliable blood purifier can effect a perfect and permanent cure. IT WAS A LUCKY SHOT

IT SAVED A ROCKY MOUNTAIN HUNTER'S LIFE FIVE TIMES.

He Took Good Aim, and When Quiet Was Once More Restored He Counted Up Five Dead Bodies—No Wonder He Is Called a Famous Story Teller.

A group of men were sitting on the hotel porch "swapping" yarns. "Some people do not believe in luck; well, I do, and I'll tell you why," said the traveler as he paused and deliberately put his right leg across the knee of his left and glanced pensively down the street. The group pricked up their ears, for the traveler was a famous story teller, and all rightly judged that his remark was but the prelude to the recital of one of his adventures.

"When I was some 15 years younger than I am now," continued the traveler, "I was exceedingly fond of hunting. One fall my love of this sport led me to take a hunting trip in the Rocky mountains. I was ambitious and wanted to add a grizzly bear skin and a few elk heads to my collection of trophies, and incidentally, if it might be, to let daylight through an Indian or two.

"Well, for two weeks I hunted without getting sight of hair or track of elk, bear or Indian, and the thing was beginning to get monotonous, when one afternoon found me traversing the bottom of a deep canyon. I was alone, my guide having remained in camp on account of a sprained ankle. The bed of the canyon was rent with deep fissures and covered with great rocks, and its sides were seamed and cracked. A few stunted shrubs and trees, of the kind the elk is fond of feeding upon, grew along the sides and bottom of the canyon, and I hoped to find some of the animals here cropping the tender twigs. At last, just as I rounded a high point of rocks, I caught sight of an elk, a noble fellow, standing some 10 rods up the canyon with his face toward me. He was nosing the air suspiciously, and I feared that I would not get a shot at him unless I was quick about it. Accordingly I threw my rifle to my shoulder, and taking hasty aim at the broad, flat forehead fired.

"I was totally unprepared for the startling effect of that shot. Almost at the instant my finger pressed the trigger there came a puff of white smoke from behind a rock some 20 rods up on the opposite side of the canyon, and I saw an Indian leap to his feet only to fall back dead, while at the same moment a piercing scream, seemingly coming from directly over my head, caused me to look quickly up. In the midair, with great paws outstretched and long, sharp nails extended, I beheld a mountain lion apparently about to drop on my head. I bounded to one side. As I did so my blood almost froze with horror, for I had jumped directly over a rattlesnake, which now lay not two feet from me, with his head reared ready to strike.

"Before I could make a movement to defend myself from this new danger down upon the snake fell the body of the lion, crushing out its life. The lion rolled over once or twice and then, to my surprise, lay still. I had not had time to recover from the terror and astonishment caused by these startling incidents when my ears were greeted with a terrific bellowing, and looking up the canyon I saw the elk charging down upon me. I whirled about, intending to seek safety in flight, when, to my utter confusion, not a dozen feet away and directly in the path I must pursue if I continued my flight a monster grizzly bear reared himself up on his hind legs and with wide open mouth rushed for me. I was in an awful situation. I could see no possible way of escaping. On the right hand was the perpendicular wall of the canyon and on the left a deep chasm. Before was the grizzly bear and behind the rushing elk. Death faced me whatever way I turned. I trust I may never feel the horror of that moment again. The grizzly bear sprang forward to seize and crush out my life with his strong arms, and the elk gave a mighty bound, his huge horns lowered ready to transfix my body.

"At that moment my heart seemed to sink into my boots, and I fell flat upon the ground. With a crash like that of the collision of two locomotives, the animals met over my prostrate form. The terrific momentum of the elk bore himself and the bear over my body. For about five seconds there was a tremendous struggle; then both beasts fell, locked together, to the ground, and in a moment more had expired. One of the sharp prongs of the horns of the elk had pierced the heart of the grizzly, and the elk's neck had been broken by the bear in his death struggle. I bounded to my feet, not knowing whether to run or stand still, so sudden, so terrible and so many had been the dangers which had threatened me. But everything was quiet, and all my foes were dead.

"On investigation I found that my rifle ball had struck the elk at the base of the horns, where the bone is thick and hard, and after partially stunning him had glanced diagonally across the canyon and pierced the brain of the Indian, who, concealed behind a rock, was about to fire upon me. The shock of the ball had been sufficient to deflect the aim of the Indian enough to cause him to miss me and to pierce the heart of the mountain lion just at the moment he sprang upon me from a cleft in the rocks above my head. The lion landed upon the rattlesnake and crushed the life out of him before he had had time to strike, and the elk and the bear in their eagerness to kill me had destroyed each other.

"I call that a lucky shot, at least for me, because it saved my life five times and was the death of an Indian, a grizzly bear, an elk, a rattlesnake and a mountain lion."

And the traveler deliberately removed the right leg from the knee of the left and glanced upward with the look of a man who is confident that he is a favorite of Providence.—Chicago Tribune.

SCHOOLBOY FIREWORKS.

Somehow They Wouldn't Work Properly and the Consequences Were Unpleasant.

I have in my mind a display of fireworks given by myself when 12 years of age or less. Dr. Adam Norris, my schoolmaster in those days, knowing that I was a past master in chemistry and an adept at the manufacture of colored fire, directed me to organize an entertainment. The old gentleman is gone now where there may or may not be fireworks, but to his dying day he never appreciated my efforts on his behalf. It was proposed to illuminate the playgrounds with colored fires and lanterns, to invite the parents of the 30 scholars and to regale them after the display with cake and wine—I mean, of course, the parents.

I was let off my evening lessons for a week and allowed the run of the school laboratory. There I reveled in preparations. Not content with mere red, blue and yellow fires, I arranged Catherine wheels and Roman candles and rockets. I felt the instinct of a Brock and a Pain rising in me. I even asked Dr. Norris for additional money, telling him that I had an idea for a splendid novelty. He trusted me, taking the word of our chemistry master that I knew what I was doing. My novelty, which I kept as a grand surprise, consisted of a "set piece," with the words: "God bless Dr. Adam Norris."

This benign wish would come out in red fire and subsequently change to green, if all went well. The night arrived and the company. The preliminary illumination was not entirely successful, as my assistants did not understand their business, but the first Catherine wheel went around several times and appeared to be well liked. Owing to some unfortunate miscalculation with the materials, my rockets would not soar. The spirit was willing; the chemical compound was weak. So they tore about the ground, like snakes, and hissed in among the company, and one let off purple stars under the petticoat of a lady. A solitary rocket really went up a considerable distance, and the stick fell through the hothouse of a man next door, who had always been unfriendly toward the school. I pass by the hot air balloon. It soared all right, but I forgot to tie on the magnesium light, so nobody realized what a fine thing was being done. The Roman candles passed off without adverse comment, and then I lighted the "set piece."

You will not believe what happened. Nobody has ever credited the story, though I have told it to thousands. The facts, however, are these: Owing to unforeseen circumstances, the first two words of the display—those asking God to bless our good master—did not light at all; the next word, "Doctor," fell off altogether; the "A" in Adam also failed, and the whole of our preceptor's surname, excepting the initial letter, blew up. What was the result? Why, against the black night, raised on supports some 20 feet above the heads of the bewildered assembly, there blazed forth a solitary colossal "Dam N."

It burned red, and then in a silence that could be felt turned green. The "Damn" and I turned green together. That ended the entertainment. People never believe this story. Indeed at so great a distance of time I should be inclined to doubt it myself, but I cannot forget the subsequent interview with my dear old master in his study. We had a little private display of fireworks all to ourselves. Thus do most improbable effects result from remote causes. The Chinese by inventing fireworks were doing a thing which, after long generations of time, rendered it impossible for me to sit down with any comfort for a week.—Idler.

Poisonous and Harmless Snakes.

There is a certain physiological difference between the poisonous and harmless snakes, which exists very plainly in their manner of dentition. All snakes are objects of aversion and dread to mankind, so much so that to be bitten by a snake has at times been so fearful to the victim as to have produced death, although the snake was harmless. Such is the instinctive dread with which these reptiles are thought of that it may be desirable to have some easy mode of distinguishing the one kind from the other. This distinguishing characteristic is afforded by the teeth. In all poisonous snakes there are only two rows of teeth, the fang or fangs being arranged either within the two rows or outside of them. The harmless snakes have four distinct rows of teeth and when the bite shows this kind of wound and not any single deeper or larger puncture, there need be no apprehension.—New York Times.

The "Second Samson."

Richard Joy, who died May 18, 1742, at the age of 67 and is buried in the St. Peter's churchyard, isle of Thanet, Kent, England, was known throughout Europe as the "Kentish Hercules," or the "Second Samson." When but a youth of 17 years, he was invited to London by the king to give an exhibition in remarkable feats of strength. Among the feats of his more mature years was that of breaking, with his hands and feet, a rope with a tensile strength of 35 hundredweight and the lifting of 2,200 pounds. The following is a copy of his epitaph:

Herculean hero! famed for strength,
At last lies here—his breadth and length.
See how the mighty man is fallen!
To death the strong and weak are all one;
The same judgment doth befall
Goliath great and David small.

—St. Louis Republic.

Stagnation Is Death.

The sun would be consumed by its own ardor if it did not shine. Nature knows nothing of hoarding. The sun gives away its gold without ostentation. The ocean gives its vapors to the clouds, the clouds return them to the earth, the rivers to the sea. There is a constant exchange between lungs and leaves. Stagnation is death. Give to get; get to give.—Ram's Horn.

Evening Hymn.

Abide with us, Lord Jesus, through ev'ry changing ill!
Now that the day is dying,
And darker shades are lying
Along the eastern hill,
Abide with us, Lord Jesus! Be Thou our helper still!

Abide with us, Lord Jesus! Abide with us, we pray!
We bow the knee in meekness,
And own to Thee our weakness!
Be Thou our strength and stay!
Abide with us, Lord Jesus, and guide us lest we stray!

Abide with us, Lord Jesus, now that the sun has set!
Be Thou our shepherd tender!
Shine o'er us in Thy splendor
And all our sins forget!
Abide with us, Lord Jesus! Be Thou our Olivet!

Abide with us, Lord Jesus, till morning light breaks clear—
Till through the night of sorrow
We hail the glad tomorrow
And the safe harbor near!
Abide with us, Lord Jesus, till heav'nly lands appear!

Endeavor Societies and Mission Bands.

A writer in The Home Mission Monthly, which is published by the woman's executive committee of home missions of the Presbyterian church, rejoices in the absorption of some mission bands into the Christian Endeavor society. She says that this is practically answering the question of "How may we interest the boys in missions?" They are in the Endeavor society in large numbers, and through the missionary department of the society their interest is aroused as quickly as that of the girls who formerly were alone members of these bands. Far more will be given to the denominational boards than ever before, it is confidently believed.

Simplicity For the Children.

The great secret of successful Sunday school teaching lies in its clearness and simplicity, for "sublimity always is simple," Longfellow says. Whatever else you may teach, teach so that the "still, small voice" may reach the hearts of your scholars.

Is not the Saviour teaching still?
The wheels of Providence He turns.
All is subservient to His will.

Tyndale, the translator of the English Bible, had for his motto, "Banish me to the poorest corner of the world if you please, but let me teach the little children and preach the gospel." There is a great demand for sterling teachers, such as realize the sublimity of teaching. The children's faces of our land are "eloquent." As the poet says:

Save us! Save us! Woe surrounds us.
Little knowledge sore confounds us.
We are willing. We are ready.
We would learn if you would teach.
We have hearts that yearn toward duty.
We have minds alive to beauty.
Souls that any heights can reach!

—Christian Intelligencer.

For Tired Little Folks.

"Auntie, please tell me something nice to do. I'm tired of Sunday. It's too late to go out, and it's too early for the lamp, and the wrong time for everything."

"Well, let me see," said auntie.

"Can you tell me any one in the Bible whose name begins with A?"

"Yes, Adam."

"I'll tell you a B," said auntie—"Benjamin. Now tell me a C."

"Cain."

"Right," said Aunt Sarah.

"Let me tell D," said Joe, hearing our talk—"Daniel."

"And so we went through the alphabet, and before we thought of it we were called for supper, the house was lighted and we had a fine time. Try it.—Mayflower.

Christian Endeavor Notes.

A former member of the Kobe (Japan) society, who is now a student in this country, says that in the last few months—that is, since Dr. Clark's visit—the number of societies in Japan has increased from 4 to 30 and the membership from 80 to 800.

An interesting report from the society in Monastir, Macedonia, tells of the addition to its working force of the Sunday school committee, whose duty it is, not only the securing of recruits, but also to secure the "regular attendance of the associate members, to see that the Sunday school lesson is learned beforehand, and that they bring their Bibles with them."

Rev. W. I. Chamberlain of Chittoor, India, who is at the head of Christian Endeavor work there, writes most encouragingly of the society of that faroff land.

At Makawao, Maui, in the Hawaiian Islands, there is a good society in the foreign Protestant church. Although some of the members must travel seven miles to the meetings, yet they come regularly, and every member takes an active part in the meeting. Nearly every member, too, has his name enrolled on the society temperance pledge.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss.
In Probate Court. Special Term, November 27th, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Louis Huot, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Godus Huot, administrator, setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained, with the charges of administration; and the taxes, assessments and other charges which are an existing lien upon his estate, and the improvements which are necessary for the preservation of his real estate; and a description of the tracts of land of said deceased which it is proposed to mortgage; and praying that license be to him granted to mortgage the tracts of land so described.

And it appearing by said petition that the personal estate of said Louis Huot, deceased, is insufficient to pay his debts, with the charges of administration, and to pay any taxes, assessments or other charges which are an existing lien upon his estate, or to pay for any improvements which are necessary for the preservation of his real estate, or any part thereof.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before this court on Monday, the 8th day of January, A. D. 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in the city of Crookston, in said county, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said Godus Huot, administrator, to mortgage the said real estate of said deceased for the purpose of obtaining funds for the payment of such debts, charges, taxes, assessments and liens, and for the making of such necessary improvements.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspapre printed at published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 27th day of November, A. D. 1893.

By the Court.

MADE A GREAT HAUL.

ROBBERS GO THROUGH A SOUTH BEND BANK

While the Employes Were at Dinner They Entered by a Rear Window and Carried Off $15,000—St. Paul Bank Robbers Found Guilty.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Dec. 8.—The South Bend National bank, one of the largest and soundest banks in Northern Indiana, was robbed of over $15,000 during the day. The bold deed was committed in broad daylight, while hundreds of people were on the street, and the robbers succeeded in getting away with their rich booty without leaving the slightest clue. Chief Benjamin Rose was at once informed and set his officers at work immediately, but up to this hour no clue of any reliance has been obtained. Chief Rose believes there were no less than four men in the gang and possibly more. Cashier Myron Campbell remained at the bank,

In the Heart of the City, until all employes were gone. He then locked the middle door of the big vault and left everything in the usual shape at the noon recess. It was 15 minutes after 12 o'clock when he left. At 10 minutes of 1 he returned, entering by the front street door. He passed down the corridor alongside the cashier's, collector's and other desks, and turned to his left to enter the door back of this line of continuous desks. As he was about to enter the door, his foot struck a chisel. He picked it up, but thought nothing of the matter, as the plumbers had been in the building, and had passed by where he found the chisel, he thinking they had dropped it. Ten minutes later Assistant Cashier Brown came in and Mr. Campbell showed him the chisel. Mr. Brown's to such an extent that an investigation was immediately instituted and the men found a rear window open, the back door unlocked and the door between the directors' room and the countingroom mutilated. A rush was then made for the vault. The door was as Mr. Campbell left it. They swung it back and examined the safe within. A glance showed that money had been taken, but they could not tell how much. The police were at once notified, and when the day's balances were made up it was developed that the robbers secured $15,900. There is but little doubt that the bank has been watched for several days, perhaps weeks.

Suspicions Were Aroused

CONVICTED OF PATRICIDE.

Herman Hobeck Gets Seven Years at Wausau, Wis.

WAUSAU, Wis., Dec. 10.—The jury in the case of Herman and Otto Hobeck, brothers, charged with having killed their father, brought in a verdict of not guilty as to Otto and guilty of manslaughter as to Herman. The jury was out 20 hours. Herman was sentenced tenced to seven years hard labor by Judge Bardeen. The crime was a revolting one, the father being chopped to pieces by Herman and the head severed from the body. The two boys then dug a hole in the ground, buried the corpse and felled a tree over the spot. The boys were densely ignorant. Their father had always abused them, and on this occasion was about to attack them with a hatchet.

DEFENDANTS ACQUITTED.

Verdict in the Noted Thrun Case at Wausau, Wis.

WAUSAU, Wis., Dec. 9.—The jury in the Thrun conspiracy case which has occupied much attention here for the past three weeks, brought in a verdict of not guilty as to each of the defendants, Hanson, Folletts and Kandy. The jury was out twenty-six hours. They disagreed at first as to Hanson, so it is generally understood. The case has attracted widespread notice because of the sensational features developed. Thrun, who pleaded guilty to the charge of conspiracy when arraigned, cannot be sentenced because there is no co-conspirator, a necessary element to constitute an offense.

FLEURY FOUND GUILTY.

The Leader of the St. Paul Bank Robbers Convicted of Grand Larceny.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 7.—Thomas Fleury, the chief of the men accused of stealing the $5,000 bag of gold belonging to the Merchants' National bank from the counter of the clearing house, has been found guilty of grand larceny in the first degree, as charged in the indictment against him, Meiggs, Miller, Howard and Morris. The penalty is not less than five nor more than 10 years.

Receiver For Aultman & Co.

CANTON, O., Dec. 11.—The business of C. Aultman & Co., manufacturers of engines, threshers and other farming implements, has gone into the hands of receivers, William A. Lynch and Robert A. Miller being appointed. The company, it is understood, is entirely solvent, as its assets are not far from $2,700,000, while its liabilities are about $1,000,000.

Iowa's Senatorial Contest Discussed.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—National Committeeman Clarkson of Iowa is in Washington conferring with Republican members of the Iowa delegation. The senatorial contest in the Hawkeye state is the topic they are discussing.

Gladstone Recovering.

BRIGHTON, Dec. 10.—Mr. Gladstone seems to have quite recovered from his recent attack. He drove out Sunday and went to chapel. It is probable that he will stay here a few days longer.

Fire at Sheldon, Ia.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., Dec. 12.—A fire at Sheldon destroyed a large part of the business section of the town. Loss, $80,000; insurance, $12,000.

THE FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Thirteenth Annual Convention in Session at Chicago.

CHICAGO, Dec. 12.—The 13th annual convention of the American Federation of Labor opened in the city council chamber. Over 90 delegates from all parts of the country were present when President Samuel Gompers called the convention to order. There was apparent a feeling among the Western delegates that the honor of the presidency of the organization, which has remained in the East for several years, should be conferred on a Western leader, and gossip was current in the convention hall as to a strong fight at the time of the election of officers. A delegate high in the order admitted that there was considerable dissatisfaction among the Western unions. A parade had been planned, but because of bad weather the idea was abandoned, and the delegates marched from their headquarters to the council chamber without delay.

W. P. Pomeroy welcomed the delegates in a legthy speech, in which he set forth the pitiable condition of many of Chicago's laboring men.

"Ten thousand hungry, homeless men will welcome your coming," said the speaker, "and will expect you to sound to the nation the note of alarm and will look to you for aid in their present desperate condition."

President Madden of the State Federation made a short address and President Gompers replied to the speeches of welcome.

MINERS ACCEPT.

The 65-Cent Rate Agreeable to the Pittsburg Convention.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 9.—The railroad miners' convention has agreed to accept the 65-cent rate, providing the ironclad is not insisted upon and rates at the company stores reduced.

Strikers Returning to Work.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Dec. 8.—Most of the old employes of the Lehigh Valley railroad in South Bethlehem have now sent in their applications for work again. While the terms are not altogether as satisfactory as the men expected, the majority of them say there is no use now in showing dissatisfaction or stubbornness, but that they will endeavor to get back to work as quickly as possible.

Iowa Miners' Strike Settled.

DES MOINES, Dec. 12.—The coal miners' strike has been settled, the pay day question being compromised.

IN HONOR OF SHIELDS.

Statue of the Distinguished General Unveiled at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Another figure has been added to the distinguished array of warriors, statesmen and inventors, whose monuments, erected in Statuary Hall of the United States Capitol, symbolizes the regard in which they were held by at least one state of the Union. General James Shields, who was thus honored, was the favorite son of three states, and his ashes rest in Missouri, but Illinois, by resolution of its legislature, decided that his statue should be one of the two which it is entitled to place in Statuary Hall. Illinois, therefore, had the chief place in the ceremonies, but Missouri and Minnesota also took advantage of the opportunity to do especial honor to the memory of their soldiers of bygone days.

ASHORE AT WHITEFISH BAY.

A Flint and Pere Marquette Liner In a Perilous Position.

MILWAUKEE, Dec. 11.—The passenger and freight steamer F. & P. M. No. 3 of the Flint and Pere Marquette line, went ashore at 4 a. m. at Whitefish bay, six miles north of Milwaukee. The boat is exposed to a terrific easterly gale and a heavy sea is running. A blinding snow storm prevails.

There are 18 passengers and a crew of about 15 on the steamer. The lifesaving crew has gone to the rescue. The seas are running so high that the surf boat could not be towed to the scene of the wreck, and the lifesaving apparatus is being taken overland to Whitefish bay.

Will Float the Steamer.

MILWAUKEE, Dec. 12.—The steamer F. & P. M., No. 3, which went ashore during a storm Monday, will be lightered in the morning and will probably be off the rocks by noon.

Eleven Bodies Recovered.

HIGHLAND LIGHT, Mass., Dec. 8.—The bodies of drowned sailors from the wrecked ship Jason are beginning to come up in the undertow, and the lifesaving men have recovered 11 of them.

May Call a Special Session.

LANSING, Mich., Dec. 8.—Governor Rich stated that it was not improbable that a special session of the legislature would be called to consider the matter of relief for the Upper Peninsula miners. It is estimated that $150,000 will be needed to tide them over until May 1. He is preparing to go and make personal investigation, and will decide about a special session on his return.

Jenkins Goes Free.

MILWAUKEE, Dec. 13.—Judge Johnson granted the motion for a separate trial in the case of Judge J. G. Jenkins, indicted as one of the directors of the defunct Plankinton bank, whereupon District Attorney Hammel asked that the case against Mr. Jenkins be nolled. His request was granted.

Guerley Wasn't Poisoned.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Dec. 12.—The inquest in the case of George Guerley, the the non-union telegrapher of the Lehigh Valley railroad, who died in the hospital Saturday night, was held Monday. The jury rendered a verdict that the man came to his death from chronic disease of the stomach.

Benefit for Chicago Poor.

CHICAGO, Dec. 12.—Joseph Jefferson and Stuart Robson will give a benefit for the starving poor of Chicago next Friday, Dec. 15. They will be assisted by all the dramatic talent in the city.

MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

HEART DISEASE 20 YEARS.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

DEAR SIRS: For 20 years I was troubled with heart disease. Would frequently have falling spells and smothering at night. Had to sit up or get out of bed to breathe. Had pain in my left side and back most of the time; at last I became dropsical. I was very nervous and nearly worn out. The least excitement would cause me to faint. I was also much troubled with fluttering. For the last fifteen years I could not sleep on my left side or back until began taking your New Heart Cure. I had not taken it very long until I felt much better, and I can now sleep on either side or back without the least discomfort. I have no pain, smothering, dropsy, no wind on stomach or other disagreeable symptoms. I am able to do all my own housework without any trouble and consider myself cured.

THOUSANDS

Elkhart, Ind., 1888. MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

It is now four years since I have taken any medicine. Am in better health than I have been in 40 years. I honestly believe that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure saved my life and made me a well woman. I am now 62 years of age, and am able to do a good day's work.

FIFTEENTH YEAR.

WOMANKIND.

FOR WOMEN AND HOME.

This well-known journal, a union of four leading women's papers, has won its fame because it deals with what really interests the women of America. Fashions from the standpoint of good taste and economy. Fiction of a pure and helpful kind. Music and Art suitable for non-professional tastes. Household hints written by practical women. Suggestions and aids for self-supporting women. It is a paper for women, by women, and its writers are among the most noted authors. Every line is original, every engraving a gem.

It is a paper of to-day without espousing the great questions of religion, politics and temperance, it gives all the news regarding them. It is universally quoted by the press because its views and articles are bright and unique Send to Springfield, Ohio, for a sample copy. Formerly $1.00, it is now but 50 cents a year. THE following is the order of the railroad commission denying the application of the three railroads named in the order to intervene in the case of Elias Steenerson against the Great Northern railroad. It will be seen that the order of the commission is both logical and legal.

The complainant filed his com plaint in this proceeding, claiming that the rates charged by the defendant for the transportation of grain from certain stations in Polk County to Duluth and Minneapolis are unreasonable. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company and receivers, the Chicago, Millwaukee and St. Paul Railway Co., the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Co., and the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co., have filed petitions asking to be allowed to intervene on the ground that any reduction of rates of the Great Northern will affect the rates of the other companies; that is, they will be compelled to accept the same rates as the Great Northern, or lose the business. As the statute authorizes any appeal from the order of the Commision to the courts, we are of the opinion that we should be governed by their decisions on the questions presented by the intervening petitioners; and looking to them, we find that a complaint in intervention must have an interest in the matter in litigation of such a nature that he will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation of the judgement. (Smile v. Gale, 12 Supreme Court Rep. 674; Lewis vs Harwood 28 Minn. 429.) Tested by this rule, the petitioners have no direct interest in this controversy that entitles them to become a party to the record. It is true so far as the Northern Pacific Company is concerned, that in case of an adverse decision, it may be compelled to reduce its rates or suffer the loss of business, the same as one merchant must reduce the price of his goods to that asked by his neighbor, or lose trade, but he is not legally bound to do so, and an advese order in this case would not legally affect any company but the defendant. In these views we are supported by the opinion of the Attorney-General. In this case we desire to obtain all possible light on the unreasonableness of the rates, and will be glad to hear any evidence from any of the roads, or others who may wish to be heard with reference to the same. The prayer of the petitioners is denied and the petitions dismissed.

By order of the Commision-
A. K. TEISBERG, Secretary.
Dated St. Paul, Dec. 6th. 1893.

IT would seem that the president in appointing Blount as commissioner to Hawaii made a blunder that places him in an awkward position, to say the least. United States Senators are inquiring into the matter to ascertain why Grover presumed to take so much authority upon himself without the sanction of the senate. If the position of things is as alleged Grover has got his foot in it—as usual.

THE experience Gov. Altzeld is having seems to indicate that anarchy is not so popular in Chicago as he supposed when he pardoned the red-handed anarchists awhile ago. A German society in Chicago last week refused to receive a fine portrait of the Governor that had been presented. The Governor accepted this action as a personal slight and cancelled an engagement that he had to deliver an address before the society.

As illustrating the phenomenal growth of the magazine business. The recent order of the American News Company of 200,000 copies of the December number of the Cosmopolitan stands unequaled, over 100 tons of books going to this one concern! The cosmopolitan, owing to its extraordinary cheapness ($1.50 per year) and the excellent quality of the matter it contains, now leads all other magazines in circulation. It strikes the masses and hence its popularity with the newsdealers.

ONE night last week a gay and festive burglar entered the residence of Mayor Wright, at St. Paul—evidently supposing the mayor was following the Globe's advice to "keep an eye on every saloon in town so no one should get fatally murdered," but Fred fooled him. He was at home by a large majority and arrested the burglar with neatness and dispatch. What is the matter with that Globe detective bureau? Why don't they prevent all these sinful doings in the saintly city of St. Paul? In other words "what are they there for?

THE GUBERNATORIAL SITUATION.

This is the way the gubernatorial situation is summed up by Ed. A. Paradis, editor of the Midway News: "Judging from present indications, the next gubernatorial race will be between Knute Nelson and Charles E. Flandrau. It has been rumored for months about these cities that these railroads, lumbermen, the Miller's association, the banks, trust companies, and certain other state enterprises such as the capitol scheme and a few others, are getting ready to tumble the Republican machine overboard. The reason advanced is that the Republican office-holders, in their eagerness to hold their jobs, have gone so far over to the people that these old-time rings have become thoroughly alarmed. They figure that Republican success for a number of years past has been largely dependent upon the indirect support of such Democratic leaders as James J. Hill, P. H. Kelly and Mike Doran, and that by nominating a man who command, the enthusiastic support of country Democrats, a straight pull on the part of these men who have so long sold out their own party would land Judge Flandrau into the Governorship, and permit the rings to re-instate themselves upon a new and more permanent basis. It is understood at present writing that a vigorous campaign is soon to be inaugurated in behalf of Judge Flandrau, in which the work of throwing the Daily Globe into the hands of a receiver on the part of the St. Paul Trust company was but the initiatory step. They argue that while it is practically certain that Mr. Nelson will be nominated, he will be a weak candidate in an off year, especially in the country, on account of having allied himself with all three of the Duluth, Minneapolis and St. Paul schemes—the Duluth elevator, the University bill, and the capitol job—so much so, in fact, that the allied influences in these cities, with so acceptable a Democratic candidate as C. E. Flandrau, will just gently let him drop."

SINCE the fall election, the democrats are getting a great hustle upon themselves in the effort to get the balance of the territories admitted. They are so fearful lest the sceptre of power should pass from their grasp that they are even trying hard to admit Utah, knowing full well that such a step is not for the best interests of the United States while the Morman element remains in the large majority. But it would be in the interest of the democrats therefore they want it.

THE celebrated suit of Jesse P. Farley vs J. J. Hill et al has at last been decided in favor of defendants and Jesse pays the frieght i. e. the costs. It will be remembered that Mr. Farley was receiver for the old St. Paul & Pacific before J. J. Hill secured control, and he brought suit for $5,000,000 claiming that he had entered into a conspiracy with the others to secure control of the road. He was defeated in the lower courts and now the judgment of the lower courts is affirmed.

THE young state of North Dakota has taken a step in advance of the older states in the manner of treating her convicts. Common school books have been introduced into the penitentiary at Bismarck, and the convicts now have an opportunity to acquire an education. As they have little or no work to do, receive plenty of good wholesome food, have good quarters, and now have the privilege of getting an education "on the side," the life of the average convict in the ozone state should not be so very hard.

THE Fleury trial would seem to indicate that Justice is a queer jude. Fleury was convicted of robbing the Merchants National bank in St. Paul, and $1,000 in gold was found on his person and yet it is said the bank cannot get that money because it cannot identify each particular piece of gold.

THE action of the president in the Hawaiian matter bids fair to be another feather that will break the camel's back. His action in the pension matter is already a sufficient burden to bear, and this last straw will be very liable to do for Grover.

Norman County Index: The big contest in the republican state convention next year will probably be over state auditor. Already a number of good men have been "mentioned" for the place, among them being Bub Dunn, L. M. Hunt and P. J. McGuire. Any one of these would be credit to the state, but if Mr. McGuire cares to make the race again, in our opinion he is fairly entitled to the honor. He was the victim of the unholy Demo-Pop combination three years ago and should be given another chance if he wants it.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

Tuesday, Dec. 5.

The house debated the bankruptcy bill in committee of the whole.

In the senate Mr. Dolph spoke on that portion of the president's message relating to Hawaii.

General debate on the bankruptcy bill will close Wednesday. The five minute rule will then be in force.

The house passed a bill extending for three years the time in which settlers may purchase forfeited railroad lands occupied by them.

Among the measures favorably acted on in the house was a joint resolution confirming titles of bona fide settlers on Mille Lacs reservation lands in Minnesota.

House joint resolution appropriating $50,000 for the payment of salaries and expenses of additional deputy collectors of internal revenue to carry out the Chinese exclusion act was passed by the senate.

Wednesday, Dec. 6.

The house adjourned at 1:10 to attend the unveiling of the Shields statue.

Senate amendments to the resolution appropriating money to carry out the Chinese act were agreed to by the house.

Senator Hill arraigned the president in a speech in the senate for his course in the Hawaiian affair. He claimed the president had usurped the functions of the congress.

A spirited discussion of the Hawaiian question arose in the senate over the resolution offered by Mr. Hoar requesting the president to forward to the senate all the correspondence on the Hawaiian question. The resolution was finally adopted.

Thursday, Dec. 7.

The senate adjourned till Monday.

General debate on the bankruptcy bill closed.

Senator Hill announced he would on Monday call up the bill to repeal federal election laws.

The bill to reimburse the State of Nebraska for expenses incurred in repelling a threatened invasion and raid by the Sioux in 1890 and 1891, passed the senate.

Senator Hausbrough secured the passage of a bill granting to North Dakota certain lands in Fort Totten military reservation for the use of the state militia for encampment purposes.

Friday, Dec. 8.

The senate was not in session.

The house adjourned till Monday.

Many changes in the tariff bill are being made in committee.

The Torrey bankruptcy bill was unexpectedly strangled in the house by an affirmative vote on a motion to strike out the enacting clause.

An attempt to pass the bill for the admission of Utah during the morning hour was met with fillibustering by the Republicans.

Monday, Dec. 11.

The senate passed the house bill for the relief of settlers on Mille Lacs lands.

The house considered District of Columbia business after the morning hour.

The house federal elections bill was referred to the committee on privileges and elections in the senate.

Senator Hoar again scored the president for his Hawaiian policy, speaking to a resolution for more information.

Republican fillibustering on the bill for the admission of Utah is ended in the house, an agreement being reached with the Democrats under which more time will be allowed for debate and amendment.

REVISED TARIFF BILL.

The New Measure Discussed by the Ways and Means Committee.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—The revised tariff bill was laid before the ways and means committee during the morning. The changes which have been made during the two weeks have been noted from time to time, the most important being pearl buttons and tin plate. Members of the majority of the committee say that the changes made are mostly from ad valorem to specific duties where such changes were necessary from a business standpoint. The bill was taken up by the full committee by sections, and the Republican members offered amendments and discussed the bill from time to time. It is the intention of the majority members to vote down all amendments offered by the Republicans and report the bill as soon as possible in its present revised condition.

ANARCHIST OUTRAGE

BOMB THROWN IN THE FRENCH CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES.

Had It Not Exploded Prematurely There Would Have Been Great Loss of Life. As It Was Eighty Were Injured—The Anarchist Who Threw It Confesses the Deed With Great Bravado.

PARIS, Dec. 10.—The explosion of a bomb in the chamber of deputies Saturday caused the greatest excitement in all parts of the city. The exact number of injured is not known, but at least 80 are more or less hurt, 15 of that number being members of the chamber. The bomb was thrown from the right gallery and exploded about half way between there and the floor, thus preventing a serious loss of life.

THE FIEND JAILED.

Anarchist Marchal Arrested For the Chamber of Deputies Outrage.

PARIS, Dec. 11.—After a day of great excitement following the explosion of the bomb in the chamber of deputies the authorities have announced that they have the bombthrower in custody. He is an anarchist named Marchal and has made a full confession. News to the effect that the bombthrower was in the hands of the police was not confirmed until official announcement was made and now Paris will sleep easier and await developments. Marchal, it appears, was among the injured persons taken to the Hotel Dieu, the large hospital on the north of the Place du Aparvis Notre Dame. Marchal soon of the authorities, and, pressed by the police, he decided to make a full confession, and he did so, glorying in his dastardly crime. When questioned as to his reasons for throwing the bomb, Marchal replied defiantly: "I wished to deal a thoroughly dramatic blow at the institutions of the country and wished to cause great excitement. I endeavored to aim the bomb at M. Dupuy (the president of the chamber of deputies). I glory in the act, and I only regret that my hand swerved and the bomb did not explode near the mark." This bold and defiant statement from the lips of the bandaged prisoner caused a sensation, even among the stern officials of the law, who were

Fell Under the Suspicion

Accustomed to Startling Situations

and used to all kinds of surprises. There was so much bitter hatred in the anarchist's tone as he delivered his defiance and gloried in his crime that even the public prosecutor started and seemed to grow pale. Marchal in appearance is a big blonde man with a heavy moustache and a hardened expression of countenance, which seemed to loom up with a strange fire as he described with much gusto how the bomb was used. He seems utterly indifferent as to the consequences of his crime and speaks of it as though it didn't concern him in the least.

CAUSE OF THE DELAY.

Why Minister Willis Failed to Restore the Hawaiian Queen.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 9.—The schooner Transit, just arrived from Honolulu, brings the following to the Associated Press under date of Nov. 19:

An interview with the members of the provisional government during the afternoon develops a determination to stand on the defensive and take nothing on trust until the United States government is officially heard from either directly or through Minister Willis. In the meantime troops will be kept fully armed and reserve guards ready at a minute's notice. Many Americans assert that no restoration shall take place. The provisional government expresses the opinion that the use of force on the part of the United States would be equivalent to a declaration of war. Resident Americans have at least 1,500 rifles and ammunition in private hands which it would be impossible to seize

In Case of Restoration.

Those best posted say the throne would not stand an hour after the withdrawal of American troops. The theory of restoration, however, will not be believed here until the last moment. Should it then prove true, serious trouble will likely follow. This much is admitted by the clearest heads on both sides.

From a source almost in touch with the American legation it is learned that the contingency which has caused delay in Hawaiian affairs until Washington is heard from is the fact that the provisional government and resident Americans would resist either compromise or restoration.

The Corwin Sailed.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 6.—The United States revenue cutter Corwin sailed shortly before midnight. Her destination is a secret, but it is supposed she is going to Honolulu with instructions for Minister Willis. It is reported that one of the sailors on the Corwin has been bribed to take dispatches from Minister Thurston to President Dole. The captain of the Corwin refused to take letters from Consul Wilder, saying he did not know where he was going.

Thurston Goes to Hawaii.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8. — Minister Thurston has left this city en route for Honolulu. Before leaving, he called on Secretary Gresham. He was not sent out of the country and does not go at the suggestion of Secretary Gresham, but goes of his own accord, in order to advise and counsel those he represents.

Minister Thurston En Route.

CHICAGO, Dec. 9.—Minister Thurston of Hawaii reached this city Friday, and left during the evening by the Northwestern road for San Francisco, en route to Honolulu.

FOR THE STATE.

Decision In the Pine Land Cases Has Been Filed.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 9.—As has been previously foretold in press dispatches the case of the State of Minnesota against C. A. Smith & Co., of Minneapolis, to set aside and annul a private sale of the pine in section 36, township 42, range 26, the same being a section of school land, and to secure a refund to the state of the value of timber cut thereon by the defendants, has been decided on every point in favor of the state by Judges L. L. Baxter and D. B. Searle, of the Seventh judicial district. The action originated from a resolution introduced into the last house of representative by Hon. R. C. Dunn of Princeton, Mille Lacs county.

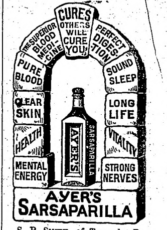
The judges, after a lengthy review of the facts in the case, sum up as follows:

That said permit was made and delivered without authority of law; that the same is null and void; that said defendants have no right, title or interest in or to the pine timber attempted by said instrument to be sold, and said that instrument and the record thereof aforesaid must be canceled, set aside and annulled, and that said plaintiff is entitled to have and recover from said defendants and each of them them the sum of $9,514.89, together with interest thereon from June 23, 1893, and the costs and disbursements of this action.

There were about 3,000,000 feet of pine still standing on section 36, which reverts to the state.

Scheig and Floyd Start West.

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.—Phillip M. Scheig and Frank Floyd, accused of having robbed the Bank of Minneapolis, started on the trip west Sunday in charge of detectives from that city. They were taken from police headquarters to the railway depot in a carriage. The prisoners had lost much of their stylish appearance by the night in the cells.



S. P. SMITH, of Towanda, Pa., whose constitution was completely broken down, is cured by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. He writes:

"For eight years, I was, most of the time, a great sufferer from constipation, kidney trouble, and indigestion, so that my constitution seemed to be completely broken down. I was induced to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and took nearly seven bottles, with such excellent results that my stomach, bowels, and kidneys are in perfect condition, and, in all their functions, as regular as clock-work. At the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, my weight was only 129 pounds; I now can brag of 159 pounds, and was never in so good health. If you could see me before and after using, you would want me for a traveling advertisement. I believe this preparation of Sarsaparilla to be the best in the market to-day."

The Land of Flowers.

Three hundred and eighty-one years ago, the romantic Ponce de Leon, searching for the fabled fountain of youth, set foot on a land so adorned with blossoms of every kind and hue that he named it Florida—Land of Flowers. To most Northerners, Florida suggests only a refuge for invalids and consumptives, or a place whence come oranges and other semi-tropic fruits. The state, however, has something of a history. Where Ponce de Leon landed, was founded St. Augustine, the oldest settled town in the United States, and now a famous winter resort. In 1763 Florida was ceded by Spain to Great Britain, in exchange or as a ransom for Cuba, on which the British lion had laid his paw. In 1783, at the close of our Revolutionary war, England ceded the territory back to Spain, probably not desiring a possession surrounded by the rebellious colonies. In 1819 Spain ceded Florida to the United States, and she was admitted to the Union in 1845. Since the war of the Rebellion, material developement has been rapid in Florida—railroads have been built, much Northern capital invested and great improvement manifested. If intending to make a trip to Florida—and now is the time to be planning for it—be sure that your railroad ticket is via the Burlington, which affords choice of routes by either Chicago or St. Louis. Apply to any coupon ticket agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

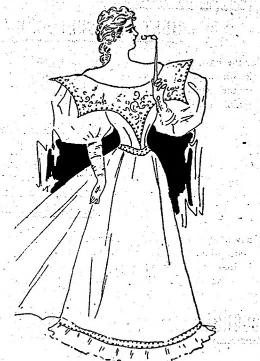
FADS AND FASHIONS.



3909. 3910

Evening Gowns.

THE subject of evening dress is one over which a good many feminine minds are worrying just at present. To those who only occasionally indulge in a full dress evening gown it is of the greatest importance that they should choose something that will remain a good style for several seasons at least, and one that will last and keep its freshness and elegance.

Satins and brocades are always elegant and never go out of fashion. They make over well, moreover, which is often a great consideration to many women. A becoming and endurable color should always be chosen, some one of the standard shades in fact, such as blue or pink or gray, but never any of the novelty colors that only last for one brief season and then look ugly and out of season ever after. The model gown given on this page is chosen to last through several seasons and carry style and elegance in all its lines.

No. 3909-3910 is of rich material and has a long train which is adjustable. The model in this instance is of pale yellow satin trimmed with lace and pearl beading. The front of the skirt (No. 3910) has three gores, and there is a straight gathered back breadth under the train. The bodice (No. 3909) is slightly pointed in front but straight at the back. It fits the figure with darts and has a low cut neck showing the tips of the shoulders, which is the latest and most approved fashion. It has an unusual and very handsome bertha arrangement fastening at the back. This is trimmed with lace laid on flat and edged with pearl beads. The sleeves are simply hugh puffs at the elbow.

Lady's Bodice Pattern (No. 3909) is cut in 5 sizes, for ladies from 32 to 40 inches bust measure, and requires, for the medium size, 2¼ yards material 44 inches wide, or 3¾ yards 27 inches. Price 25 cents.

Lady's Skirt Pattern (No, 3910) is cut in 5 sizes, for ladies from 22 to 30 inches waist measure, and requires, for the medium size, 6 yards material 44 inches wide, or 9½ yards 27 inches. Price 30 cents.

These patterns are for sale by the McCall Co., New York. The JOURNAL will procure them for any lady reader who may desire them.

Low Rates to the Coast.

The Northern Pacific railroad has just put into effect a series of low round-trip rates to Pacific coast points. These California tickets are good until April 30th, 1894, and are good for stop over points under certain conditions.

These rates will enable those desiring so to do, to spend the winter in Southern California, or to visit the Mid-winter Fair to be held at San Francisco. This latter event will undoubtedly be second only to the World's Fair just closed, and will repay a visit, as it will exhibit the resources and capabilities of California.

St. Paul, Minneapolis & Duluth to Northern Pacific coast points and return $65.50; to San Francisco and return to Missouri river, $80.50 to Los Angeles and return to Missouri river $90.00.

Commencing Nov. 21st, the Northern Pacific will sell tickets to points in Ontario and Quebec for $40, good 90 days; to points east of Montreal slightly higher. For tickets and full information, call on or write,

C. A. SHARKEY,
[31-tf] Agent N. P. R, Cookston.

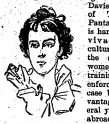
AN ADMINISTRATION VICTORY.

The Vice President's Son Wins a Republican Editor's Daughter.



MRS. LEWIS STEVENSON.

Mrs. Lewis G. Stevenson, the bride of Vice President Stevenson's only son, was a charming young society woman in Bloomington, the daughter of W. O. Davis, proprietor of The Daily Pantagraph. She is handsome and vivacious and cultured beyond the average of women, a college training being reenforced in her case by the advantages of several years' travel abroad and a marked proficiency in most of the languages of modern Europe. Her collegiate education was secured in part at the state normal university at Bloomington and by subsequent attendance at a Boston college.

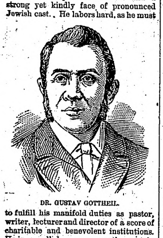
The late Jesse W. Fell, an intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln and one of the founders of the Republican party, was Mrs. Stevenson's grandfather, and as The Pantagraph, her father's paper, is one of the stanchest Republican journals in central Illinois her lineage may be said to be entirely Republican, so that party lines were evidently left entirely out of consideration by the young people in arranging for their union. As their families were intimate and their respective fathers strong personal friends in spite of party differences, and as, moreover, they had known each other from childhood, there was no reason in their case, if there ever is, why such matters should be considered.

Mr. Stevenson, the bridegroom, is his father's private secretary and has had some experience as a journalist. He has just turned 24 years and has not enjoyed the best of health for several years, owing to an accident which befell him while at college and which compelled him to leave without completing his scholastic course. His education has not been by any means neglected, however, though most of it was got by private study, and he is said to be singularly well informed. A summer spent in the bracing air of the Adirondack mountains and at the seaside seemed to put him thoroughly on his feet in time for the wedding, and it is likely that his wedding tour in the south of France will effect a permanent improvement.

"FATHER OF THE UNFORTUNATE."

Rabbi Gustav Gottheil of New York Is So Styled.

Foremost among the leaders of Judaism in the United States is Dr. Gustav Gottheil, rabbi of the Temple Emanu-El, in Fifth avenue, New York, the richest Hebrew congregation in America, if not in the world. He is personally one of the most genial of men, and though nearly 65 years old is as vigorous as a man of 30. He is of medium height and sturdy build, with square shoulders and a strong yet kindly face of pronounced Jewish cast. He labors hard, as he must to fulfill his manifold duties as pastor, writer, lecturer and director of a score of charitable and benevolent institutions. He is as well known among the wretched tenements of New York's east side Ghetto as to the members of his own congregation and is popularly styled "the Father of the Unfortunate," an affectionate pseudonym bestowed upon him by Jesse Seligman, the New York banker.



DR. GUSTAV GOTTHEIL.

Dr. Gottheil was born in Posen, Prussia, in 1827, and began the study of theology before he was 15 years of age. He completed his studies at Berlin under such famous teachers as Haldheim, Zung and Heimschneider, whose influence as reformers upon the religion of their race has been deep and lasting. For a few years Dr. Gottheil was assistant rector of the Reform congregation in Berlin. In 1860 he became rabbi of the congregation of British Jews at Manchester and remained there for 18 years. Then he came to the United States and succeeded Rabbi Guttheim as pastor of Temple Emanu-El. When Dr. Samuel Adler, senior rabbi of the temple, retired after a long career as one of the foremost teachers of Judaism, Dr. Gottheil succeeded him. Soon after he became a director of the Hebrew Union college in Cincinnati and for many years maintained a Hebrew preparatory school, from which were graduated many of the present pastors of Hebrew synagogues in this country.

As a writer on theological matters Dr. Gottheil long ago established his right to a place among the foremost churchmen in the United States, and no Hebrew has more respect and admiration from Christians. Dr. Gottheil lives in a fashionable quarter of upper Fifth avenue. He has four children. One of them, Richard Gottheil, is professor of Semitic and rabbinical literature in Columbia college.

Women Who Support Their Husbands.

American women are yearly growing more independent. The statistics show that over 3,000,000 women are earning independent incomes in this country. There are some 2,500 practicing medicine, 6,000 managing postoffices, 275 preaching the gospel, and in New York city alone 27,000 of them support their husbands.

TRICKS THAT FAILED.

ACCIDENT AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES EVER WATCHFUL.

How a Brooklyn Man Drew Damages Through an Injured Double—Value of the Time Dater—It Took Three Years to Catch the Slick Stockman.

A Brooklyn man who was hard up ran up against his double, whose financial situation was equally depressing. Each was astounded at the resemblance he bore to the other, and by common consent they joined fortunes and rooms together. A day or two after one of the two Dromios was knocked down by a wagon and sustained a fracture of the leg. He was carried home, and the brilliant idea at once occurred to his roommate to take advantage of the resemblance between the two and draw $25 from an insurance company for as long a period as possible. Borrowing the injured man's clothes, he paid a visit to an avuncular relative, from whom he borrowed a few dollars. He went next to an insurance company and took out a policy. Two weeks later a claim came for total disablement, and the injured man was easily identified as the holder of the policy, his roommate being careful to keep out of the way. There could be no doubt as to the man's leg being broken, and as the officers of the company recollected that the man who took out the policy was sound in wind and limb there seemed little reason to doubt that the accident had occurred since the premium was paid. No question was raised, and for three or four weeks the $25 was paid with a regularity highly satisfactory to the well member of the firm.

But the sick man came to the conclusion that he was not getting a square deal. Unable to leave his bed, he could not take part in the jollifications in which his comrade delighted, and it appeared to him that he was not getting more than about 20 cents on the dollar of the weekly allowance. He demanded an equal division on the ground that, although his friend had done all the thinking, he had really played the leading role by getting himself knocked down and run over. It was the usual case of rogues falling out and honest men deriving the benefit. The disputes were overheard by an adjoining roomer, who promptly gave away the story, with the result that the weekly payments came to a sudden and distressing end.

A case demonstrating the value of a time dater occurred in Ohio. A man carrying a large amount of accident insurance had fallen a few days behind in his premium, but one afternoon a relative brought in the small amount and obtained a receipt for it. That day the insured was crippled in a street car accident in Columbus, and it was of course claimed that the premium was paid before the accident took place. The facts were distinctly favorable to the injured man, for investigation proved that there were two street car accidents at about the same place the same day, two or three people being injured in each accident. The police records threw no light on the subject, and the man appeared to have been taken away by his friends. There was little doubt that the premium was paid between the two accidents, though there was much difficulty in fixing the exact time.

It was finally ascertained that a telegram had been sent from Columbus an hour after the first accident asking to have the premium paid, and this circumstance was in itself so suspicious that payment of the benefit was refused.

A compromise was finally agreed to, but considerably later two witnesses were found to prove that the man was hurt in the first accident, so that if the premium was paid in consequence of the telegram fraud was evidently contemplated. But for the difficulty in proving the exact hour of payment the claim would not have been seriously considered. As it was, however, the applicant's case was on the face of it quite a strong one.

Every one has heard of the man who had been reported as dead, and whose friends had collected the insurance, indulging too freely in whisky and making a complaint to the insurance company that the money had not been fairly divided. Instances in which money has been claimed on account of the death of people still living are much more numerous than is generally believed. In one case an Ohio stockman carrying an accident policy for $10,000 took some [illegible] to New York. On the return trip he disappeared from the train while it was crossing a bridge, and his hat being subsequently recovered it was contended that he had fallen off and had been drowned in the river. The company took advantage of the 90 day rule and then offered to pay the money if a bond were put up to cover the amount. The neighbors of the widow fixed up an irreproachable bond, and the money was paid.

The company was by no means convinced that the man was dead, and arrangements were made to have the widow watched. Three years elapsed, and the instance was well nigh forgotten, when a dispatch was received to the effect that the lady was disposing of her furniture and evidently about to move. A detective was employed to keep track. The family went to Chicago, and the detective followed. After a day's delay they took a train for the northwest, the detective also on the train. Away out in the wilds of Montana the family alighted at a small station, where it was warmly welcomed by the long lost stockman, who was promptly put under arrest. The bondsmen were good for the money, and on this occasion the company sustained no loss beyond the expense incurred in the watching.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

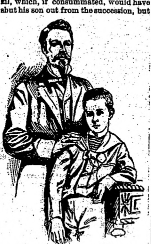
DOM PEDRO III—PERHAPS.

The Boy Whom Admiral Mello May Try to Place on the Brazilian Throne.

Prince Pierre d'Alcantara, whom the insurgent Admiral Mello is said to have proclaimed emperor of Brazil, is 18 years of age, and was heir presumptive to the throne when his grandfather, Dom Pedro II, was deposed four years ago. He is the eldest son of Dom Pedro's daughter Isabella, the wife of the Count d'Eu, a son of Louis Philippe of France. When the empire fell, the count made a bargain to sell to the republican government for a large sum of money all the rights of the house of Braganza to the throne of Brazil, which, if consummated, would have shut his son out from the succession, but Dom Pedro repudiated the contract and never accepted any of the money offered for its fulfillment.



COUNT D'EU AND PRINCE PIERRE.
[From a photograph taken in 1888.]

The Princess Isabella was never popular in the domains of her father and hastened the downfall of the empire by her undiplomatic acts when he was on his last voluntary trip to Europe. The princess was a woman to command an army, but she knew no policy. For some time it has been rumored that she was draining the hard bound coffers of the Bourbons and the impoverished ones of the Braganzas to furnish means by which her son might be enabled to sit on the throne of Brazil. She is shrewd enough to know her own unpopularity and the utter hopelessness of ever attempting to regain the throne.

The prince, her son, is, however, a very popular young man in Brazil, where he is known as Prince Pedro, and was frequently to be seen during the old days at Rio in the Theatro Santa Anna and the Ruo d'Ouvedor. He has been until recently serving as an officer in the Austrian army. He is closely related to many of the reigning families of Europe. His grandmother, the exiled empress, was the daughter of the king of Naples, and his grandfather's mother was a Hapsburg. All of Dom Pedro's descendants have strong Hapsburg characteristics in the shape of light complexions and blue eyes, and most of them have the celebrated Hapsburg voice.

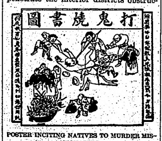
The house of Braganza which reigned in Brazil is the senior branch of the Braganza de Gonzague family and is descended from a natural son of John I of Portugal, who was created Duke of Braganza in 1433.

WHERE THE HEATHEN RAGE.

Trials and Persecutions to Which Christian Missionaries Are Subjected In China.

Those self sacrificing men and women who go out to China as missionaries, filled with the divine afflatus of a call to preach the gospel to the heathen, must still be prepared to suffer all things, even to the sacrifice of life itself, for the cause that is dear to them. The Chinese of these latter days of the nineteenth century have no greater regard and no warmer welcome for them than they had in the middle of the eighteenth century, when they practically wiped out by systematic persecutions a native Christian population estimated at upward of 800,000 souls.

Missionaries in China can only live and work with some degree of security to life and property in certain of the coast and river districts, and even there their safety is largely dependent upon the fleet of the nation to which they belong or upon the friendly offices of the officials of some other nation who will accord them protection. As soon as they attempt to penetrate the interior districts obstructions of all kinds are placed in their way, and they travel virtually with their lives in their hands. The mandarins will not or cannot protect them, and while professing anxiety to punish offenses against their persons and property really pursue a course that encourages the natives in their hostility.



POSTER INCITING NATIVES TO MURDER MISSIONARIES.

The agitation against foreigners has taken a deep hold on the masses. Illustrated posters of the most inflammatory nature are to be met with in all the interior cities and villages where foreigners have any sort of foothold. One of the most recent may be liberally translated, in order to avoid the violation of decency, something after this fashion:

> An infernal religion preached by swine is brought to us from the land of filth. It is an insult to heaven and earth and to the memory of our ancestors. Ten thousand scissors and a thousand knives would not be a sufficient punishment. The infernal books, the vomit of dogs, reek with the poisonous stench of their excrements. They belie the saints, the sages, the genii and the gods and must be killed and driven out of every part of China.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

A nameless girl waif on the London wharves overhears a plot between Putty, the landlord of Mariner's Joy, a confederate named Drigo and a stranger known as Taras to help some deserters to escape from a ship. Chapter II—The deserters arrive, a scuffle ensues in the barroom of the Joy, and Taras disappears. III and IV—After a vain hunt for Taras the waif is led by a strange sound to a cellar beneath the bar. Following the clue, she finds Taras imprisoned and releases him through means of an old robber tunnel from the cellar to the wharf. V—Putty and Drigo discover the escape and cut off the waif in the tunnel, but she takes terrible revenge on them and is befriended by Taras. VI, VII and VIII—The waif runs away and attempts suicide. Taras finds her in a police cell and takes her to his own home under the care of Mere Lucas, his housekeeper. There she begins a new life as Aura. IX X and XI—Aura is dressed for her new station in Taras' household and makes the acquaintance of Major Kavanagh, a bosom friend of Taras, who is a Russian nihilist.

CHAPTER XVI.

THE CZAR STRIKES.

While we were at breakfast the next morning a well known knock at the door was followed by the usual cheery formula:

"Good morning, Mme. Lucas. Fine weather, isn't it? Is M. Taras in his studio?"

"What can have brought out our friend so early?" exclaimed Taras as Mere Lucas admitted the visitor. "Welcome, George Gordon."

Gordon's broad forehead was beaded with perspiration.

"I was anxious to catch you before you went out, old man," he exclaimed, wiping his face with a large handkerchief after paying his devoirs to me in some choice scraps of French and laying an uncut illustrated magazine by my cup. "Couldn't get a cab, and—phew! the sun's blazing."

"Nothing unpleasant, I hope, to make you expose yourself in this way."

"Not a bit of it. But you'll never guess what has drawn me out of my den at this hour."

"I won't try. Never saw you out before midday before. What is it?"

"Business."

"Business—you, George Gordon—impossible!"

"It's a fact. I'll tell you all about it when we get up into the studio."

"No, tell me now. It's never too early to hear good news."

"Well, then—pardon me, mademoiselle, I can't express myself in French—have you found any one to burn your group yet awhile?"

"No. I have been to Cramps and Fisher and Hudson. No good. They're all frightened by the size. They haven't proper kilns for the work and can't do it."

"Then I will."

"You!"

"Yes, I've invested capital in a pottery."

"In order to help me out of my difficulty."

"Not entirely. The fact is, a kind of moral awakening is at the bottom of it. Don't laugh. It's no joke, I can tell you. I never felt so serious, so right down in earnest, in all my life. You know my conscience has been pricking me for some time past— There you go again. Can't a man have a conscience without being a redhot revolutionist like you? I tell you I have felt that my life has been misspent, and instead of lounging about doing nothing, except waste my money, I ought to occupy myself and invest my capital in some industry that would give employment to the laboring class."

Gordon spoke with perfect gravity, but I saw by the twitching of Taras' mustache as he bent over his tea that he found it difficult to listen to this announcement with a serious face.

"Now, old Bell—you know Colonel Bell, the fine old fellow who came with me about a month ago to look at your work—his feelings are just like mine only—poor old fellow—he hasn't got the cash. He's perhaps less concerned about the welfare of the laboring class than I am—it's you who have worked me up so tremendously in that way—but he's quite as eager to invest his capital in a paying concern. But the worst of it is, you know, he's got so deuced little of it that he couldn't very easily do anything off his own bat. And for the sake of his daughter he dare not venture it in a very risky concern. You know he has a daughter?"

Taras nodded, with a humorous twinkle in his eye and a kindly smile.

"Kavanagh tells me she is a most beautiful and charming young lady," he said.

"She is, old man," Gordon said enthusiastically, coloring up to his temples. "You must meet her. I've told her about Mlle. Aura, and she is most anxious to make her acquaintance."

"Doubtless," Taras' nod seemed to say.

"She is awfully nice. However, that has nothing to do with the affair. The thing is that the old gentleman and I have hit it off completely. He quite jumped at the proposal. Of course I take all risks."

Taras nodded, as if this arrangement were the most natural thing in the world between men of business, and asked when the idea had first struck Gordon.

"The very day that humbug H—— backed out of the affair and you expressed an opinion that it would be difficult to find another pottery where such a work could be fired. By the luckiest chance possible I learned the same day that Perry, round the corner, wanted to sell his works."

"The ginger beer bottle place?" Taras asked with a little ruefulness in his face.

"Oh, he does drain pipes as well. But of course we shall build a new kiln—can't make bricks without straw, you know—and get the best workmen that are to be had. I haven't said a word on this matter to any one for fear the negotiations might fall through, but last night the affair was concluded satisfactorily, and we enter into possession at once. As soon as you are ready the workmen can set about casting the group, so that it will be dry and be ready for burning by the time the kiln is finished—of course, old man, supposing that you are willing to give us the job."

"A proper kiln and good workmen—I ask for nothing more than that."

"You may depend on having them. Anything is to be had for money, and I shall be only too glad to put mine to such good use. You know how thoroughly I sympathize with your cause. That alone would command my fortune, but look what a start this job will give us—what an advertisement!"

Taras stretched out his hand and grasped his friend's in a silence more expressive than any verbal testimony of his faith in Gordon and recognition of the generous motive that underlay his scheme.

We saw a great deal of Gordon during the following week. On the Saturday there was a long consultation in the workshop with two of the cleverest men in the trade with respect to the casting of the group, which had now received the last touch, and it was agreed that on the Monday following the operation should be begun. Taras told me this when the workmen were gone, and I found him in the workshop. There he stood before his work with folded arms, and after regarding it in silence for a few minutes he said with impressive force:

"This is the finest work I have ever done in my life, Aura. I am proud of it."

It was the pride of conscious strength, not the vanity of a weak mind, that impelled him to say this, and it evoked a corresponding feeling of exultant admiration in my breast that banished all foolish thoughts and compunctions. I slipped my hand under his arm and pressed it. I was proud, too, not of the work, but of the man whose genius had produced it.

"It should be his finest work," I said to myself as the awful reflection flashed upon me that it was likely to be his last and that it would cost him his life.

We went to Kew on Sunday afternoon and lingered under the beautiful trees in the gardens until the keeper cried, "All out!" We were both more silent than usual, for we were both thinking about the group—he with some anxiety, probably, about the delicate operation of the morrow, I for the result of its successful achievement. But with my anxiety was mingled a supreme happiness, a fitting sense of my privilege in being the friend and companion of such a noble man.

On Monday morning I rose early, and going out to the atelier I saw Taras standing in the doorway, his chin sunk upon his breast and his eyes fixed on something within.

At the sound of my step he raised his head and turned, looking down at me with deep dejection in his face and with such vacancy in his regard that I could scarcely believe he saw me.

"Taras!" I exclaimed, halting at the foot of the steps in wonder and fear.

Without a word he beckoned me to come up, and as I reached his side on the landing he raised his hand and pointed within.

With a choking cry of dismay I perceived that his work—the beautiful group on which he had spent months of patient labor and strenuous thought—lay a shapeless wreck upon the floor. The irons that supported the subject stood there, a grotesque skeleton of the living figures, but the modeled clay was heaped upon the floor in a shapeless mass, the original design beaten out of recognition.

For the moment I thought that, finding it fallen and his work spoiled, he himself had trampled upon it in a fit of frenzied exasperation.

"Was it too damp?" I asked, knowing the care he took to wring out the wetted cloths that enveloped the group at nighttime.

He shook his head.

"Then who has done this?" I asked.

"The czar," he replied. "His arm is long."

"But not so long as yours," said I, fired with a spirit of revengeful wrath. "You will not give in because of this. You will fight him to the end. What you have done before you can do again. You can build up the figures once more and make them as beautiful as they were. It is only a matter of time."

"My brave Aura!" said he, laying his hand affectionately on my shoulder, "you give me the courage I lack. Yes, that is the way to face a disaster like this. Take up the sword and fight on. That alone makes defeat honorable. What does it matter—the delay of a few months? We shouldn't be content to do nothing. They've left me the bones at any rate," he added, with a laugh and a nod at the rusted iron, "and we shall soon see the flesh grow again on them. Let us go down now. After breakfast we will begin again. It's good to have a brave friend at such a time as this. Come, Aura."

But for all my bravery I could eat no breakfast, and when Taras spoke of our visit to Kew I burst into a flood of uncontrollable tears with a recollection of the confident hope and pride which had filled us with such happiness and content.

When Gordon and the workmen came, I let them go up to the workshop without a word, but I determined to spare Taras the pain of telling the story again, and so when Kavanagh came I stopped him in the passage, and, taking him into the sitting room, myself related what had happened. He listened with astonishment, and seemed greatly shocked.

"Good heavens," he exclaimed, "what a terrible blow for poor Taras! Gordon told me that they were to begin casting the group today. I came to congratulate my friend on having finished his work. Poor fellow! What is he going to do?"

"Make another group," I answered fiercely, "and if that's destroyed another after that. You don't think he's going to give up, do you?"

He paused in reflective silence for a minute, then went to the door and looked into the passage. He stood there for another minute, closed the door as silently as he had opened it, and returning to my side continued:

"No," he said quietly; "that wasn't, however, exactly what I meant. Can you tell me if he has taken any steps to discover the person who committed the outrage?"

"He hasn't taken any steps. He knows who did it. It was the czar. He says so. There's no getting at him."

"But we ought to get at the men employed by him, for what is to prevent them doing this again when the next model is finished if they are allowed to escape now?"

"Well, how are they to be caught?"

"That is what we who are the friends of Taras ought to try and find out. Taras is too intent on striking at the czar to occupy himself with the agents, but we have not that excuse for indifference, and we might at least attempt to find them. That at any rate is my feeling, and I think it is yours too."

"Of course it is. I can't sleep at night for fearing what they may do."

"Then let us make a practical beginning now. We need not bother Taras about it. Let us try to find the enemy out just as if he were an ordinary thief who had broken into the house. Do you agree to that?"

"Why, certainly."

"Tell me now," said he, drawing his chair a little nearer and lowering his voice, "when did this take place?"

"I don't know. We found it all smashed down when we went up in the workshop before breakfast this morning. It was all right when we were there on Saturday night."

"You did not go in there yesterday?"

"No."

"Then it must have happened between Saturday night and this morning. Now," dropping his voice almost to a whisper, "what time does Mere Lucas go to bed?"

The question startled me, but I answered that she was never up later than 9.

"Taras sleeps at the top of the house, doesn't he?"

"Yes."

"And Mere Lucas on the same floor as your room—the first floor?"

"Yes."

"Tell me, does she ever go down stairs after you go to your room?"

"Not that I know of!"

"Do you ever hear any peculiar noise in the night?"

"No," I replied, with an uncomfortable creeping of the flesh.

Kavanagh reflected for a minute or two, stroking the short black beard that covered his handsome face, his sleepy eyes so closed that only narrow slits of light were reflected under the long curved lashes, and then again bending forward he murmured in a tone perfectly inaudible beyond ourselves:

"Were you at home all day yesterday?"

"No; we went to Kew in the afternoon and came home latish."

"Ah! you left the house in the care of Mere Lucas?"

"Yes."

"Was she at home when you returned?"

"No; she came in about ten minutes later."

He nodded as if he had expected this.

"Did she say where she had been?" he asked.

"She went to see a friend in Soho, I think she said."

"Have you ever seen a friend call upon her here?"

"No."

He shook his head, smiling again, as if he had expected my reply.

"Of course," he said, "you found no locks broken or anything of that kind?"

"No."

"Well, that is all I have to ask you for the present, I think. But I need not tell you how important it is that no one should know of this conversation, least of all Mere Lucas."

"Why, you don't suspect she did it, do you?" I whispered.

"No," he replied, drawing the word out doubtfully, "but I feel tolerably certain on one point. There is very little doubt that if you had gone into the studio before Mere Lucas returned you would have found the mischief done. Whether she is more closely concerned in this abominable affair I shall be able to tell you when I have found out more about that mysterious friend in Soho. And I think I shall be able to tell you something about him before long. Now, my dear mademoiselle," he added, rising, "let me warn you again not to let Mere Lucas imagine you suspect her. Try to be just the same as usual with her, only keep your eyes open, and your ears also, especially at night!"

With this mysterious injunction he left me.

"Is it possible that Mere Lucas is the enemy?" I asked myself as I sat alone, shivering with nervous apprehension.

CHAPTER XVII.

MISGIVINGS.

I was still weighing Kavanagh's mysterious questions and dark insinuations, unable to draw any definite conclusions from the conflicting doubts that agitated my mind, when the door opened and Mere Lucas came in, her big mouth puckered up with pain and tears running down her cheeks.

"What a disaster! What a terrible calamity, my poor dear friend!" she exclaimed, dropping on a chair as if overcome with grief. And then rocking herself backward and forward she whimpered out her grief in a long chain of incoherent phrases broken by sobs behind the blue apron which she held to her eyes.

It seemed to me as I watched her impossible that such grief could be simulated; that any one could summon such a flow of tears from an unfeeling heart. But then I reflected the person chosen by the czar's agent to execute so dangerous a mission must of necessity be extremely subtle and deceptive.

"The beautiful figures all torn down—the whole work ruined!" she went on. "The work it has taken so long to make, the pride and joy of my dear master! I would rather the monsters had beaten me down and crushed the life out of me!"

I asked myself if Mere Lucas was not overdoing it now.

"And to say," she added, getting the better of her tears and dropping her apron—"to say that I am the cause of it all!"

"Does he say so?" I asked quickly.

"Ah! I would he had. Look you, my poor dear friend, it is easier to bear blame, when one deserves it, than forgiveness and words of kindness." She burst into tears again as she repeated the words with which Taras had tried to comfort her.

My judgment wavered—it was difficult to doubt the sincerity of her emotion.

"It is my fault; I say it, I!" she cried, striking her breast, adding, with dramatic emphasis, "and it is true! What right had I to leave the house when my master was away? What am I here for but to protect the house and my master's interests? If it had happened while I was at home, it would have been a great misfortune, but at least I should not have been culpable; no one could have said I suffered the mischief to be done."

"Does any one say so now?" I asked.

"Why, it is evident, my poor friend. Any good for nothing watching his opportunity might have opened the front door with a bent nail and walked in. And, animal that I am, I did not even look round the place when I came in to see that all was safe as I left it."

Kavanagh's suggestive questions returned forcibly to my mind, and I found it was quite conceivable that a crafty person should accuse herself of a pardonable fault to screen herself from the suspicion of an act of baseness.

"And to think that this is my fault and that I owe everything in the world to that dear master. One would say that I did it expressly to show that there was no more gratitude in the world," and the tears starting from her eyes again she rose and went out of the room, whimpering: "Heavens! I deserve to be turned out of doors, and then what would become of me?"

I started, thinking that I had a key to the mystery in that phrase. Had not the dread of being cast adrift induced Mere Lucas to connive at the destruction of the group? If she had been warned of the fatal consequences to Taras, which the production of this work must entail, would she not, for his sake as well as her own, agree to this simple measure for averting such a terrible result? Gauging her disposition by my own, I believed she would, and my heart readily forgave her offense. But though affection for the old woman inclined me to accept this explanation I resolved to watch her closely till I had seen Kavanagh and heard the result of his inquiry respecting the friend in Soho.

I followed her when she went out shopping. I slept with my door open, and waking at a fancied sound crept out in the darkness to listen on the stairs. I discovered nothing tending in the slightest degree to confirm the suspicion of her complicity in the outrage; on the contrary, her continued dejection, which the cheerful remonstrance of Taras failed to remove, seemed to confirm the sincerity of her sorrow and humiliation.

Apparently Kavanagh found greater difficulty than he had anticipated in his investigations, for a week elapsed before I saw him again. When he went up with Taras into the workshop to see the new group, which was already taking form, I followed with the hope of finding an opportunity of hearing the communication which I thought he might have to make to me.

"I shall finish it now," said Taras confidently, "by the time Gordon's kiln is ready to be fired."

"If nothing happens to you or it in the meantime," said Kavanagh somberly.

"It isn't likely the rascals will try that game on again. If they do, so much the worse for them. They will have to settle accounts with poor old Mere Lucas."

"And supposing, nevertheless," said Kavanagh, with a glance at me as he turned to Taras, "that this group shared the fate of the last, what then?"

"What then? Why, I would begin another, with a revolver by my side, and never leave it till I gave it to the world to protect."

Kavanagh nodded gravely, but made no other comment. For some minutes he stood silently watching Taras as he built up a fold in the drapery with pellets of moist clay; then, recovering from his fit of abstraction, he looked at his watch and pleaded an engagement. Taras laid aside his clay, and despite his friend's remonstrances led the way down the steps to see him to the door.

In that moment Kavanagh, turning to me, murmured:

"I have something to tell you when I get the chance. But, for heaven's sake, don't lose sight of Mere Lucas!" Then he added some commonplace in a louder tone and ran down the steps.

At dinner time Taras said to me:

"I am going to smoke a pipe with Gordon presently. Will you walk as far as the Adelphi with me?"

Nothing would have pleased me more, but with Kavanagh's warning still ringing in my ears I dared not accept the offer.

"How long shall you stay with him?" I asked, thinking that if the time were not too long Mere Lucas might be left.

"A couple of hours or so, too long for you to wait. And I can't very well ask you to go up into his rooms."

"I know that." I had almost ceased to be exacting and no longer begrudged Taras the liberty which a man always wishes to feel. "Thank you very much, but I think I would rather stay at home tonight."

It was 8 o'clock when Taras started. At 9 Mere Lucas came in to bid me a lugubrious adieu, and then I began to listen to the footsteps in the street, though I had no reason to expect Taras in for at least another hour. At 10 o'clock I went out as noiselessly as I could and looked up at Mere Lucas' window. There was no light in the room, but as I reached the door of the workshop the window sash was thrown open, and her head in its white nightcap appeared. She had heard me unbolt the back door.

"Who is there?" she cried in a tone of alarm.

I told her it was I, who had come out to see if the lock which had been put on the workshop door was secure.

"My poor little friend," said she, "do you think I could lie down if I had not made sure of that? Is it that my good little master has not returned yet?"

I told her that I expected him in every minute, and with a mutual "good night" she closed the window, and I entered the house.

I had left a light in the kitchen. Looking round I saw that everything was in its place and the bright latchkey of the front door, which Mere Lucas used when she went out in the daytime, hanging over the dresser.

"Surely," I said to myself, reassured by these signs, "Kavanagh has been deceived. There is no necessity to watch Mere Lucas tonight."

I returned to the front room to listen again for Taras' footstep. At rare intervals my ear caught an approaching sound, and my heart rose with hopeful anticipation, to sink lower than ever when the step became sufficiently audible for me to distinguish that it was not my friend's. As the minutes dragged on my anxiety increased. It occurred to me that Kavanagh's hint referred to some personal attack which he had reason to believe would be made upon Taras in the house that night, an attack which Mere Lucas was to facilitate by admitting her accomplices when he slept. It might have been agreed that in the event of his going out the attack should be postponed, in view of the uncertainty with regard to the hour of his return. That would account for Mere Lucas' present inactive attitude.

After waiting a little while another supposition suggested itself. What if the scene of attack had simply been shifted by Taras going out? I had heard rumors of persons being robbed on the embankment and thrown into the river. Taras had an infatuation for the embankment, which might be known to his watchful enemies. They might waylay him at some point between Westminster bridge and Lambeth and "silence" him in that expeditious way.

At that moment Big Ben chimed the three-quarters past 10. I strained my ears to catch some other sound, but none breaking the intense silence I resolved to end my intolerable suspense by going out to find Taras.

I slipped off my shoes and ran silently up stairs. From my room I took a small hat and a dark blue ulster, shut the door, and having assured myself by the sound of Mere Lucas' peaceful breathing that there was certainly no danger in leaving her I descended to the living room and in a couple of minutes completed my preparation.

Not a soul was in sight when I looked out. With the key I had taken from the kitchen I closed the door carefully and then sped off on my strange mission. The Albert embankment was deserted but for a poor wretch asleep under the wall of the hospital. It struck 11 as I crossed Westminster bridge. Keeping the north side I hastened along the Victoria embankment, eagerly scanning every figure that came within my range of vision, turned up Villiers street and thence on to the Adelphi terrace. A brougham stood before an open door. The driver was doing something to the horse's bit. No one else was to be seen on the terrace. I saw him stop to look at me, but as I drew nearer he turned his face and busied himself again with the harness. On the fanlight of the door was written, "Grandison Chambers." It was there that Gordon had his rooms. I stopped, asking myself what I should do now.

The brisk walk had dissipated that part of my anxiety which was due to morbid imagination. It was on my mind to ask the driver of the brougham if he had seen any one leave the house when he cast his eyes around and gave me another furtive look.

He was a peculiar looking man, gaunt and ungainly, with deep sunk eyes and hollow cheeks, and the sidelong glance under his beetling brows was so suspicious and uncanny that in my nervous, hesitating mood I could not summon resolution to question him. I walked toward the end of the terrace to settle what course I should take, but before I had gone a dozen yards from the door I turned round, impatient of my indecision, with the resolve to speak to the man. Some one had just come from the open door and stood now looking down the terrace in the opposite direction. He turned his head sharply and looked toward me.

It was not Taras. I saw that at the first glance, but the next instant I perceived that it was Kavanagh. I knew him by his slight, erect, military looking figure, his close fitting coat and the correct hat drawn low over his brows. He must have seen me and might have recognized me, for I stood under the light of a lamp, but as if from indifference or polite discretion he took no further notice of me, but sauntered to the driver of the brougham, spoke a few words to him, inaudible to me at that distance, and then sauntered back into the house.

His presence reassured me, and I was glad that I had neither gone up to Gordon's rooms nor spoken to the driver. Obviously he had dropped in and prolonged the visit of Taras. Nevertheless I could not make up my mind to go back to Lambeth yet. I turned again and walked on to the end of the terrace, where the railings at the corner of Adam street screened me, and there I waited.

Very soon afterward Taras came out with Gordon and Kavanagh. They stood chatting for a few minutes; then they shook hands, Kavanagh stepped into the brougham, and Gordon strolled off with Taras in the direction of Villiers street.

The brougham passed me at the corner of Adam street, and the driver cast another furtive glance at me, but Kavanagh was occupied in lighting a cigarette.

Some New York Breakfasts.

Nearly every German bakery on Third avenue serves breakfast and luncheon to the furnished room population of the east side. Some serve eggs and cold meats, coffee, tea and chocolate. The majority, however, provide only coffee, tea, rolls and cakes. Nine out of ten of the customers take coffee and cake. The latter is not the French or American kind. It consists of four varieties dear to the German palate—apple, peach, prune and sugar. The last named is also called cinnamon. It is made of bread dough on the upper surface of which is spread some butter, sugar and cinnamon. Then it is baked hard.

The peach and apple cakes are made of thinly rolled bread dough, surmounted by slices of apples or peaches, as the case may be. When a little butter and sugar have been placed between the slices, the baker has approached as near perfection as possible. The dough of the prune cake is made like the other and covered thickly with mashed stewed prunes.

In the best bakeries a slice of any of these cakes from four to five inches square is sold for 5 cents. A good cup of coffee or tea with milk and sugar costs the same. Those who like light and sweet breakfasts can thus be satisfied for 10 cents. Probably 5,000 east siders eat such breakfasts in the bakeries every morning.—New York Sun.

The Cause of the Pause.

Scene—A grand dinner party.

Fraulein Helene from Berlin enjoyed herself famously, for her neighbor at the table was Baron von Adlersklau, a gentleman of refined manners and brilliant wit.

"Then you are opposed to the agitation for the emancipation of women?"

"At least I should like it to take some other form than that contemplated by its present leaders, mein fraulein."

"How do you mean, Herr Baron?"

Here the baron suddenly turned away and made no reply. Helene repeated her question and anxiously waited for an answer, which did not come, for the baron now seemed entirely oblivious of her presence.

Deeply hurt, the young lady rose and left the table. Mrs. Schinkle hastened after her:

"What is the matter, child?"

In a tone half stifled with sobs Helene related to the hostess what had passed and ended by saying:

"Can I have offended him?"

"Oh, dear, no!" said Mrs. Schinkle, laughing heartily. "This baron was obtained from an agency for the hire of dinner guests, and as we thought that dinner would be over by 9 we engaged him only till that time—the clock struck when he ceased talking."—Boston Globe.

Smelling Out Bank Bills.

If a bill must be sent in a letter, the safest plan is to roll it tightly into the shape of a lamplighter and lay it in the fold of the sheet inclosed. Arranged in that fashion, the fact that it is money cannot well be distinguished by the "feel." A thread, with a knot at the end, will not be so likely to fetch a telltale fragment of the fiber paper when drawn by means of a needle through the envelope, and the smell of it will be less perceptible. So peculiar is the effluvium belonging to bank or treasury notes that experts at the bureau of engraving say that they can distinguish them when sealed in envelopes by the nose every time. A thief once showed to government detectives who had caught him that he could pick out, while blindfolded, from a pile of 400 letters every one of seven which contained paper cash merely by scent.—Washington Star.

DREAMING.

The cooling fingers of the twilight lay
A balm upon the fevered ebb of day,
And, languor-lulled by dream winged spirits in their flight
Between the half uncertain hours of dark and light,
I dream of thee.

Trilled through the silvery sphere of fading day,
A late bird homeward wings its wearied way;
And, through the wide tranquillity of upper sea
Attunes his vesper note of faroff minstrelsy
To songs of thee.

Far from the west the sentinel of light
Sets the dead altars of approaching night
Aflame, and paints the ambient skies with mystic gold,
Whose liquid light reflects the happiness of old
Of me with thee.

The sky, the air, the sea, the earth, its flowers,
Lie steeped in magic of the moonlit showers.
And I? Far out beyond the waves, where sky meets sea,
From star to star across the night's tranquillity,
I come to thee.

The evening winds, distilled from fragrant flowers,
Pour out their incense on the dew wrapt hours,
And on the still, sweet harmony of sky and sea
I stray a little space into infinity
To dwell with thee.

Thus when the fingers of the twilight gray
Pour balm upon the ebbing tides of day,
I, languor lulled by dream winged spirits in their flight
Between the half uncertain hours of dark and light,
Can live with thee.

—Amy Sevillo Wolff.

There is a difference in the time of digestion between one meat and another and between different conditions of the same meat. Raw beef disappears from the stomach in about two hours. The same beef boiled takes three hours, while thoroughly roasted beef is not digested until four hours have elapsed.

"I never get mad at a fool," was the cutting remark of a man who wanted to crush a rival. "That accounts for your always being on such good terms with yourself," was the reply.

While a good bit of coal is consumed in the city this winter the majority seem to favor wood—considering that the cheapest. With coal at $10.25 delivered, and oak or maple at $2.50 on car at Mentor or Fosston the odds seem to be largely in favor of wood. Wood is a home production every cord of it used furnishing labor for some dweller of Polk county, and for this reason if for no other it should have the preference such a winter as this.

C. H. Baldwin of the firm of Larsen, Carpenter and Co., of this city, who is in the banking business at Enfarado, N. D., was in the city Saturday night. In speaking of the financial condition of the country on the Dakota side of the valley, Mr. Baldwin said: Times are hard, but I look for a change after the 1st of January. Eastern parties are already offering the banks over there plenty of money, at reasonable rates but they don't want to loan it for longer than six months. Of course the banks cannot loan it out in this country and expect to get it back in six months from now. But the way in which the northwest—especially the Red River Valley—has paid its eastern obligations this year will have a tendency to restore confidence, and the money will come back again, and on terms that it can be allowed out. For the last 40 days the banks of Grand Forks have sent east on an average, $60,000 a day. This includes money sent from villages in the valley that do their business through the Grand Forks banks. I tell you a country that can stand that has got something solid back of it.

CITY COUNCIL

Official Proceedings of the Meeting Held December 12th.

Proceedings of a regular meeting of the City Council of the City of Crookston held in the city hall on Tuesday evening, December 12th, 1893.

Meeting called to order by President Cromb.

Roll call.

Aldermen present: Anderson, Jennings, Gervais, Morrisey, Norrie, Simmons, Walker, Watts, Cromb.

Aldermen absent: Childs, Marlette.

Minutes of the previous meeting read and approved.

Alderman Gervais was placed on the poor committee in place of Frank Jerome resigned.

The poor committee handed in a report which was read and ordered filed.

Alderman Jennings as a committee on the smoke nuisance, reported and read a communication to the council relating to the same.

The finance committee reported favorably upon the following bills:

Dr. Watts, medical services	$ 12 50
John Heldstabe, drayage	22 50
A. J. Manly, work at sewer	30 00
A. J. Manly, work on sewer	62 00
Z. Lusian, Labor	1 75
Geo. Buhn, labor	8 75
I. N. Simmons, wood	7 00
Erskine Brick Co., brick	10 00
Jas. Westover, wood	12 50
M. D. Stoner, labor	9 00
Jas. E. Greenhalgh, engine at sewer	45 00

O. E. Dampier, medical attention	4 00
A. C. Cowing, coal	160 33
A. C. Cowing, coal	30 90

On motion the report was accepted and the bills reported upon favorably were ordered paid.

The bill of W. S. Russell for assistance and work upon the sewer amounting to $71.65 was handed in and on motion allowed and ordered paid.

The bill of W. F. Arnold for work upon the sewer amounting to $150.00 was allowed and ordered paid.

The bill of T. Bang for $47.50 for labor on the streets was allowed and ordered paid.

On motion the bill for laborers, work amounting to $114.24 on the sewer was allowed and ordered paid to the president of the council.

On motion the bill of Frank Jerome for $21.00 for labor at the sewer was allowed and ordered paid.

The city attorney reported upon the bills which had been referred to him and which related to the bills for assisting poor from other cities.

He also reported upon the bill of A. Rauch which was referred to him relating to damage by sewer overflowing, that the bill was similar to the Netzer bill and that the city was not liable for the damage, as the city had taken all the care possible to prevent the overflow.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Norrie, that when we adjourn it be to meet in this hall on December 21st, at 7:30 p. m.

On motion council adjourned.

E. C. CARRUTH, Clerk.

G. A. R. Entertainment.

The entertainment given by the G. A. R. and W. R. C. at the Opera house last Thursday evening was a pleasant affair. The attraction was of course Major Hendershot, "the drummer boy of the Rappahannock" and his son, who manipulates the fife. The major is undoubtedly clever with the sticks, and filled his hearers with enough drum music to last them for some time.

Mayor Stephens opened the entertainment with a short address, speaking of the noble, quiet work which was done by the Woman's Relief Corp during the rebellion and the good which the organization has accomplished since.

E. M. Stanton, who was down on the program for an address, made one of his excellent speeches, which are always full of thought and sentiment. He took for his subject "Music and Song," and showed in many ways the power of music, and ended by speaking of the good which the G. A. R. had accomplished in keeping alive our national songs. He thought our national songs should be taught more in schools, and hoped that the coming generation would keep alive the national songs—the songs the soldiers loved to hear—long after the G. A. R. had passed away.

A pleasant surprise to the audience was the readings by Mr. John Crawford. Dressed in a full evening suit, he looked the embodiment of a professional reader, and his rendition of "Asleep at the Switch," and "Deacon Eyre" would have done credit to a professional. His earnest and impressive manner held his audience in wrapt attention.

The musical part of the entertainment was well sustained. Miss Dolly Bunnell's singing of "Jerry Dear" was much appreciated and loudly encored. Prof. Mayne sang a "Bedoin Love Song" with good effect, and a quartette composed of Messrs Mayne, Sisson, Robertson and Mix sang "Annie Lawrie," their voices harmonizing nicely. "Ave maria" was rendered by Mesdames Adams and Slocum, and Major Hendershot sang a couple of comic songs, with local hits. After the entertainment a "bean bake" and camp fire was held at the G. A. R. hall. About $18.00 was netted for the Society.

Teacher's Attention!

Forward, march, right towards the Crookston Normal School and Business College. It is the school. It is not of phenomenal growth, no mushroom; but it is making a sure and steady growth. It is building on the rock, as it were, by doing thorough work giving to its students more than it promises; underrating its advantages rather than overestimating its worth. For young teachers, or those desirous of becoming teachers who want to spend the winter vacation improving themselves intellectually, receiving the common branches and doing more advanced work, there is no better school. Besides the common school branches we will have classes in Algebra, Theory and Practice of teaching Rhetoric, etc. Also drills in debating and parliamentary law. Penmanship drill class free to all students. Only $12 for a term of twelve weeks. For information regarding board, etc., call on or address.

A Great Invention.

"I have here," began the energetic man as he bundled into the young lawyer's office, "the greatest invention of the age."

It was cases that the lawyer wanted, not inventions, and he said something rather rude, but the energetic man proved to be a philosopher and merely smiled.

"I call it," pursued the visitor, "the eternal kisser, because there is simply no end to the kisses it bestows. It is this." He hauled out a spray of mistletoe covered with white berries. This interested the young lawyer, who raised his eyebrows inquiringly.

"Mistletoe," proclaimed the agent, "is very scarce this year, and a bunch containing a score of berries would bankrupt a poor man. Now, this great invention brings happiness within reach of all. Tradition permits you a kiss for each and every berry, you know. You hold this spray above your beloved's head—so. You bend—so—and kiss her. Then you grab a berry—so—and pull it—presto, it flies back again in place. The leaves and berries are india rubber, sir, and—two did you say? Fifty cents. Thank you, sir. Good day."—Harper's Magazine.

Crossroads Burials.

Formerly it was a general custom to erect crosses at the junction of four crossroads on a place self consecrated according to the piety of the age. Suicides and notoriously bad characters were frequently buried near to these, not with the notion of indignity, but in a spirit of charity that, being excluded from holy rites, they by being buried at crossroads might be in places next in sanctity to ground actually consecrated.—Westminster Gazette.

Rebuked.

A Texas clergyman who ran as the Democratic congressional candidate in that state two years ago was once interrupted in the midst of a public prayer by a man who shouted, "Louder!" He stopped short, looked at the interrupter and said coolly: "I wasn't addressing you, sir. I was addressing the Almighty." Then he went on with his prayer.—Texas Siftings.

An Onion Sociable.

The fashionable circles of Fort Scott, Kan., have devised a decided novelty in the line of entertainments. They are called "onion sociables," and this is how they are conducted: Six young ladies stand in a row, and one bites a chunk out of an onion, then the onion is turned over to the young men for inspection. The one who guesses which one of the young ladies bit the onion kisses the other five ladies. If he fails to guess, he is allowed only to kiss the girl who bit the onion.

Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. DISTRICT COURT

On Tuesday afternoon the grand jury brought in an indictment against Halvor M. Tweten of manslaughter in the first degree. His counsel H. Steenerson, waived the reading of the indictment when the prisoner was brought in to be arraigned. His bond was fixed at $5,000. His bondsmen are Wm. Anglim, A. D. Stephens, C. A. Lindell, T. G. Thompson, Tom Bjoin, Felix Fournet.

WEDNESDAY MORNING 13TH.

Court convened at 9 a. m., and the Marin case was continued.

Counsel for H. M. Tweten entered a plea of not guilty. The afternoon session was the continuance of the Marin case. The evidence was all in, but the jury was not instructed.

The verdict in the case of Levi Steenerson Myers vs Carrie Melland should have been reported last week at $44.92 instead of $14.92.

THURSDAY MORNING.

After instructing the jury the Marin vs the Northern Pacific railroad company case was given to the jury, and that body brought in a verdict for the plaintiff Katie Marin in the sum of $750.

A jury was then called in the case of Hyginus Erickson vs. Samuel Dainerd. Plaintiff sues for $10,000 damages for assault. Plaintiff claims that on the 6th July, 1891, he was in St. Hilaire and that the defendant assaulted and struck him thus causing him to be sick at times, and to be afflicted with fits or paralysis and is unable to perform work as he used to. The evidence disclosed that plaintiff was in St. Hilaire on the day named and had been drinking. Defendant and others tried to persuade him to go home. They put him in his wagon and plaintiff in getting out getting out or falling out of his wagon two or three times bruised his face and head. The case was given to the jury late in the afternoon and they were instructed to bring in a sealed verdict.

A jury was then called in the case of State of Minnesota vs. Earl P. O'Brien, against whom the grand returned an indictment last week, and which was reported last week in the JOURNAL.

L. E. Gossman was appointed by the court to defend Mr. O'Brien.

FRIDAY MORNING.

After convening, the jury in the Erickson vs. Dainerd case handed in a sealed verdict it read, "We the jury in the above entitled action find a verdict in favor of the defendant". M. C. Malone foreman.

The O'Brien case was finished and given to the jury. Failing to believe the defendant's story of how he came into possession of the goods, the jury returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment, grand larceny. When asked by the court if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed he firmly protested his innocence in connection with stealing the goods, however, the sentence was for two years and six months at Stillwater.

The case of Ludvig Olson vs A. Kaiser, both of Fosston, was a personal injury case, in which Olson sues for $600 for slander. It appears that on the 17th of last May, a meeting was held in Fosston for the purpose of forming a Law and Order League the outcome of the tar and feather business that was carried on there sometime previous. Mr. Kaiser came along the street a short time after the meeting was over and met some gentlemen on the street, among whom was the plaintiff in this action. In the conversation that followed the responsibility of the farmers who took part in the meeting was called in question by Mr. Kaiser. The gentleman with whom he was talking, Mr. Sorenson, referred him to Mr. Olson, who was standing by as one of the responsible men. The defendant did not agree that he was an honest man. The plaintiff responded warmly, calling defendant and the bank names that would not imply that they were honest. The defendant replying cited certain actions of a man concluded with "if a man can do that he is no better than a d— thief. Hence the action.

The action spoken of by Kaiser, —as related to the court— was the purchase of a seeder by Olson and a couple of neighbors. Olson failed to pay his share of the seeder and put his property in shape so that he could not be reached by an execution. This is what Kaiser referred to when he told Olson a man who would do that was no better than a thief. Mr. Sorenson —who has been very bitter against Kaiser since the last village election —seems to be responsible for the suit, as one of his witnesses—a Mr. Yoemans—who swore he overheard the conversation between Kaiser and Olson, admitted that he had been hired by Sorenson to come here, and he also admitted that he did not know Olson at all. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, Kaiser. Ole J. Vaule and Wm. Watts, counsel for plaintiff and H. Steenerson for defendant.

An indictment was brought in by the grand jury against Knute Norming and Jans A. Rude of grand larceny in the second degree. These same cases were before the grand jury last May term, and the cases discussed on account of some irregularity in the indictment.

C. M. Christensen was indicted by the grand jury for selling mortgaged property

SATURDAY MORNING.

State of Minnesota vs Gunsted Jorgenson, selling liquor without license, dismissed on motion of county attorney.

A jury was then called in the case of State vs. C. M. Christianson. The grand jury found an indictment against him for selling mortgaged property; said property being mortgaged to Merchants' National bank of Crookston, Defendant claimed that he acted on advice from an attorney that usury was charged in note and mortgage, and thought he had a right to sell said property. The jury brought in its verdict of not guilty. A. R. Holston for State and Wm. Watts for defendant.

An indictment was handed in against Karl Anderson for selling mortgaged property.

J. I. Case Implement Co. vs. S. A. Sylvester et al, tried before the court and decided in favor of the plaintiff for $641.50.

MONDAY MORNING.

The case against C. L. Commings was continued until the May term on account of sickness of one of the principle witnesses for the state.

A jury was then called in the case of the state of Minnesota vs. James J. Klinkenberg. The defendant is charged with cutting timber on public school land in the town of Woodside. The state failing to sustain the charge of the indictment, upon motion of counsel for defendant the court directed the jury to find a verdict in favor of defendant. R. J. Montague for defendant.

The next case for consideration was that of the state vs. Joseph Lejambe. The defendant is charged with devoting to his own use school funds to the amount of $298.58, said sum belonging to school district No. 103, in the town of Lambert. The defendant's counsel, H. Steenerson, demurred to the indictment on the ground that it charged two offenses, embezzlement and grand larceny. The demurrer was overruled and the case continued to the May term.

The case of the state of Minnesota vs. Patrice Lemay was called. The defendant was indicted for petty larceny, the charge being that as one of the school in district 103, in the town of Lambert, fixed up a school with one or two other members of the board whereby his daughter should be hired as teacher, and the orders drawn for $10 more than was agreed on, which $10 was to be given as a bonus to the member acquiescing. The state failing to make out a case the court, on motion of defendant's counsel, R. J. Montague, directed a verdict for the defendant. The state then dismissed the charge of conspiracy against P. Lemay and Joseph Lejambe.

A jury was next called in the case of Ole J. Vaule vs. J. W. Wheeler as assignee of Sylvester & Finseth. Wm. Watts, counsel for the plaintiff and E. M. Stanton, counsel for the defendant. When the assignment was made to Mr. Wheeler, March 4th last, among the stuff assigned were eight head of horses and eight head of cattle. This stock was left for Mr. Finseth to take care of until they could be sold, with the understanding that he would pay Mr. Finseth what was right for the work. The stock was sold on the 15th of July, and at the sale Mr. Finseth bought $324.16 worth of stock. Mr. Finseth soon after presented his bill for $375 for taking care of that stock. Mr. Wheeler thought the charge extraordinarily high and refused to pay that amount. Soon after Mr. Finseth sold his claim to Ole J. Vaule and Mr. Vaule brings suit.

TUESDAY MORNING, DEC. 19TH.

The above case was finished and given to the jury just before noon.

The case of the First National bank of Crookston vs. Nels J. Jevning was settled by judgment being entered for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, the plaintiff to submit an itemized statement to defendant of collaterals and amount collected.

The case of First National bank of Crookston vs. S. A. Sylvester was settled in the same way as the last above.

A jury was called in the case of Conekaim Bros. vs. Ed Anderson, but the defendant withdrew his answer and judgment was entered for plaintiff. The claim is for cigars sold the defendant.

The jury returned a verdict in the case of Ole Vaule vs. J. W. Wheeler for $205.85.

The case of P. O'Brien vs. Nels Erickson, appeal from justice court by defendant on questions of law, was argued before the court and the judgment of the court below reversed.

In two cases of The Millers' Manufacturing Co., one against Fred Edenholm and the other against Gilbert Olson, a motion was entered by the plaintiff to dismiss the appeal from the justice court. They will be decided later.

A motion was made by plaintiff in the case of Aultman, Miller & Co., vs. John Ellington, for a new trial. The order of the court was that if the plaintiff would not remit the amount of the verdict, $110.31, a new trial would be granted. The case was tried on the 8th of December.

The county commissioners reported to the Court that Jailor Grundyson had disobeyed orders regarding his duties in and about the county jail. Mr. Grundyson was brought before the Court and informed of the complaint laid against him and given until Saturday to make his answer or excuses.

It seems that the grand jury, in its report to the court, scored the sheriff a little, too, as to his stewardship in the management of the jail and of his business.

WEDNESDAY DEC. 20TH.

Wednesday morning court convened at 9 o'clock. The case of Walter A. Woods Harvester Co., vs Andrew Ramberg was called. After calling a jury in this case it was agreed to try another case with it, that of W. A. Woods Harvester Co. vs Martin Markuson; they being alike as to facts involved. John L. Townley Esq., from St. Paul, appeared as counsel for plaintiff and Montague & Bucklen as counsel for defendants. It appears that on August 5th, 1893, Mr. Valelly, acting as agent for plaintiff, exhibited a binder at McIntosh to the defendants and took an order from each for a binder like the one exhibited to them. Mr. Vallelly returned to Crookston and shipped the two machines to Mentor on the 8th and went out with them to set them up and make them work. Upon arriving at Mentor the defendants were there and the machines were loaded on wagons and all started for the defendant's farm. When a few miles from Mentor they stopped at Nup Christianson's farm for dinner. Here the defendants refused to go any further with the machines or accept them, as they claimed them to be rusty and old and not according to the written contract. No persuasion could induce the defendants to accept the machines and they were left under a tree on Christianson's place and are there yet. The machines had been stored in McKinnon's warehouse over last winter and were claimed to be old and rusty, and not same in condition as the sample from which defendants gave their order.

Low Rates to the Coast.

The Northern Pacific railroad has just put into effect a series of low round-trip rates to Pacific coast points. These California tickets are good until April 30th, 1894, and are good for stop over points under certain conditions.

These rates will enable those desiring so to do, to spend the winter in Southern California, or to visit the Mid-winter Fair to be held at San Francisco. This latter event will undoubtedly be second only to the World's Fair just closed, and will repay a visit, as it will exhibit the resources and capabilities of California.

St. Paul, Minneapolis & Duluth to Northern Pacific coast points and return $65.50; to San Francisco and return to Missouri river, $80.50 to Los Angeles and return to Missouri river $90.00.

"A POLK CO. FIEND"

Is the Epithet Applied to Sheriff Grundysen by a Discharged Prisoner,

Who Brings Suit Against the Sheriff to Recover Damages for Starving Him

While Incarcerated in the Polk County Jail from March to September, 1893.

He Claims that the Scanty Food Received was Unfit for Human Beings.

Finally he Became too Weak to Walk Without Assistance—Appeals to the Sheriff Useless.

The Complaint in Full.

Sheriff Grundysen may have to give up some of the money which it is alleged should have gone to purchase food for the prisoners in the county jail.

An action has been filed in the district court, wherein one Nels Olson is plaintiff and Arne Grundysen is defendant. As will be seen by the complaint published below Olson charges the sheriff with not giving him a sufficient quantity of food while confined in the county jail here. Olson claims to have received only food enough to keep him from starving to death, and so emaciated did he finally become that he was unable to walk without assistance. The scanty allowance of food given him was unfit for human beings, the meat especially being charaterized as "in a state of decomposition." When an appeal was made to the sheriff, the prisoners were told they could eat the food provided, or starve.

This man Olson is a watchmaker in the village of Strand, Norman county, and was indicted for some petty offense and sent to the Polk county jail to await trial. He was incarcerated in the jail about eight months, was tried and acquitted. It is said that when he returned to his home he looked as though he was in the last stages of consumption, and his friends scarcely knew him. He now sues the sheriff for $2,500 damages. The following is the complaint:

In the District Court of Polk county, Minn:

Nels Olson, plaintiff, vs. Arne Grundysen, defendant.

The plaintiff for his complaint in this action alleges:

That at times and dates hereinafter mentioned the defendant was, and still is, the sheriff of the said county of Polk, in this state, and as such sheriff was, and is, the keeper of the county jail of said Polk county.

That from the 17th day of March until the 8th day of November, 1893, the plaintiff was confined in said Polk county jail, as a prisoner, and that during all that period of time, the defendant wrongfully, unlawfully and maliciously deprived the plaintiff, and other prisoners then in said jail of food sufficient on which to subsist. That the food provided by the defendant to the plaintiff, and other prisoners, was unfit for human beings to eat. That the meat provided was in a state of decomposition and spoiled, and that even the bread was purposely despoiled so that it was made unfit and impossible to eat except to satisfy the extremity of hunger, and said food was also so entirely inadequate in quantity that the plaintiff, and other prisoners, were at all times distressed with the pangs of hunger, and that thereby the plaintiff, who was in good health and flesh and strength when he entered said jail, became and was physically so reduced and exhausted in vigor and strength, during said confinement, that he at last was unable to walk without assistance, and that the plaintiff then and there suffered great and unnecessary physical pain, anguish, and distress of mind, and was greatly disordered, reduced and weakened and his general health was thereby greatly impaired. That the plaintiff and others frequently made complaint to the defendant of the manner in which they were fed in said jail, but each effort to do so only met with repeated injury, and the defendant deliberately answered all such complaints with the soothing and consoling remark that if the food was insufficient the prisoners might starve. Such is in brief the manner in which the fiend of Polk county has succeeded in subduing his prisoners into silence by famine.

That by reason of the several premises aforesaid the plaintiff has been most greviously wronged and has sustained damages in the sum of two thousand, five hundred dollars.

Wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment against the defendant for the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars, and for his costs and disbursments of this action.

O. MOSNESS,
Attorney for Plaintiff.

The complaint is dated at Minneapolis December 11th, and the defendant is given 20 days in which to answer the complaint.

Songs of all Nations.

An evening of song was enjoyed by the large audience that attended the concert given by home talent at the opera house last Thursday evening.

The first number on the program was the national anthem "America" which was sung by a chorus of about 30 voices, this was followed by the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" by Prof. Mayne and chorus, and then Miss Tillie Fortier sang 'Twas Within a Mile o' Edinboro Town. This young lady's singing during the evening was particularly admired, and she was a great favorite with the audience. "Rule Brittiania" was rendered in good style by Mesdames Van Arnam and Wheeler and Messrs Durand and Wheeler. And then came the Marseillaise Hymn by Misses Veronneau and Fortier and Messrs Lanctot and Hamel. "The Dear Little Shamrock" was sung by S. F. Murray good enough to please any Irishman, and the "Beggars Carnival" by Mesdames Adams and Slocum and Messrs March and Mix, in character, was excellently given and loudly encored. A Chinese chorus by Margret Arnold and a number of little children was novel and amusing and pleased the audience immensely. "Watch on the Rhine," by Misses Munch and Johnson and Messrs Wheeler and Mayne concluded the first part.

"Red, White and Blue and a Russian National Hymn" were rendered with a spirit and vim strong enough to please the most enthusiastic patriot. "The Blue Bells of Scotland," by Mesdames Adams and Wheeler and Messrs Sisson and Robertson was well received and a Scandinavian selection by Misses Mosseln and Johnson and Messrs Elken and Rude seemed to strike the audience as about the proper thing. A Gypsy chorus by 12 young ladies led by Miss Tillie Fortier would have done credit to an opera chorus. Dr. W. A. Robertson sang in good voice "The Land o' the Leal" which was followed by "Star Spangled Banner" by Miss Fortier and chorus, and "Home Sweet Home" by Mrs Adams and chorus. A camp scene, with tent, gun and soldiers, and the singing of "Tenting on the old Camp Ground," by Prof. Mayne and chorus finished the entertainment.

Mrs. S. B. Van Arnam who acted as musical director, and Miss Clara Reynolds as pianist, performed their duties successfully.

Much credit is due Mrs Van Arnam and Mrs. Slocum, who planned the concert and drilled the participants.

About $76 was netted, which goes to the Congregational church.

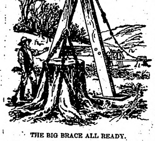
UPROOTING STUMPS.

THE SOLIDEST YIELD TO THE POWER OF THE LEVER.

And When They Are Pulled They Are Made Into a Fence That Is Rugged and Strong and Impassable Forever, and Satisfies Also the Artistic Sense.

"You may talk about yer hedges, en yer wire fences, en yer stun walls, en yer rails all you've a min to, but I tell ye they ain't none on 'em a comparin to stump fences fer lastin, en fer keepin stock in, en keepin it out, en fer good looks. I hev heerd some folks say stump fences wuzn't hansom, but I disagree with them folks. I think stump fences is pleasant things to look at.

"They wuz a feller up here in old Tioga county last summer en fall that paints pictures fer a livin, en he made a lot of sketches of the stump fences on my farm. He said he hed made a discovery when he run acrost stump fences, en he's a-goin to make a ile paintin of a corner in the fence in my 10 acre lot, where the rozberry bushes is thick, with his wife a-pickin berries into it.



THE BIG BRACE ALL READY.

"He's a-goin to make another one, he says, of the king stump of the fence that's got roots that run 15 feet up into the air. Behind the stump stands a sugar maple, en growin close by en in front of the stump is some shoemake bushes. That artist said when the leaves of that tree en them bushes turned in the fall, their yeller en red en the purple of the hill in the distance, with the dark brown of the stump roots, made a great scheme o' color. I didn't know what he meant till he explained it to me en showed me the water color sketch he made of it. Then I understood it, en I shook hands with him. I see he hed some sense, though when he first come around en began to make pictures in the valley en on the hill where my farm is I 'greed with my neighbors in thinkin a full grown man that couldn't find nothin better to do than make pictures wa'n't much."

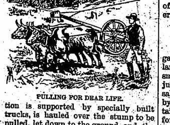
When my friend—the Tioga county farmer—had got that far in his monologue, he stopped to draw breath.

"That feller," he went on after a little, "larnt me more about good lookin things than I ever knew before. I alwiz knowed this here valley wuz a hansom place, but I didn't know why it wuz so. En, ez I said, he made a friend of me by seein the good looks they is in good, honest stump fences."

Stump fences exist only in regions originally covered by a growth of pine and some other varieties of practically indestructible timber. The stumps of pines do not decay in the ground, as do those of hard wood and most other trees, owing no doubt to the great amount of pitch contained in the roots. Nor do these stumps yield readily to the force of dynamite. They may be split by explosion, to be sure, but they are so firmly anchored by their long, strong and sinuous roots that there is no practicable method of getting rid of them save by extraction. So large a proportion of the ground in which pine has grown is taken up by the stumps that in order to make it cultivatable with profit they must be removed.

The man who discovered how to perform this gigantic dentistry of pioneer work is entitled to a statue in every township in the old time pine regions, and he who found that the extracted stumps were excellent material for fences, and so made it profitable to uproot them, is entitled to similar honors. Their names, however, have not been preserved, but the root fences that are to be found in many localities are, after all, sufficient memorials to their ingenuity and sound, hard sense.

There are two general types of stump pullers. In one the chief features are a strong wooden truss frame from 10 to 15 feet high, a massive steel screw, a circular revolving nut and drum of mammoth size and a long, strong chain or cable. The frame, which in transportation is supported by specially built trucks, is hauled over the stump to be pulled, let down to the ground, and the trucks are removed. Men have already dug about the roots and inserted strong chains under them. These chains are carried up to the eye which depends from the lower end of the screw by a collar, and hooked. The great chain or cable has already been wound on the drum of the revolving nut, which is termed the "bullwheel." When all is ready, the chain is unwound, the bullwheel revolves, the screw rises, and the stump comes out—unless something breaks.



PULLING FOR DEAR LIFE.

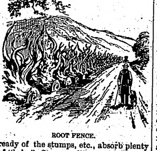
The unwinding of the chain may be accomplished by attaching to its free end one or more strong teams, which are driven away from the machine with much straining of muscle on their part and shouting and whip cracking on the part of the driver, or a winding drum may be used. This machine is anchored at some distance from the frame and is operated by a lever, to which a team is attached and driven in a circle. The chain is wound upon this drum as it revolves.

When the chain breaks, as it sometimes does, some one is apt to be hurt. That some one is generally the man who tends the bullwheel. The strain on the chain is really enormous, and its fracture is followed by rapid revolutions of the bullwheel in a reverse direction, the broken end of the chain flying about with each turn of the wheel. To be struck by this loose end means a broken leg or arm almost certainly, and sometimes the bullwheel tender is killed outright or so badly hurt that death ultimately ensues.

The lever is much more generally used than the bullwheel machine. Its essential parts are a long, strong lever formed of a moderate sized tree trunk, divers rods and chains and "A" shaped timber constructions, technically known as "braces." These braces are of three sizes. A "big brace" is 18 feet high, a "middle brace" 14 and a "little brace" 8. The stump to be pulled is treated in advance exactly as the one to be extracted by a bullwheel. A brace is set over it, the chains and rods are connected, a team is attached to the free end of the lever and started up, and the stump comes out—that is, as before, if nothing breaks. The sweeping end of the lever is supported by a heavy wheel, which moves in the arc of a circle. Near the other end the lever is chained to a stump, which acts as a fulcrum, and is for the time called the "anchor," and the "take up rods," which connect with the "brace rods," are hooked into eyes, shown in the cut, first on one side of the fulcrum and then on the other, so as to get a purchase with the backward as well as the forward movement of the lever.

The men who tend or hook up the takeup levers bear a somewhat similar relation to the operation of this machine as the bullwheel tender does to the other machine, and they are in about the same physical danger. The breaking of a rod, a hook or a chain link under the great strain is almost certain to result disastrously, and I have seen a man hit by a broken rod thrown 20 feet away, to be picked up unconscious. In this particular instance the man was not seriously hurt, but his escape was regarded as almost miraculous. Hardly a season passes with any "stump gang" that some one is not badly injured.

A stump gang usually consists of 10 or 15 men, although the actual operation of either type of machine does not require more than four or five. The contracting stump puller usually engages to put the stumps into fence as well as to extract them, and this work and the making ready of the stumps, etc., absorb plenty of "help." Stump pulling is done mostly in the spring and fall, beginning as soon as the frost is out of the ground in the early part of the year and continuing until everything is frozen hard in the latter part.



ROOT FENCE.

There is a heavy decline in the business of late, due to some extent to the fact that so many stumpy fields have already been cleared, but more to the present low price of agricultural land. Three dollars a stump is a low price for pulling, and yet there are sometimes from 20 to 60 stumps to the acre. If land cleared is not worth more than $50 or $60 an acre, it will be seen that the expenditure of the money needed to take the stumps out is a losing operation. It could not be done at all if it were not that the stumps may be used for fencing.

Pine stumps vary in obduracy according to the soil on which they stand. Where it is flat and wet, the roots spread out over the surface and the stumps come up easily. Where it is dry or clayey, they run down into the soil sometimes to great depths. Often the stump yields after a half hour's work. Sometimes it takes a day or two to get out a big one. The puller must of course take the risk of running against a particularly hard one now and then, but too many of this sort take off the profits of the business with great rapidity, and a run of jobs on clay soil may bankrupt an operator whose capital is limited.

Navigation of the Dead Sea.

At length the Dead sea is to be navigated, and two sailing boats, one rather large and heavy for cargo and the other smaller and neater for passengers, have just been conveyed from Jaffa to Jerusalem by rail and thence to the Dead sea by road. The boats belong to the sultan, as does also the Dead sea, which forms part of the crown property, and it is Abdul Hamid's intention to turn to good account the salt, bitumen and sulphur that abound there.

Regimental Journalism.

Few corps in the British army are now without their regimental magazines or weekly papers. The first of these publications was that started three years ago by the Ennisken Fusileers, under the title of "The Sprig of Shillelagh," an appropriate name, considering the number of men belonging to this corps who are laid up all the time with broken heads. The organ of the Somersetshire regiment rejoices in the name of "The Light Bob Gazette."

HIS HAND WAS ROUGH.

His hand was rough and His hand was hard,
  For He wrought in wood in Nazareth town;
With naught of worship, with no regard,
  In the village street He went up and down.

His hand was rough, but its touch was light,
  As it lay on the eyes of him born blind;
Or strake sick folk in its healing might,
  And gave back joy to the hearts that pined.

His hand was hard, but they spiked it fast
  To the splintering wood of the cursed tree;
And He hung in the sight of the world, at last,
  In His shame. And the red blood trickled free.

Valuable Waste.

"Refiners of nitrate of silver for the use of photographers," said one of the profession, "have agents traveling constantly about the country collecting the waste clippings of sensitized paper that accumulate in every photograph gallery. They buy all they can find and pay for it in new nitrate, allowing the photographer a good round price for his waste. The waste is shipped to the refiners, where the nitrate in the paper is separated from it by chemical processes and prepared for market again. This re-refined nitrate is as good as it was originally and is sold for just as much. The refiners, of course, make a big profit out of the waste, and the photographer is able to get a good supply of material for the scraps that would otherwise be of no use to him.

"When one thinks of the great number of photograph galleries and studios in the country and the fact that the waste paper of them all is closely gathered by the refiners at a price that will average $1 a pound, he may get some idea of the proportions of a business that is utterly unknown outside of the persons directly interested. Not only the scraps of silver sensitized paper, but those of the paper treated with solutions of gold are eagerly sought by the refiners, and the photographer is always very glad to exchange his accumulation of, to him, worthless waste for a neat stock of valuable nitrate."—New York Sun.

The Clever Brahman.

Speaking of the great power the Brahmans in India possess in localizing thought, Purushotam Aor Telang said the other day: "We would consider a game of chess as played in this country mere child's play. An ordinary Brahman chess player could carry on three or four games at a time without inconvenience. The usual game played by the Brahmans consists in checkmating with one pawn, designated when the play begins. I have seen a man perform a long problem in multiplication and division, at the same time noting the various sounds and discussions going on about him in the room. I have seen a man compose a triple acrostic in Sanskrit in a given meter, at the same time having three well versed men trying to overthrow him in his argument on religion."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Got Even With the Preacher.

A lawyer of this city tells a story of how he got even with a preacher. It was on the occasion of his second marriage. After concluding the ceremony the minister took advantage of the privilege accorded him by custom of kissing the bride. While so engaged the groom suddenly imprinted a resounding kiss on the cheek of the minister's wife, who was standing immediately behind the wedding party.

The lady was indignant, and the minister asked for an explanation. Coolly enough and in a few words, the groom expressed the opinion that it was a poor rule that would not work both ways and that he had as much right to kiss the preacher's wife as the former had to kiss the bride.—Louisville Post.

Her Scheme Failed.

The latest instance of crime bringing its own punishment comes, on the authority of Dr. Leonard Guthrie, from Italy. An Italian woman had a husband, and the husband had the dropsy. But the dropsy did not work quickly enough. The woman put a toad into her husband's wine to poison him. But the poison which the toad's skin secretes has an active principle—phrynin—which much resembles digitalis, which is the best possible remedy for dropsy pending on heart disease. So, instead of killing her husband, she restored him to health.—San Francisco Argonaut.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court. Special Term, November 27th, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Louis Huot, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Godus Huot, administrator, setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained, with the charges of administration; and the taxes, assessments and other charges which are an existing lien upon his estate, and the improvements which are necessary for the preservation of his real estate; and a description of the tracts of land of said deceased which it is proposed to mortgage; and praying that license be to him granted to mortgage the tracts of land so described.

And it appearing by said petition that the personal estate of said Louis Huot, deceased, is insufficient to pay his debts, with the charges of administration, and to pay any taxes, assessments or other charges which are an existing lien upon his estate, or to pay for any improvements which are necessary for the preservation of his real estate, or any part thereof.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before this court on Monday, the 8th day of January, A. D. 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in the city of Crookston, in said county, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said Godus Huot, administrator, to mortgage the said real estate of said deceased for the purpose of obtaining funds for the payment of such debts, charges, taxes, assessments and liens, and for the making of such necessary improvements.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper printed at published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 27th day of November, A. D. 1893.

By the Court.
[33-35] C. M. BENSON, Judge of Probate.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court. Special term, December 2nd, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of W. L. Judson deceased.

Letters of administration on the estate of said deceased being this day granted unto L. H. Judson of said county.

It is ordered, that all claims and demands of all persons against said estate be presented to this court, for examination and allowance, at the Probate Office in the City of Crookston on the first Monday in June A. D. 1894, at 10 a. m.

It is further ordered, that six months from the date hereof be allowed to creditors to present their claims against said estate, at the expiration of which time all claims not presented to said court, or not proven to its satisfaction, shall be forever barred, unless, for cause shown, further time be allowed.

Ordered further, that notice of the time and place of hearing and examination of said claims and demands shall be given by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to the day appointed for such examination, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, Minn., in said County.

Dated at Crookston, the 2nd day of December A. D. 1893.

By the Court,
[34-36] C. M. BENSON, Judge of Probate.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court. General term December 4th, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of the estate of J. G. Moen deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Martin Benson administrator of said estate setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof; the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to him granted to sell all of the real estate of which said deceased died seized: And it appearing by said petition that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before this court on Tuesday the 9th day of January, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate office in the City of Crookston in said County, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said Martin Benson administrator aforesaid to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies or expenses.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, Minn., in said County.

Dated at Crookston, the 4th day of December, A. D., 1893.

MINNESOTA RAILROADS.

Annual Report of the Railway and Warehouse Commission.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 15.—The annual report of the Minnesota railroad and warehouse commission, dealing with the railroads of the state, has been made to Governor Nelson. The report is full of interesting statistics, the most significant of which, perhaps, is the showing of a decrease in the net income of Minnesota railroads from 1893 of $722,961, indicating how much the railroads have felt the prevailing commercial depression. The total number of miles of railroad in Minnesota on June 30, 1893, was 5,863.89, showing an increase during the year of 248.12 miles.

The total amount of gross earnings in Minnesota for the year ending June 30, 1893, was $37,087,002; for the previous year the gross earnings were $36,178,334, showing an increase for 1893 of $908,668.

The total proportional net income for Minnesota for the year 1893, was $15,017,278; for the previous year it was $15,740,239, showing a decrease for 1893 of $722,961.

The total number of passengers carried in Minnesota for the year 1893 was 8,121,471; the same for 1892 was 7,988,852, an increase for 1893 of 134,119 passengers.

The number of passengers killed in Minnesota in 1893 was 3, the number injured was 115; in 1892 the number of passengers killed was 15, and the number injured 84. The number of employes killed in 1893 was 158; number injured, 704. The number killed in 1892 was 120, and injured 809.

The total amount of dividends paid during 1893, for entire lines, was $9,721,745; the same for the previous year was $8,134,902, an increase for 1893 of $1,586,843.

The total amount of taxes certified by the commission to the state auditor for the year ending Dec. 31, 1892, was $1,036,263.01; the same for the previous year was $882,672.96, an increase for 1892 over 1891 of $153,789.05.

The total number of employes of all roads reporting in this office on June 30, 1892, was 90,680; same for previous year was 84,447, showing an increase for 1893 of 6,233.

The wages and salaries paid in 1893 for whole lines was $57,630,481; the same for the previous year was $53,351,802, an increase for 1893 of $4,287,679.

The proportion of wages and salaries for Minnesota for 1893 was $15,487,339; the same for the previous year was $14,526,290, an increase of $961,049 for 1893.

THE FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Platform Discussed by the Chicago Convention.

CHICAGO, Dec. 15.—The delegates to the American Federation of Labor have refused to take action on a resolution touching upon the question of the tariff. The matter came up in the form of a communication from the plushworkers of Bridgeport, Conn., which declared that after the passage of the McKinley bill their wages had been reduced, and that their employers threaten a further reduction in the event of the passage of the Wilson bill. The communication was laid on the table and the delegates fought shy of any discussion on the subject.

Chairman Morgan of the committee on resolutions, submitted a program for the nationalization of the railways, mines, telegraph, etc., as proposed by English economists, as a basis for the political labor movement. A motion to have the matter presented to the organization of the Federation for the purpose of having their delegates instructed to vote upon it at the next convention of the Federation received the support of a number of delegates and the disapproval of others. The platform has twelve planks in it, as follows:

Compulsory education; direct legislation; a legal eight hour workday; sanitary inspection of workshops, mines and homes; liability of employers for physical disability and abolition of contract labor in all public work; abolition of the sweating system; municipal ownership of street cars, electric light and gas plants; nationalization of telegraph, telephone, railways and mines; collective ownership by the people of all means of production and distribution. The principle of referendum in all legislation. It was moved to have the resolutions taken up and voted on seriatim.

A NOVEL EXPERIMENT.

Immense Balloon Sent Up at St. Louis for Scientific Purposes.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 19.—At 5:36 p. m. a novel experiment was inaugurated here. A balloon, 65 feet in diameter, inflated with 108,000 cubic feet of hydrogen gas, was cut loose, bearing in it basket scientific apparatus prepared by United States Weather Forecaster W. H. Hammon, including an automatic registering thermometer and an aneroid barometer for the purpose of determining distance traveled, altitude reached, conditions of temperature, etc., by means of self-registered observations made upon a roll of paper. A photographic camera, operated by clock work, will take a picture of the earth at 7:30 a. m. if weather permits, while other clock work so operates sand ballast as to insure the balloon's remaining in the air some days. A wire cage will protect the instruments from injury when the balloon falls. At 9:06 p. m. the balloon was seen over Springfield, Ills.

THE MESSENGER KILLED.

An Express Car Robbed on the Southern Pacific.

HOUSTON, Tex., Dec. 19.—A message has just been received here calling for a sheriff's posse to go to Crosby. When the Southern Pacific westbound train which leaves here at 10 o'clock reached Liberty, John Hutchinson, the Wells-Fargo messenger, was found dead in his car, his head cleaved open by a blow from an axe, and the car robbed. Sheriff Ellis, with a posse, left on a special engine. The amount of plunder is not known.

Thirty-five Years Each.

AUSTIN, Tex., Dec. 19.—Dick Wallace, Lum Dalton, Lewis Shelton and Bill Brunson, the four men who held up and robbed the International and Great Northern train near Duval, this state, on the 11th inst., were arraigned and tried before Judge Morris in the district court of Travis county, and each found guilty and sentenced to 35 years in the penitentiary.

Train Robber Bound Over.

PADUCAH, Ky., Dec. 19.—William O'Brien, implicated in the Illinois Central train robbery at Mayfield Creek crossing, Kentucky, last month, and arrested last week in Missouri, had an examination at Wyckliff, Ky. In default of $1,000 bail he went to jail. O'Brien is the alleged leader in the robbery.

A Big Logging Contract.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., Dec. 15.—Quail Bros. of Phillips, Wis., have secured a contract of the Weyerhauser firm of this city to bank 800,000,000 feet on the Chippewa river. The contract is the largest ever made in the state by a single firm and extends over a period of 25 years. Operations will begin next year. Headquarters will be at Hayward, Wis.

McKane Goes to Jail.

BROOKLYN, Dec. 15.—The papers in the McKane case arrived at the courthouse. The accused, John V. McKane, justice of the peace, Richard V. B. Newton, Hallan Crandall, James Cropsi, and Nicholas Johnson, are found guilty of contempt of court and fined $250 apiece and sentenced to 30 days each in Kings county jail.

Veterans Will Meet in Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 14.—It has been decided to hold the G. A. R. national encampment during the week beginning Sept. 10, 1894, in this city. The transportation committee reported that railroads had agreed to furnish transportation at 1 cent a mile.

The Nictheroy Reaches Brazil.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 15.—Minister Mendonca has private advices announcing the arrival of the cruiser Nictheroy off the coast of Brazil on last Tuesday.

Lyman Resigns.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 15.—Civil Service Commissioner Charles Lyman of Connecticut has resigned as president of the commission. Mr. Lyman continues as a member of the commission.

Started Knitting Mills.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 18.—The Rockford Knitting company, manufacturers of underwear, started their mills in this city on full time, employing 125 hands.

SIX SPASMS A DAY.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I never lose an opportunity to recommend Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine to any one afflicted with nervous complaints with the assurance that it will not disappoint them. When our boy was eighteen months old he was attacked with violent spasms. Sometimes he would have five or six spasms in a single day. WE TRIED MANY PHYSICIANS WITHOUT BENEFIT; finally our druggist recommended Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. We tried a bottle, and could see that he WAS BENEFITED FROM THE FIRST DOSE. We used three bottles, and I am happy to say the child was ENTIRELY CURED. We used no other remedy, and his cure is complete. He is now three years old and perfectly healthy. You are at liberty to use my name in SOUNDING THE PRAISE OF THIS WONDERFUL REMEDY.

FIFTEENTH YEAR.

WOMANKIND.

FOR WOMEN AND HOME.

This well-known journal, a union of four leading women's papers, has won its fame because it deals with what really interests the women of America. Fashions from the standpoint of good taste and economy. Fiction of a pure and helpful kind. Music and Art suitable for non-professional tastes. Household hints written by practical women. Suggestions and aids for self-supporting women. It is a paper for women, by women, and its writers are among the most noted authors. Every line is original, every engraving a gem.

It is a paper of to-day without espousing the great questions of religion, politics and temperance, it gives all the news regarding them. It is universally quoted by the press because its views and articles are bright and unique. Send to Springfield, Ohio, for a sample copy. Formerly $1.00, it is now but 50 cents a year. IT will be remembered that not long since the supreme court rendered a decision in relation to the timber case in which said decision sustains the minority report of the committee appointed by the last legislature to investigate alleged frauds in pine-land sales, and now comes Auditor Biermann with an elaborate defense of his action, six or eight columns in length, which he asks country newspapers to publish. We should be very much pleased to comply, if we could afford the expense of putting this document in type, so that our readers could see just what he has to say, but we must content ourself with the statement that the auditor make out quite a case—based mostly upon the statement that such things were customary in that office. It strikes us that if that be true that here was the opportunity of a lifetime for one state auditor to make a record for himself by refusing to follow custom and go strictly by the letter and spirit of the law for once. We fail to see how the wrong doings of others helps his case any.

The Kittson County Enterprise gives a highly sensational and garbled account of the affair at the Great Northern depot in this city wherein one Andrew Thompson lost his life while trying to garrote officer Tweten by which account a stranger would get the idea that Tweten was a fiend incarnate and Thompson a martyr. To show how untrue and garbled the whole account is, it is only necessary to quote one sentence of the Enterprise account of the affair wherein they say of Thompson's escape from the city lock-up: "When he awoke he found his cell-door open and he walked out and went to the depot to wait for his train to Grand Forks." The testimony before the coroner's jury showed that he broke out of the lock-up, went to the depot where he found several of his pals and with them went up town probably to get some more booze. It also showed that Thompson had the officer down and was choking the life out of him when the fatal shot was fired at random not for the purpose of killing the man but for the purpose of breaking his death grip on the officer. B. F. McKay (who doubtless wrote the article) ought to know more about the circumstances than to write such a highly colored and wholly sensational article—at least he has lived in Crookston long enough to know that the man did not go to the depot to "await his train to Grand Forks" for none should know better than McKay that no train for Grand Forks is due at that time nor anywhere near it. The grand jury did indict Mr. Tweten it is true but the Enterprise did not add the fact that Mayor Stephens and other leading Crookston men promptly went on the officer's bonds and the further fact that the leading business men of the city are standing by their official in this matter.

What a wonderful amount of love for the "common people" was revealed before the grand jury last week at the time they were investigating the doings of one of the "public servants" of the "common people." Awhile ago we used to hear a vast deal about a certain very dangerous "court-house ring" that was "devouring up the substance of the common people in a manner fearful to contemplate" and we were told that in order to get a chance to "see the books" and ascertain of how much we were being robbed it would be absolutely necessary to "turn the republican rascals out" and let in a meek and purified set "who never" (well hardly ever) "seek (?) office!" Well, the "common people" duly "turned the rascals out" secured the books it is to be presumed, but for some reason no startling revelations of fraud were ever unfolded to an outraged and plundered community, for the simple reason that no such revelations ever existed, save in the fertile imaginations of some who had starved for, lo these many moons, for office and could not get them in the republican ranks for the simple reason of unfitness for the trust. Was it because of this failure to "show up" what the "common people" have been promised and had a right to know that the grand jury presumed to inquire into matters a little as to the integrity and honesty of various and and sundry persons? Did that august body ask concerning a faithful and honest custodian of the "common people" the following:

QUESTION: "Did this honest and straight-forward public official, receive money from the Great Nothing railroad for opposing the issue of bonds for the Duluth and Winnipeg railroad?" And did the witness respond? ANSWER: "He did receive $100 in money, an annual pass on the road for 1893 and a written promise of one for 1894." QUESTION: "Did you consider that a large figure?" ANSWER: "Oh, no, I know of none so small as that while I know of one who received $1200; no, that was small, very small but probably all it was worth." Now had this inquest been held upon the person of one of that "corrupt republican courthouse ring" would not such a howl have gone up as you never did hear and would not the facts have been posted up at the four corners of the county? We do not pretend to know anything that transpired within the sacred precincts of the grand jury room, while that body was in session but perhaps the Tribune could inform its readers concerning everything that did transpire before that body—but perhaps it will not do so, in every particular.

GOOD ADVICE TO FARMERS.

ST. PAUL Daily News: The Great West continues its advocacy of the use of the small thresher by the farmers of the Northwest in preference to the huge machine which requires a regiment of men to operate it. A tread power machine which will thresh from 50 to a 100 bushels per day will give the farmer and his family and hired man and team employment for the whole winter and save him $200 and upward on an ordinary crop. Besides, the threshing out of the wheat gradually would tend to prevent the glutting of the market at certain seasons. The Great West, whatever may be its faults in other directions, is doing a good work in tendering this economical advice and backing it up with so many practical reasons and examples. The waste and wear of expensive agricultural machinery has done as much to impoverish our farmers as any other one cause; perhaps it is the most potent cause of the chronic condition of poverty of the small farmer. The quarter section and half section farmers who are the first to adopt the small tread-power thresher will be the first to make the start towards financial independence and competence.

THE Grand Forks Plaindealer very flippantly remarks: "Republican papers are registering their kicks against the admission of Utah, New Mexico and Arizona into the union. The democratic majority is doing its duty when it champions their cause. Let them in." Yes, let them in. Let a few thousand voters in Arizona have the same voice in the United States Senate as old settled states with as many millions of voters as Arizona has thousands do. That may be good sound democratic doctrine but it is not common sense. The Plaindealer says it is right to admit them because the republicans admitted some territories once—thus admitting that it thinks what the republicans do must be the right thing to do. If the republicans ever admitted as sparsely settled territories as Arizona and New Mexico they made a big blunder but the Plaindealer assumes that the blunders of republicans are better than the combined wisdom of its own party and they had better adopt the blunders of the republican party than to try to do anything on their own responsibility. Good sound democratic doctrine, that!

EDITOR Hoskins was recently indicted by the grand jury in Ottertail county for libellous utterances against the Fergus Falls bank, since which event he has been more vindictive than ever against the bank aforesaid. Last week he was again arrested and appeared in court with a copy of the Bible, from which book he proceeded to argue that no usurer had any standing in a court of justice. So violent did he become that it required several persons to hold him down and he was committed to jail to await examination in probate court as to his sanity. It is said he is insane.

IF Auditor Biermann did wrong in the matter of the sale of stumpage to C. A. Smith (and his circular in his own defense shows clearly that he realizes that he did,) what valid excuse is it for him to say that one of his predecessors in office also did wrong? Does two wrongs make one right? And by what right does he presume to call the court to order and criticise its decision? By his own showing what a chance he had to redeem one of the many democratic pledges to the people and how woefully he neglected to improve the golden opportunity.

THE special edition of the Red River Dalen is out, and is a very voluminous issue—sixteen pages and a cover—and a credit to the enterprise of Editor Bydal. Many illustrations of business and professional men, and business blocks of the city are shown, although we haven't had time to read the paper yet, we presume it is filled with lots of good things about Crookston, Polk County and her people.

Alliance Work.

The Filmore county alliance seems to be way behind the age; instead of spending their time resolving to join the populist party or some other equally Eutopian scheme they are taking action upon questions that affect the real interests of their business and devising ways and means to protect said interests as, witness the following resolution adopted at a recent session:

"In view of the fact that Warden Wolfer, of the Minnesota state prison, has stated that about one-half of last year's manufacture of twine at the state prison is still on hand and on concerted effort can be made to dispose of this twine and maintain the institution, except through organization. Resolved, that we urge alliance men everywhere, to maintain their organizations and send delegates to the state alliance with the instructions to urge upon that meeting the need of action to the end that the present plant be not destroyed, for we realize that the trust still lives."

It is a fact that our farmers all well know that outside dealers do not like the twine plant at Stillwater. They know as well as do the dealers that the Stillwater plant has already been worth thousands of dollars to our farmers, even if they have not used one-half the twine manufactured there and if the alliance today was as active along the lines it was established to foster, the prison plant would remain to protect the interests of the farmers. But it is a fact that in too many instances the farmers have lost sight of their own best interests and are following demagogues into the ranks of the populist party. The JOURNAL warned the farmers against this course in the start, said that if the farmers would only stick to the alliance as a business organization much good would result, prophesied disaster if demagogues were allowed to get control and we not feel rejoiced because our prophecy came true—for it is against the best interests of the country, as the prosperity of this country depends upon the prosperity of our farmers.

The Future of Wheat.

Much has been said, much has been written upon the future of wheat, but what that is to be no fellow knows and in the present financial condition of the country no man can predict within a mile of right. Our best judges, all the fall predicted 60 cent wheat for the bulk of the crop here—and came within from 12 to 14 cents of it. Now comes the Northwestern Miller, of Minneapolis and says: "Since early in the summer, wheat has been the one available commodity commanding cash in the northwest. The financial stringency was so great that cash must be had, at any sacrifice, and it must be had quickly. Responsive to the demand for it, the product of our wheat fields has been cruelly slaughtered. No Russian tax gatherer has been more ruthless and insistent than the farmers' creditors this year. They, themselves, had to have money, and from the farmer's wheat was the only chance for it. It came, and, for a mess of pottage the farmer has sold his all, but he had to have the pottage, for he was hungry and needed it. Misled by the tremendous receipts which would, in other years, argue an inexhaustible surplus, the world has blindly believed that there were unlimited supplies to come, and the price has gone on downward. We shall awaken some of these fine mornings to the fact that the foreigner holds the golden egg, which—to mix fairy stories—we have swapped off for a paltry bag of beans; that the goose that laid it has not got any more, and is itself about killed by starvation prices. If Anno domini 1894 does not show this to be the true state of the case we shall be greatly surprised. 'Hold your wheat,' by all means, if you have any to hold."

Duluth News Tribune: A. E. Humphreys says he will never cast another Democratic ballot if the Wilson bill passes with a free iron ore clause in it. The number of Democrats who feel just as Mr. Humphreys does are now legion. The Wilson bill pleases nobody. That will be clearly shown in next fall's elections. Men like Mr. Humbreys belong in the Republican camp. They are energetic, pushing Americans, who believe in the development and the protection of American industries and they ought to belong to a party that supports such men.

Fraudulent Pensioners.

Commander-in-chief Adams takes a whirl at the claims made by President Cleveland that the woods is full of fraudulent pensioners and fraudulent pension-claim agents and issues a circular to the various G. A. R. posts of which the following is an extract:

"Whereas, the president of the United States in his message to congress has stated that thousands of neighborhoods have their well known fraudulent pensioners, and as the mission of the Grand Army of the Republic is to encourage honor and purity in public affairs, it thereby calls the attention of all the comrades, posts and departments of our order to the statement of the president and urges them to report to the commissioner of pensions, Washington D. C., any person known to be in receipt of a pension not justly entitled to the same under the law, and to forward a duplicate of said report to these headquarters at once. Let the cases of fraud be proven, not implied. The information that comes to these headquarters daily of comrades totally disabled, whose pensions have been totally suspended, and of widows whose husbands were killed in battle, being suspended until they can prove that their husbands were naturalized citizens of the United States, leads the commander-in-chief to think the statement is not substantiated by facts. If the wrongs actually exist, the support of the Grand Army of the Republic will be given to those who attempted in the line of duty to rectify these wrongs, assuring them that the union veterans are as anxious to guard the treasury of the nation in time of peace as they were in time of war.

JOHN T. ADAMS,
Commander-in-Chief.

DESCRIBE YOUR FRIEND.

And Then See How Well Your Picture Will Fit Scores of Others.

"He was a young man and fairly good looking; smooth face and without glasses; wore a dark suit; was about 5 feet in height and looked like a married man. Anybody would know him." Such was the description turned in by a young woman who slipped quietly into the city editor's office and wanted to advertise for Chalmers. It appeared that Chalmers had left home, and nobody knew why, and this young woman had faith that her recital of his personal traits would bring him back. It was a good example of the average person's power of description of a fellow being.

It is totally inadequate! Though man be fearfully and wonderfully made, there seems to be an unaccountable inability in nine persons out of every ten to give a creditable word picture of any one whom they have seen. Because we understand the looks of a person when we meet them, it never occurs to the mind that other people do not grasp a thorough idea of his appearance with a few passing phrases of description.

Your friend comes in, and you expound to him that such and such a man has just called for him, but almost invariably your exposition is a jumbled lot of phrases which apply to the human race in general.

The other day when I rushed into my office room with a column story on the end of my tongue—or at the tip of my pen, to be more accurate—I was given this greeting:

"Hello! A man has just been in to see you."

"What did he look like?"

"Oh, he was a good looking fellow—not very tall, rather heavy, but not too much so."

"Was he old or young?"

"About 20 or 25, I should say."

"What color of hair?"

"I don't remember now. However, I don't think he had a mustache."

"How dressed?"

"Oh, just an ordinary business suit."

Have you ever heard such a description? If not, watch yourself next time you tell of some one's call. You will be surprised to find that your description would fit almost any member of the human race.

Why is it?

I don't know. We read in books that it's because we don't cultivate the habit of intelligent observation.

There was once a boy who learned how to describe what he saw. Every morning he was sent by his father to walk rapidly by an elegantly arranged window, and then afterward to repeat to him all the things he saw at this one glance at the panorama and to describe them. At first the lad could remember but few things that his eye may have caught in the passing glance, but in time he could remember almost everything in a show window by merely seeing it once.—Boston Herald.

At the Manicure's.

The manicure with the golden hair was bending over the hand of a new customer.

"Do you want your hands bleached?" she asked.

"Yes."

She applied the bleach, using more than the ordinary quantity upon the thumb and forefinger of the right hand. After working for about five minutes she stopped and said:

"It is always difficult to remove nicotine with the first application."

"Wh-a-a-t?" gasped the society girl, elevating her eyebrows. "Nicotine? What do you mean?"

"The cigarettes, you know," replied the manicure. "It's perfectly awful how they stain the fingers, ain't it?" And she smiled a smile that even the society girl couldn't resist. That made them friends, and they fell to discussing the different brands of cigarettes. And when the job was done the society girl whispered:

"What'll take the stain off?"

"Use lemon juice—I do—we all do."

"Thanks."—New York Herald.

About Opals.

The prejudice against opals appears to be disappearing. Anyhow they are popular. There are several varieties of opals and therefore several degrees of merit. The precious, or noble, or oriental opal is the supreme. This has all the colors, and when these colors are broken into spangles it is then called the harlequin opal. Then comes the fire opal, or girasole, with hyacinth red and yellow reflection. The former comes from Hungary, the latter from Mexico. The common, or semiopals, are nonopalescent. The hydrophane, or oculus mundi, is nontransparent, but becomes so by immersion in water or any transparent fluid. The cachalong is nearly opaque and of a bluish white color. The hyalite is colorless, pellucid and white. The opal jasper or wood opal is the petrifaction of wood, opalescent, but without the coloring which makes the "noble" gem so precious.—Chicago Tribune.

Working For a Holiday.

An Englishman stopping at one of the hotels was commenting upon the extreme restlessness and incessant go of Americans. He said, "You Americans have such a beastly idea of the compensation of work."

"What do you mean?" questioned a Pittsburger standing near by.

"Oh, you people work for money," was the explanation.

"I don't see anything beastly about that," was the retort. "May I ask for what you Englishmen work?"

"Why, we work for our holiday," was the reply.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Vienna.

Vienna is of nearly circular form, being 12 miles in circumference. The old city, or city proper, is, however, scarcely three miles round. It was formerly inclosed by fortifications. Immediately outside of these was a wide esplanade called the Glacis, which has been elegantly built up and is called Ringstrasse, one of the most splendid streets in the world.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Racking Cough

Cured by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Mrs. P. D. HALL, 217 Genesee St., Lockport, N. Y., says:

"Over thirty years ago, I remember hearing my father describe the wonderful curative effects of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. During a recent attack of La Grippe, which assumed the form of a catarrh, soreness of the lungs, accompanied by an aggravating cough, I used various remedies and prescriptions. While some of these medicines partially alleviated the coughing during the day, none of them afforded me any relief from that spasmodic action of the lungs which would seize me the moment I attempted to lie down at night. After ten or twelve such nights, I was

Nearly in Despair,

and had about decided to sit up all night in my easy chair, and procure what sleep I could in that way. It then occurred to me that I had a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took a spoonful of this preparation in a little water, and was able to lie down without coughing. In a few moments I fell asleep, and awoke in the morning greatly refreshed and feeling much better. I took a teaspoonful of the Pectoral every night for a week, then gradually decreased the dose, and in two weeks my cough was cured."

Why the Bear Is Stumpy Tailed.

One day the Bear met the Fox, who came slinking along with a string of fish he had stolen.

"Where did you get those?" asked the Bear.

"Oh, my Lord Bruin, I've been out fishing and caught them," said the Fox.

So the Bear had a mind to learn to fish, too, and bade the Fox tell him how he was to set about it.

"Oh, it's an easy craft for you," answered the Fox, "and soon learned. You've only got to go upon the ice and cut a hole and stick your tail down into it, and so you must go on holding it there as long as you can. You're not to mind if your tail smarts a little; that's when the fish bite. The longer you hold it there the more fish you'll get. Then all at once out with it with a cross pull sideways and a strong pull too."

Yes, the Bear did as the Fox had said and held his tail a long, long time down in the hole till it was fast frozen in. Then he pulled it out with a cross pull, and it snapped short off. And that's why Bruin goes about with a stumpy tail this day, so an old fashioned fairy story tells us.

Possessed of Excellent Habits.

A fond parent residing in a small New York state village wrote recently to an old friend of his, a Worth street merchant of this city, making inquiries regarding the habits of his son, who was in the old merchant's employ.

"I trust he keeps good company," the letter said, "and is cultivating no bad habits. Do you know where he sleeps at night?"

To this the merchant replied: "I do not know where he sleeps at night. But don't worry yourself on that score. From the amount of sleeping he does in the store in the daytime I'll warrant he gets sufficient rest."

DOWN TO DEATH.

OVER A SCORE OF WORKMEN KILLED AT LOUISVILLE.

The Louisville and Jeffersonville Bridge Over the Ohio Goes Down in a Gale Carrying With It Half a Hundred Workmen—History of the Structure a Series of Disasters, Financial and Otherwise.

LOUISVILLE, Dec. 16.—At a few minutes past 10 a. m. the false work and that part of the middle span of the Louisville and Jeffersonville bridge already in place gave way, and with all the workmen was precipitated 110 feet into the water below. There was but a moment's warning, and those who escaped going down with the mass of iron and timber started for the piers after the first trembling that indicated the giving away of the false work.

The accident is a horrible one and is the last of a long list of catastrophes that have marked the construction of this bridge. The foreman, in beginning work, noticed that during the night the traveler which had been put in place last night had been worked loose by the wind. An order to draw it back into place was given, and the engines and men started. The wind was high at the time, and the gentle swaying of the false work gradually forced the traveler off of the piles on which it was resting, when the end slipped,

The Whole Work Trembled,

and the men, realizing their danger, started for the piers. As luck would have it, the central bent was the first to give way and the men on this bent went down to be covered by the mass of iron and timber of the other bents which fell almost immediately, carrying with them the other workmen who failed to reach the piers. The north bent, or the one attached to the Indiana pier, did not fall for 15 minutes after the other parts went down. As near as can be ascertained there were 51 men on the bridge when the alarm was given by the engineer in charge of the work. Of this number several succeeded in reaching the piers. Of those that went down some were covered by a mass of timber from beneath which it will be days

Before Their Bodies Are Recovered.

The first crash when the center bent gave way was at 10:25, and it was then that the great number of fatalities occurred. A few minutes later a bent on which there was but little of the bridge proper gave way on the Indiana side. In this it is believed that but one unknown man was killed. The crash attracted the attention of those on the shore and many turned away their eyes as they saw the men struggling in midair in their mad efforts to climb out of danger. When the huge mass of material struck the water all was concealed for an instant by the spray that was thrown high in the air. As the water subsided here and there could be seen men struggling desperately to climb upon the timbers that thrust their ends above the water. A few succeeded in climbing to the places of safety and were quickly rescued by boats that pulled out from the shores. Others struggled desperately and to sink almost as rescue was at hand. A few minutes after the accident word was sent to all parts of the city. Near the bridge live the wives and children of many of the workmen. These were soon on the river bank. Many were wild with grief and rushed frantically about, wringing their hands and tearing their hair. Half an hour after the accident there were at least 2,000 people on the river bank, and as the news spread they still poured in a steady stream toward the place of the accident.

Were Carried Off by the Current

To whose doors must be laid the responsibility will probably never be known. It was one of those unforseen accidents that occur in spite of all precautionary measures. Bridge building, probably more than any other thing, is fraught with manifold dangers and the workmen whose labors are utilized in the work practically take their lives in their own hands. General opinion ascribes the cause of the disaster to the stiff wind that has been sweeping the river all day. It bore with great force on the ponderous framework which necessarily became loosened from the constant strain and Swaying of the Heavy Timbers.

A great number of people before the first span fell could see the great traveler, rising 80 feet above the piers, swaying and quivering in the wind in what appeared to be a most alarming manner to those on shore. The motion, however, was hardly noticeable to the workmen and they had no idea of their deadly peril until the great mass of wood and iron began to sink and the awful cracking and crashing of the timbers smote upon their ears.

An Ill-Fated Structure.

The history of the Louisville and Jeffersonville Bridge company is a series of disasters, financial and otherwise. Two caisson accidents took place during the building of the piers. The first was caused by the cupidity of a sub-contractor who engaged himself as an expert when he was without experience. He allowed the air to escape from the caisson and the water rushed in, drowning 14 men.

The second caisson accident resulted from the foolhardiness of the foreman in the management of the structure and caused the death of seven men. Several minor accidents have occurred between times, causing the death of 12 others, 33 in all.

Search for Bodies.

LOUISVILLE, Dec. 19.—The bodies of George Lilly and H. Plaiss were taken from the bridge wreck during the day. This makes nine dead bodies gotten out and 13 are still missing. One hundred and fifty men are at work on the debris day and night searching for the dead.

ENAMELING THE BATHTUB.

An Ingenious and Simple Method of Making an Old Zinc Tub Dainty.

The bathtub from which age and constant use have worn away the brightness is the despair of the model housewife, who wishes to have everything about her home show traces of care on the part of herself and her domestics. How distressed she is when, after several ineffectual attempts to burnish up the metal lining, the dull, worn look remains, and the unwelcome truth bursts upon her that its "polishing days" are over and there must in the future hover about the tub the air of dinginess and neglect!

To avoid this sort of trouble an ingenious idea is on the wing, which will as time advances gain in favor. Who does not admire the porcelain tubs in which fortune's pampered proteges take their daily dip? To those but lightly endowed with worldly goods the possession of one of these luxurious fancies looks to be an utter impossibility. But there is a means by which the mother and her brood may secure a tub, which, if it is not quite up to the mark in point of quality, is certainly as daintily attractive in appearance as that of porcelain.

This is the enameled bathtub. When the zinc or tin lining grows shabby, give it a coat of white paint. After this has dried apply several thicknesses of white enamel, waiting for each application to dry before adding the next. In this way a thick enamel coating is laid upon the metal, giving it the appearance when completed of porcelain. The enameled lined tub is not only very much daintier in appearance, but can be kept in order more easily than zinc or tin, a damp cloth wiped across the surface being all that is needed to retain the purity of coloring.

As company for a tub furnished up in the foregoing manner treat in the same way the woodwork of the bathroom. Some faint hued enamel, pale blue, old pink, violet, gray, cream or lemon, laid upon the woodwork completes the decorative notion, while æsthetic conceptions in pumpkin yellow, sage green or russet brown contrast admirably with the snowy lining of the tub.—Golden Days.

The Wind Scraped the Mast Clean.

Captain Hurlbut of the British bark Bowman B. Law considers himself fortunate in coming out of a terrible typhoon in the China seas, not without a scratch, but without the loss of any of his crew or even of a spar or sail. This is his experience as he related it:

"We left Sourabaya, Java, bound for the Columbia river. All went well for the first week. The men put in their time well about the ship, and one particular job that was attended to was painting the mizzentopmast. This was wood, the other masts and topmasts being iron. I noticed that the paint on the spar blistered more or less under the tropical sun.

"One fine afternoon, under a clear sky, the storm came on us. There was hardly any warning. The typhoon shot out of the gulf of Siam as though it came from a cannon. What in the distance was a ripple on the surface of the sea, as it approached us became a feathery, foam dashed mass of waves, and the next instant the hurricane struck us. All sail was stowed away, and we tore ahead under bare poles at locomotive speed. When the fury of the typhoon abated, we found everything intact. The mizzentopmast, however, was bare of paint. The wind had blown the blisters off, and nothing remained but the uncovered wood."—Portland Oregonian.

Tattooed Royalty.

The Grand Duke Alexis' right arm is adorned with a dragon which covers it almost entirely from the wrist to the elbow. The new Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha is tattooed much the same way, while the Duke of York has a couple of crossed flags upon his forearm. King George of Greece, his second son and his nephew, the czarowitz, are each of them tattooed. Besides these there are among the tattooed princes Queen Marguerite of Italy's brother, the Duke of Genoa, Archduke Stephen of Austria and Prince Henry of Prussia, brother of Emperor William.

Princess Waldemar of Denmark, wife of the sailor son of King Christian, has a beautiful anchor and a crown tattooed on her arm, halfway between her shoulder and her elbow, and which of course is conspicuous whenever she wears a low dress. Her husband likewise has naval emblems tattooed on his arm, and so, too, has King Oscar of Sweden, who served for many years in the navy before ascending the throne. His sons have followed his example.—Boston Herald.

Decidedly Unconventional.

Mrs. Angeline Allen is at it again. Mrs. Allen is the young woman who nearly threw Founder Bradley of Asbury Park into fits last summer by appearing on the beach in a bathing suit, in which material was very scanty. She is now riding around Newark, N. J., on a bicycle, wearing a pair of tight fitting corduroy breeches, patent leather shoes, a zouave jacket, a man's shirt, and possibly some other clothes not visible to the general public. The natives watch for her with bated breath, and her appearance is the signal for a rush to all the front windows along the street.—Newark (N. J.) Correspondent.

Germs In Milk.

Those fortunate people who have "their own cow" have an extra care laid upon them by their possession. Their milk cans must be kept in an absolutely perfect condition.

They should be washed, scalded and wiped perfectly dry after using. Then they must be set out in the sun for 12 hours, or if that is impossible, put before the fire. Just before they are used again they should be washed, scalded and dried again. There is nothing in which germs develop so rapidly as in milk, and extra care is necessary to make sure that the utensils contain no germs.

POWER OF THE PRESS

ITS INFLUENCE IN POLITICS FOR GOOD OR ILL.

A Workingman Shows How Its Use Is Abused to the Injury of Labor—Selfish Advertising From Its Sufferers.

That the press is a power which the people at last have cause to dread has been amply proved, not only in the last campaign, but since the termination of that important contest. That an intelligent class, such as American workmen claim to be, with their eyes wide open, could be hoodooed into a condition of party servility which made them the agency of their own degradation is not only equaled but surpassed by the still further manifestation of its power over the minds of workmen in closing their eyes to the real cause of the existing industrial depression.

That the decline of industrial enterprise, which transformed the independent, self supporting workman of yesterday into the helpless pauper of today, was caused directly by the pledged purpose fortified by absolute power of the Democratic party to abolish the tariff no intelligent workman will deny. Yet in plain view of this condition of facts and in plain hearing of the voice of conspiracy to hand our industries over to England, what is the attitude of working people—the class who are most deeply interested?

Daily quenching their thirst for knowledge from the fountain of a so called Democratic press, their opinions are made for them in England and transmitted from The World building and other agencies of an acknowledged foreign character.

Like a field in preparation for a certain crop, the public mind is prepared now by Democratic journals for the seeds of depression and the harvest of industrial ruin that is sure to follow, so the minds of the working people, who are to be the first and greatest sufferers, are so imbued with the doctrine of political falsehood that while the factory is closed against them, while their wages are getting less and less every day, and while many are needing, if not already eating, the bread of charity, they quietly accept a change of conditions which in some other country would cause revolution or a change of the ministry.

Owing in a larger measure to the subtle influence of the Democratic press, they were prepared for the harness. But at this critical point in the programme, the genius of evil manifests itself in the personality of one Pulitzer, Joseph Pulitzer, now of The World —next of ——? With a loaf of bread in one hand, to allay popular vengeance, he gains time to write the decree of industrial ruin with the other. This Mr. Pulitzer is one of the chief propagators of the free trade scheme which created hunger and now glorifies himself for relieving some of the hunger he has helped to create.

This he calls charity, while it is one of the most useful levers in the pauper finishing machine that he is daily constructing. Until it shall please an all wise Providence to put an injunction on the laws of nature, on the mental or physical powers of men, the term charity should be obsolete in America. It is an insult to American manhood and should be regarded as such by all worthy of the name.—James Johnson.

The Market For Farmers.

During the past 10 years the home market for the products of agriculture has increased 30 per cent from the advance of population alone. In three or four decades the wants of 65,000,000 more will double the present demand upon our agriculture and make a market for products ample for the subsistence of more than 100,000,000 European people. Great Britain, in her little garden patch, largely occupied by houses and pleasure grounds, produces half a supply. The sea sands of the Netherlands partially feed a dense population. Eastern Europe is an enlarging granary, and the western nations usually supply their food requirements. Therefore there is little prospect in the immediate or distant future that our foreign market will be worthy of consideration in comparison with the present overwhelming and constantly augmenting importance of the domestic market, which is the hope of the farmer of the future.—Professor J. R. Dodge.

Dull Times Are Widespread.

The big Amoskeag cotton mills at Manchester, N. H., the largest cotton mills in the country, which for years, without interruption, employed 8,000 hands, are still idle, notwithstanding reports that they have resumed. Ex-Governor Cheney of New Hampshire says: "Nearly all of the mills have their storehouses packed with goods, not because of an overproduction, but because orders have been countermanded. The effect of dull times in our mills is widespread. It is seen and felt in every kind of business in Manchester. The financial and tariff uncertainty is the cause. The repeal of the silver law may help, but manufacturers must know what the future tariff is to be before confidence will be restored."—Albany Journal.

Prospects For the Silk Industry.

Mrs. Carrie Williams of San Diego, Cal., has received a letter from a Syrian merchant in the Midway plaisance at the World's fair, praising the superior cocoons on exhibition in the California building and asking for eggs to test. If they prove to be without disease, Syria will hereafter import from California rather than from France, where disease is now common among silkworm eggs. It is possible that this exemption of American silkworms from disease may revive an industry that at various times in our history has promised great results, but has always heretofore failed to achieve them.—Manufacturers' Gazette, Boston, Sept. 16, 1893.

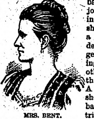
A WOMAN EXPLORER.

Mrs. Bent Has Traveled Much In Out of the Way Places.



MRS. BENT.

An indefatigable traveler is Mrs. J. Theodore Bent, wife of the famous English explorer, who accompanies her husband on all his journeys, sharing the hardships, sleeping in a hammock under a tent, and generally roughing it like all the other members of the expeditions. A few weeks ago she and her husband started on a trip to northern Arabia with the intention of undertaking explorations similar to those they have carried on in other lands during the past 10 years, which have been rich in "finds" of exceptional value to the archæologist, the ethnologist, the geographer and the mere antiquarian.

Mrs. Bent is of Irish birth and family and spent most of her girlhood in the Emerald Isle, where she developed her fondness for a healthy outdoor life. Before her marriage she had traveled considerably in Europe, and she first met her husband in northern Norway. They have a pleasant London house in Great Cumberland place, which is a perfect museum of antiquities, souvenirs and curiosities, and a country house, Sutton hall, in Cheshire.

It was in 1884 that Mr. and Mrs. Bent began their work together by making explorations along the shores of Greece. The next year they went through the 22 Cyclades isles and carried a good many relics back to the British museum. The year 1885 was partly spent in Sancos, Patmos and other islands of the Grecian archipelago and 1886 in Egypt, Rhodes and Karpalthos. In 1887 they went back to Egypt, visiting Thasos, an island near Thrace, where they found some valuable statues which were stolen from them on their homeward journey by the Turks. Part of 1888 was spent in a sailing cruise along the south coast of Lycia, and the next year they went to Bahrein, on the Persian gulf, from whence they went across Persia and over the Caucasus, attended by a special escort from the shah.

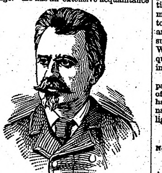
The famous expedition to Mashonaland, the most dangerous and interesting of them all, was begun in January, 1891, and the intrepid travelers only got back to England in the beginning of the present year.

IS INTERESTED IN GEOLOGY.

John R. Proctor, the New United States Civil Service Commissioner.

John R. Proctor, who has been appointed to fill the vacancy in the United States civil service commission, occasioned by the summary removal of George D. Johnston, is a native and resident of Kentucky, and up to a year ago had filled the position of state geologist for a number of years, retiring finally because of the failure of the legislature to make an appropriation for the support of the office. His services in the geological survey of the state were very valuable, his reports being everywhere recognized as models of accuracy and his geological and topographical map considered the best ever made. During the past summer Mr. Proctor has been acting as a judge in the department of mines at the Columbian exposition, and he was selected to write the report on the coals of the world, which is still in course of preparation.

When Professor Shaler, now of Harvard university, was appointed state geologist of Kentucky in 1871, Mr. Proctor offered his services as assistant, and for some time filled the position efficiently without pay, showing such competency that he was appointed assistant director of the survey at a fixed salary, and succeeded Professor Shaler when that gentleman resigned, some 10 or 12 years ago. He has an extensive acquaintance among scientific men on both sides of the Atlantic and has made frequent trips abroad. He has done much to interest foreign capitalists in the mineral lands of Kentucky and has invested considerable money in them himself.



JOHN R. PROCTOR.

Mr. Proctor was born in Mason county and is about 48 years old. He was a mere youth when the war broke out, but went south and entered the Confederate service, in which he continued throughout the contest. After peace was proclaimed he attended the Polytechnic school at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., devoting himself especially to geology and mineral engineering, for which he seemed to have a natural taste. Then he returned to Kentucky and explored the coal and iron fields of Edmonson and Grayson counties, attracting public attention by the results of his work. Just about that time he made the first experiments in photography by magnesium lights in the Mammoth cave, a process which he and a fellow experimenter patented, and from which he derived a royalty for a considerable period.

ANOTHER MESSAGE.

THE PRESIDENT DEALS WITH HAWAIIAN MATTERS.

He Gives a Full Statement of the Causes and Conditions Which, According to His Judgment, Led Up to the Recent Hawaiian Revolution, and Tells What Has Been Done Since That Time by the Administration.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—The president's special message, with all the accompanying correspondence, has been laid before congress. The first part of the message rehearses the president's belief that the overthrow of the queen was directly traceable to the active efforts of ex-Minister Stevens.

Having asserted that the United States was responsible for the revolt, the message then deals with the moral obligation of this government to right what it regards to be a wrong. Mr. Cleveland says he much mistakes the wishes of the American people if they desire international questions settled on any other than the and justice. The president then outlines the steps which he regarded as essential in pursuing this course of justice. In doing so he discloses for the first time the exact nature of the instructions given to Mr. Willis. The latter was instructed to advise the queen that this country desired to repair the wrong done her by restoring her to the throne. But Mr. Willis was cautioned to be explicit in the fact that the restoration must not be followed by the punishment of those who had taken part in the revolution, and in the formation of the provisional government, or by the repudiation of the governmental obligations regularly made by the provisional authorities.

Clears Up a Mystery.

This last feature of the message clears up the mystery of the long delay in Minister Willis' action, and it also makes public for the first time that Queen Liliukokalani has been the obstacle in the way of the accomplishment of Mr. Cleveland's purpose. The message states that the queen declined to accede to the condition of amnesty. She was repeatedly informed that it was the only basis of influence on the part of this government, and that unless she acceded all effort toward her restoration would be abandoned. But Mr. Cleveland says that as yet he has no information that she will accept the terms.

In concluding the message Mr. Cleveland says that the question has now assumed such form that he regards it desirable to turn the whole subject over to the broader authority of congress, and he adds that he will be glad to co-operate in any legislative solution of the question which is based on morality and justice.

The Instructions of Willis.

The confidential instructions to Minister Willis, under date of Oct. 18, which elucidate the president's position, go carefully into the grounds upon which the administration decided that the revolution of January was accomplished by the intervention of the armed force of the United States and the efforts of Mr. Stevens, and that the national honor demands that reparation shall be made by the restoration of the status quo existing prior to the revolution. He is instructed to inform the queen that the annexation treaty withdrawn by Mr. Cleveland from the senate March 9 will not be again sent to the senate and that Mr. Cleveland regrets the reprehensible conduct of the American minister which made the revolution possible.

Amnesty a Condition Precedent.

Mr. Willis, however, is instructed to make the granting of a general amnesty to the members and supporters of the provisional government and the assumption of the obligations of that government a condition precedent to her restoration. No instructions to use force are included, and it is evident from the supplementary instructions sent Mr. Willis under date of Dec. 3 that the queen declined the condition contained in his first instruction.

The mass of correspondence accompanying the message is so great that few of the best informed men in congress have as yet been able to analyze it. The naval correspondence sheds little new light on the subject.

OUT OF THE JAWS OF DEATH

BY FRANK BARRETT

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY CASSELL & CO AND PUBLISHED BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT

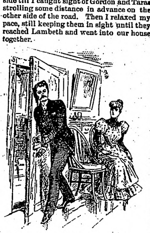
Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

A nameless girl waif on the London wharves overhears a plot between Putty, the landlord of Mariner's Joy, a confederate named Drigo and a stranger known as Taras to help some deserters to escape from a ship. Chapter II—The deserters arrive, a scuffle ensues in the barroom of the Joy, and Taras disappears. III and IV—After a vain hunt for Taras the waif is led by a strange sound to a cellar beneath the bar. Following the clue, she finds Taras imprisoned and releases him through means of an old robber tunnel from the cellar to the wharf. V—Putty and Drigo discover the escape and cut off the waif in the tunnel but she takes terrible revenge on them and is befriended by Taras. VI, VII and VIII—The waif runs away and attempts suicide. Taras finds her in a police cell and takes her to his own home under the care of Mere Lucas, his housekeeper. There she begins a new life as Aura. IX X and XI—Aura is dressed for her new station in Taras' household and makes the acquaintance of Major Kavanagh, a bosom friend of Taras, who is a Russian nihilist.

CHAPTER XVIII.

AN OLD ENEMY.

I made my way down to the embankment and hurried along on the less open side till I caught sight of Gordon and Taras strolling some distance in advance on the other side of the road. Then I relaxed my pace, still keeping them in sight until they reached Lambeth and went into our house together.



He stood in a listening attitude.

Taras had obviously returned for fear his absence might alarm me, and his genial companion, having accompanied him so far, had turned in to finish the night over a last pipe. With a little hesitation I drew near the house, and hearing their voices in the front room I quietly opened the front door, entered, shut the door as silently and then slipped unheard up to my room.

"I'm glad you didn't sit up for me last night," said Taras when we met in the morning. "Kavanagh dropped in with some startling news from the house"—he held some official post there—"and I staid out a couple of hours later than I intended."

Kavanagh called in the course of the afternoon. He asked if Taras was at home, but instead of going directly up to the workshop he came in to see me. After exchanging the customary civilities in his ordinary tone of voice he raised his finger with a significant glance, crossed the room and opened the door softly, but with such celerity that had Mere Lucas been eavesdropping he would certainly have discovered her. He stood in a listening attitude for a few seconds; then closing the door noiselessly he returned to his seat with a shrug and a look of vexation in his face.

"Nothing has happened?" he asked as he seated himself near me.

"Nothing—to him."

"To any one else?" he asked sharply.

"Nothing of any importance."

"Mere Lucas betrayed no signs of irritation when he went out last night?"

I shook my head.

"She was just the same as she always is—just. If there had been any difference, I must have seen it."

"She did not go down stairs in the night, you think?"

"After Taras went up I put my door wide open and kept a light burning all night. No one could pass my door without my knowing it."

"Your vigilance may have warned her. On the other hand"— He broke off, and nursing his knee sank his chin in his hand, knitting his brows in thought. Suddenly raising his head and turning to me, he said:

"I am afraid I must confess to having been fooled. I am still more afraid that I have done Mere Lucas a great injustice. You have a far better knowledge of her character than I. Do you think her capable of deceit and trickery—of conspiring at the ruin of her master?"

"No, that I don't. I believe she's as good as any one."

"I'm sincerely glad to hear you say so. It seemed unlikely to me; that is why I felt it necessary to say nothing on the subject to Taras."

"He'd never have believed you."

"That, was another reason for saying nothing till I had absolute facts to support my suspicion. You have not said a word to him or her either, I hope, with respect to my communication?"

"No, not a word. But how about that friend you spoke of?"

"Ah! there again I believe I was all at fault. I believe she is no more a conspirator than poor old Mere Lucas herself. I find she is a cook at a restaurant in Greek street, and so of course she is not at liberty to come here and see Mere Lucas."

He looked terribly vexed as he admitted this. "Do you know a man named Matveef?" he asked abruptly.

"I think I've heard the name, but I don't know him."

"He's one of the poor beggars who come to sponge on Taras. It was he who put this precious nonsense into my head. The fact is, the lower class of nihilists are like a set of starving dogs—jealous of each other and ready to snap at any one who seems a little better off than the rest. It is natural that they should envy the old woman her comfortable position here, but it simply proves what a treacherous, faithless lot they are when one can circulate such slanders as this. I fear I have made you very anxious. I hope you will forgive me. For the sake of Taras, whose life is so dear to us, and of such enormous importance to the welfare of his country, one cannot afford to turn a deaf ear to any hint at such a time as this, when real peril exists."

"That's all right. I feel just like that. Don't you mind telling me anything. I'd rather know it than not if it makes me ever so frightened. Besides it makes you feel so light hearted and happy to find it isn't true that you can't be vexed by what's past."

"You cannot have better philosophy or better feeling than that," said he, shaking my hand kindly as he rose.

The feeling of relief, now that I had no longer any serious reason to regard Mere Lucas with mistrust or look for the development of some sinister design, afforded me such happiness that I almost forgot the existence of danger, and when Taras about a week later told me that he should not return probably till 2 or 3 o'clock from the smoking concert to which he had been invited I bade him good night when he went out after dinner without any feeling of alarm.

That afternoon my dressmaker had sent to say that the dress she was making for me would be ready to try on in the evening. Nothing could have happened more opportunely, for I intended to take Taras by surprise with this beautiful velvet, and here was the very chance I needed of getting the important work of fitting done without his knowing anything about it.

The moment he was gone I ran to my room, dressed, and telling Mere Lucas where I was going—for she was in the secret—I started off for Kennington road, where my dressmaker lived.

It was between 8 and 9. At that time Lambeth road is deserted. Heavy rain had fallen in the afternoon, and such sounds as there were seemed particularly clear. The rattle of a train over the railway bridge, a whistle from a tug on the river behind me, were noticeable by their distinctness; my own footsteps as I hurried along made quite a clatter on the wet pavement.

Struck by this fact, I presently fancied I could hear an echo to my footfall. Was it that or some one following? To satisfy the idle doubt I glanced back. Just within sight a man was following. There was nothing in that to call for particular attention, but when I had gone another hundred yards or so the echoing sound arrested my wandering thoughts and I glanced round again. The man's figure was there exactly at the same distance. It was odd that both should be walking in one direction at a precisely similar pace. For the next hundred yards I walked slower, but the following step came no nearer, and when I turned the man's figure appeared to be just as far off as before.

It was unpleasant even to fancy that my steps were dogged, and I turned the corner of Lambeth road sharp with the determination to go on at a still quicker pace now that I was out of the man's sight, but the whistle of a train suggested a still better means of avoiding annoyance, and I stopped with the determination to ride the remaining distance.

Just at I stepped into the car the man came running round the corner from the Lambeth road, and as I took my seat he sprang on to the footboard. As he passed the door to go up the steps the light from within fell on his face. There was no mistaking the yellow complexion, the sparse black beard and high cheek bones nor the sunk head and high shoulders.

It was Drigo!

CHAPTER XIX.

DRIGO.

I got out of the tram at my dressmaker's. The car moved on, but glancing after it I perceived the man hastily descending. He must have waited till he saw me step out on to the pavement, and I could only hope, as I slipped into the house and hastily closed the door, that he had lost sight of me in getting down from the car.

With the terrors of going home alone before me I found little pleasure in trying on my dress and discussing the matter with my dressmaker, but I lingered till she had nothing more to say and I could invent no pretext for staying longer.

I looked around eagerly when we went to the door, and to my great relief saw no one who looked like Drigo. I concluded that he had lost sight of me or gone off on a wrong scent.

"It rains a little. May I lend you an umbrella?" asked the dressmaker.

"No, I think I will wait for a tram," said I, "that will take me home to my door," and when the car came in sight I bade her "good night" and ran down to stop it. As I stepped in my heart quaked, for I saw the man I dreaded come out from the shadow of the wall, and before I had found a seat I heard his foot grating on the steps outside.

It was a Westminster car—not, as I had hoped, one that would take me to Lambeth. To avoid the terrible stretch of deserted street I went on as far as Hercules buildings. That gave me a little start, for until he saw me get out my pursuer could not tell which turning I should take. Glancing up, I saw Drigo's hideous face peering over the railing to discover who was alighting, and the moment he recognized me he began to scuttle down the steps.

I ran without stopping till I reached the tavern at the Lambeth road end of the buildings, thinking in my weakness that I would seek protection if he was on my heels rather than venture alone on that last strip of deserted road. I had made up my mind now that the enemy of Taras had resolved to put me out of the way as a preliminary to attacking him and had given the job to this villain. But he was still at some distance—just near enough to keep me in sight, no more. It would be absurd to ask for protection from a man so far off, I said to myself, and ashamed of my cowardice I again took to my heels. He might have overtaken me in a few minutes, and there was no one to prevent him strangling me in the open road had he chosen, but he came no nearer. Whether I ran or whether I walked, whenever I turned, he seemed to be precisely at the same distance from me—just near enough to keep in sight—no nearer, and as I stood panting at the door waiting for Mere Lucas to let me in I perceived him standing motionless by the lamppost at the corner of Lambeth palace.

Concealing my trepidation from Mere Lucas as well as I could, I hurried up to my room and there tried to find an explanation of this strange pursuit. As I grew calmer and my thoughts more collected one fact became more and more evident. Drigo would not have suffered me to escape in this way had his designs been directed against me. His spirit of revenge would not have rested content with giving me a scare. And as he had not taken advantage of this opportunity to injure me it was scarcely credible that he would make any further attempt in that direction.

"Probably," I said, going to the window to reassure myself, "seeing that I have come in and am not likely to go out again tonight, he has gone away."

But looking out under the window blind I discovered him standing on the embankment over against the bridge nearly opposite the house. What did that mean? A solution of the mystery began to dawn upon me as soon as I perceived that the man had been posted here to watch my movements and quickly took the definite form of conviction. An attack was to be made, not on me, as I had foolishly imagined in my fright, but upon Taras. He was to be waylaid on his return by the gang, who had detached Drigo to prevent me communicating any suspicion of their design to him. But a week before I had watched outside Grandison chambers and followed Taras home. That fact might very well be known to the secret enemy, who seemed to be acquainted with every movement of Taras and clearly explained the object in setting an outpost to watch me. As I recalled this incident the figure of the man who drove Kavanagh's brougham came before my mind, and I saw again the furtive glance of suspicion with which he regarded me. Might he not be a spy obtaining information by some covert means from Kavanagh?

Mere Lucas came to the door and bade me good night. When she was gone, I went to the window and peeped again behind the blind. Drigo had not stirred from his place at the foot of the bridge. His presence served to confirm my suspicions, and I saw that Taras, to be saved, must be warned of the danger. But how was I to reach him? I saw clearly enough that it would not do to expose myself to a personal encounter with Drigo. That would not save Taras. Yet how could I get to Taras without that risk?

In seeking an answer to this question it presently occurred to me that workmen had been doing something to the wall which separated the yard from Gordon's pottery, and I recollected hearing that an opening was to be made to facilitate the transport of the group to the kiln, where it was to be burned. If I could get into the pottery, I might find an exit in the street at the back, and so get away unseen and unsuspected by Drigo.

Leaving the light burning in my room, I ran down to the kitchen, provided myself with a candle and silently went out into the yard. A heap of bricks and rubbish showed where the men had been working, and on lighting the candle I found to my inexpressible joy that a break had been made in the wall and roughly closed for the night with a couple of boards. I pushed one aside and found that I could easily get into the cellar beyond, where I saw the square blocks of clay piled up from floor to ceiling.

With some little difficulty I made my way through the cellar into the warehouse and thence through an office into the shop, and here I thought I had nothing to do but unbolt the door and walk out. But when I came to examine the fastenings I discovered a fact which I might have foreseen, knowing that no one inhabited the pottery—the door was locked on the outside. My heart fell, and I stood looking at the solid lock stupidly for some moments, quite overcome by the hopelessness of my position. In the silence that followed my ear caught the sound of a distant footstep and then the heavy scrape of a nailed boot on a ladder and the rustle of straw on the warehouse floor. With unreasoning terror I figured Drigo pursuing me hither, and my heart stood still with the consciousness that I was utterly at his mercy.

A glimmer of light appeared. It grew stronger, and then a part of rough corduroys appeared at the head of the steps with a lantern on one side and a crowbar on the other, but the next minute I breathed again as a man came into sight whom I recognized as a hand employed in the pottery. He could say nothing for astonishment on finding me there, nor was his amazement lessened when I made him understand that I wanted to leave the pottery without going back through the yard.

"Well, miss," said he, "there's only one way you can go out if so be you don't want to go back the way you come, and that's the way I come in when I've got my fires to look after, as the case is tonight. It's a longer way round and a sight dirtier, for you'll have to go through the coalyard and out into Ferry street, where the road's all up for the drains."

The eagerness with which I agreed to take this roundabout and unpleasant route must have led him to doubt whether on the whole I was quite in my right mind, and indeed my exultation and joy were little short of madness when I got out into Ferry street, where I knew I was quite safe from Drigo.

CHAPTER XX.

A PURSUIT AND RESCUE.

A simple scheme of action suggested itself to my mind as I hurried along the back streets, and coming into Kennington road I looked about for a cab. A smart new hansom stood by the curb in the light of a public house, and as I stopped, wondering if it were disengaged, the driver came out and said briskly, "Cab, miss?"

He was as smart as his cab and looked more like a gentleman's servant than an ordinary cabman. I liked the look of him.

"Are you disengaged for a good long while—perhaps four or five hours?" I asked.

"Where do you want to go, miss?"

"Burlington street. You will have to wait there for a gentleman, and he may not come out of his club before 2 o'clock."

"All right, miss. If it ain't running along all the time, I don't mind how long I'm on, in a manner of speaking."

"If you do what I tell you, I'll pay you just what you ask. Can you put out that light inside?"

"Certainly, miss."

He seemed to understand my position to a nicety and asked which end of Burlington street he was to drive to.

"The Pantheon club," said I. "Draw up, if you please, so that I can see any one who comes out."

He carried out this instruction admirably, placing his cab where I commanded a perfect view of the steps leading to the club door and leaving just sufficient space for other cabs that came and went to pull up easily in front. A good many visitors went into the Pantheon. I saw them distinctly as they walked up the steps in the light that came through the open door, but a long time passed before I distinguished any face that was known to me. It must have been after 12 o'clock when Kavanagh's brougham pulled up in front of us. No one got out of it, but I identified the driver at once as the man whom I had seen waiting outside Grandison chambers, and I fancied as he slowly got down from the box that he cast the same suspicious glance at the hansom that he had cast at me that night.

The drifting rain had bedewed the window in front of me, completely obscuring the glass except at the extreme edge, where a projection of the cab sheltered it. Through this narrow space I watched the man with eager excitement. Stamping his feet as if for warmth, he began to walk up and down the pavement, and I noticed that every turn he came a little nearer my hansom, casting his ferrety eyes at the window, as if to pierce the obscurity. This maneuver did not escape the observation of my smart driver.

"How long are they going to keep us here, mate?" he asked when the man had stamped almost within touch of the cab.

"I don't know. How long have you been waiting here?"

As he spoke he approached so near that I thought it advisable to crouch down below the level of the window.

"Oh, long enough to wish I hadn't got the job. What's on?"

"A concert or something."

"Then we may make up our minds for another hour or more of it. They don't turn 'em out of these clubs before 2. Got a light?"

A match was struck, and a few more remarks were exchanged, and then, the stamping of feet fading away, I ventured to raise my head just as the man was stepping up to his seat on the brougham. His curiosity was satisfied.

The time dragged painfully as I waited in feverish suspense for some fresh development of the drama which I felt was being played close at hand. Visitors came out in twos and threes; cabs were called—there must have been a string of them behind us—the street was quite animated for a time; then there was a strange pause, and the next men who came out stood on the steps looking in, as if something unusual was taking place there.

Suddenly one ran down and opened the brougham door. Fearful anticipations of some impending calamity agitated me to such a degree that every object danced and quivered before my eyes. But I made out a group of men slowly descending the steps, as if they were supporting some great weight, and I distinguished among them Kavanagh's light overcoat.

"What is it?" I forced myself to call through the tube.

"Only a gentleman in liquor, miss," replied the cabman in a jocose tone.

Reckless of the consequences, I pushed open the window that I might see more clearly. At that moment Kavanagh was stepping into the brougham, and the next I saw the helpless man lifted in after him. The light fell upon his face as it drooped backward. It was Taras!

"Follow that carriage wherever it goes. Keep close to it," I cried, recovering my senses under the same influence that had paralyzed them.

"Right you are, miss," replied my driver, gathering up his reins, and as the brougham turned into Regent street we fell into the string of vehicles close behind it.

What was to be done now? I saw no other course but to follow the brougham to Lambeth and hold myself in readiness to act with rigor and discretion in whatever contingency arose. It was not until we had gone a considerable distance that I began to doubt whether it was Kavanagh's intention to go to Lambeth. Fixing my eyes on the brougham, I had taken no notice of the streets through which we passed. When the length of time that had elapsed since leaving Burlington street aroused a suspicion in my mind, I found that the houses on either side of the way were quite unfamiliar to me.

"Where are we?" I asked through the tube.

And when the man answered, "Cannon street, miss," I was no wiser than before.

But soon after this we came into an open space, where I recognized the dark outline of the Tower. Then I knew where we were and saw with horror that we were approaching the place where Taras before had fallen into the hands of his enemy. If they got him in the Mariner's Joy again, how could I save him?

I had noticed, with growing anxiety, that the brougham had greatly increased the distance between us after leaving the more crowded thoroughfares, a fact that I had attributed to the greater strength of Kavanagh's horse and not to the particular artfulness of my driver. This loss of ground now added to my terror. In the labyrinth of streets beyond the mint we might lose sight of the brougham and never overtake it.

"Can you go no faster?" I called.

"Faster! I should think so! I thought you just wanted to keep the parties in sight without sorter lettin' 'em tumble to it."

"No—no! Go on quick—quick!"

A flick of the whip doubled our pace. The wheels were tired with rubber, but as the clatter of hoofs grew more audible to the driver of the brougham he turned and looked back. We were near enough then for me to distinguish his hollow cheeks and cavernous eyes, and I think he must have recognized me, for he used the whip freely and increased his speed. Turning the angle by St. Katherine's docks, I saw Kavanagh thrust his head from the window and look back. For a time the race seemed equal, but I observed that the brougham did not gain on us, though the driver used the whip far more freely than my man. But the terror of Shadwell was still before me.

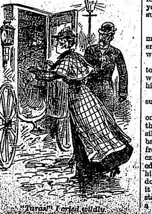
I called to the driver:

"Could you get in front of the carriage and stop it?"

He said he would "have a try at it, anyhow," and with another cut of the whip he shot on and ran wheel to wheel with the brougham. I stood up, and craning out caught sight of Kavanagh as we passed the open window looking across the recumbent body of Taras, his face livid in the light of our lamp. In another minute we had passed, and pulling in sharp toward the pavement forced the driver of the brougham to draw up. Then by another rapid movement my man turned the hansom so as to completely bar the road, and both vehicles came to a dead standstill.

"What do you want?" asked Kavanagh, meeting me in the road as I sprang out of the hansom.

"Taras!" I cried wildly, brushing past him. "Taras!" I cried again as I stepped into the brougham by the open door, with a fearful foreboding that he was murdered.



"Taras!" I cried wildly.

But his hand was warm, and in response to my repeated cry of agonized entreaty he opened his eyes dreamily for an instant. Now that I knew he lived my fears gave place to a feeling of exultant joy and confidence. I was there by his side, and his enemies would have to take my life to separate us, and with this delicious assurance I felt almost indifferent as to what might follow. Presently, however, as this ecstasy subsided I began to take notice of what was passing outside.

Kavanagh was explaining the affair to a policeman, who had seen the finish of the strange race from the gates of the London docks. I could not catch what he said, but his tone was offhand and conclusive.

"You wasn't no more asleep than what I am," broke in my driver from the top of the hansom, and his words were strikingly sharp and clear after the low murmur of Kavanagh. "You put your head out of the window before we reached the mint, and you must have seen well enough as you weren't going to Lambeth that way. You spoke to your man then, and instead of turning round to go back he did all he could to get away in the other direction. You'll just take my number, if you please, constable," he added, swinging himself down from his seat. "The gent in there has been hocused, I'll take my oath. And there's a whole gang of 'em in the job—the driver there, this party that plays the swell and a couple more of 'em in Burlington street. We've been watching the whole plant for four or five hours—ask the young lady inside—and don't you be had by no kid about falling asleep and driver making a mistake. I shall give my evidence if anything goes wrong, mind."

"All right, cabby; all right. I know my duty as well as you do," returned the policeman, and coming to the door of the brougham he asked if I had any charge to make against Kavanagh.

At the same moment Kavanagh appeared at the other window, and speaking rapidly in French said:

"Be careful, as you value your friend's life. I warn you that if you make any charge against me, or even mention my name, Taras will be a dead man within a week. I have only one wish, and that is to get Taras home safely to Lambeth. You shall have every assurance you require that I am acting in perfect good faith." Then he added in English, that the policeman and the cabman, who had come to his side, might hear: "Stay with your friend. My man shall drive you home to Lambeth. I will take the seat outside. You can rely upon the protection of this cabman. He shall follow, and if we diverge one step from the direct road to Lambeth bridge stop us as he has stopped us already, and you can then give me in custody on the charge of conspiracy and abduction. Once more," he added, speaking again in French and with impressive earnestness, "I warn you that this is the only means by which you can save Taras from certain death!"

Fearing the confirmation of this warning even more than a fresh act of treachery, I consented to this proposal, my friend the cabman promising that he would not "give 'im half a chance" of playing false.

CHAPTER XXI.

KAVANAGH CONFESSES.

The movement of the brougham at starting aroused Taras from his lethargy, and he made an effort to shake off sleep, but with a long drawn sigh his head drooped again the next minute. I drew him toward me, and with his dear face pillowed on my shoulder I could scarcely wish our journey to end.

When we drew up at length at our house in Lambeth, Kavanagh came to the door, took the latchkey from Taras' pocket and after lighting the candles in our living room came back to me.

"We must lay our friend on the couch in the sitting room," he said, and turning to the cabman, who had stationed himself in front of us in evidence of his continued vigilance, continued: "Can you give me a hand here? There's a man to hold your horse's head."

With no pretense at disguise, he called Drigo by name, and the man came from the foot of the bridge where I had last seen him and silently placed himself in front of the horse at Kavanagh's bidding.

"He will not waken before midday," said Kavanagh in French when Taras was comfortably disposed on the couch. "The sleeping draft I gave him is perfectly harmless. You can see that he is not in the slightest pain, poor old chap!"

The tone of affection in which he spoke was not less astonishing than the openness of his confession. The audacity of his hypocrisy astounded me, and yet as I looked at him bending over Taras with those soft, feminine eyes I could find nothing in the expression of his face to belie his sentiment.

"I must speak to you before I go," he continued, raising his head and looking me calmly in the face. "The cabman shall wait outside till I go, or in the room with us, if you prefer it."

"I'm not afraid of you," I replied.

He bowed, and going to the outer door told the cabman to back his cab and wait there where he could hear if he were called. Then he told the driver of his brougham to return to the mews and bade Drigo go with him. These orders I heard distinctly as I sat on the stool beside the couch where Taras lay.

Kavanagh returned to the room, leaving the doors open, and seating himself on the couch by Taras' feet he leaned forward and said gravely:

"This is the second time you have defeated my plans for saving the life of our friend. Yet I took every precaution that a man could take, short of confiding my purpose to you this second time."

"And if you had done that do you think I should have helped you?" I asked fiercely.

"Yes, I believe you would. I set a man to watch you, and thought that enough"—

"And so it would have been if I hadn't found means to get away without his seeing me," I said triumphantly.

"Whether I overrated his ability or underrated yours matters little now," said he with a shrug, after regarding me in silence for a minute. "I ought to have told you all. With your help we must have succeeded"—

"In what?"

"In getting Taras safely away. At this moment he might have been on the steamer waiting for him on the river and on his way to Russia."

I could only look at him in speechless astonishment for a time. Then, doubting whether I had rightly caught the sense of his words, I said:

"You think I would have consented to such a thing as that?"

"Yes; if I had shown you that it was the only way of saving his life. Understand this, the czar has said that Taras must be silenced—that means that he must be taken back to Russia, where he will be prevented from publishing works offensive to the czar, or that he will be secretly assassinated, for it is hopeless to think of restraining him while he lives here in freedom. I have done my utmost in that direction. I made it impossible for him to burn the group of statuary until Gordon undertook to build a kiln for that purpose, and it was I who destroyed the group the day before it was to be cast. You know now that it was the hand of a friend, and not an enemy, who did that."

"You call yourself a friend, who did that?" I exclaimed.

"Yes, and you would do the same if you perfectly realized his position."

"Destroy what he has made—the work so dear to him? Never!"

"Would you rather that he himself should be destroyed?" He paused for an answer, but as I found no reply to make he continued:

"Unfortunately, nothing is to be gained by it, or it should be beaten down again. He has said that he will carry the work through, though he have to stand by it with a revolver by his side from first to last."

"And he will!" I cried.

"I was as fully convinced on that point as you are before I abandoned the idea. No, there is no other alternative. He must go back to Russia."

"He would rather die."

"But we would rather that he lived. And surely if the means of preserving him were offered you—if another opportunity of removing him should occur"—

"I will not listen to you," I cried with indignation as I started to my feet. "Nothing in the world could persuade me to join you in this shameful plot."

"For heaven's sake, be reasonable, my poor girl!" said he in a soothing tone. "You have seen those pictures of prison life and fancy that Taras would be exposed to such cruelty and hardships as are represented in them. You are altogether mistaken, as he himself would tell you if you asked him. His rank alone secures him against ill treatment. The czar is not unmerciful. Imperial interests compel him to take strong measures. His hostility toward Taras is tempered with profound respect for a political adversary of high attainments and unimpeachable honesty. In Russia Taras will be treated with the utmost consideration and kindness. He will be allowed to live where he likes, and the only restriction put upon his liberty will be with regard to the propagation of revolutionary ideas, and this restriction will be but temporary. The country is ripe for revolution, and in a short time the present government will be overthrown, and then Taras will be free. On the other hand, if he is not conveyed to Russia, his fate is death. Can you hesitate in choosing which lot shall be his?"

"It isn't for me to choose, nor for you. Tell Taras what you have told me and let him decide. He is not a fool or a child that we should take his guidance in our hands."

"He is a child in some things—in simplicity and recklessness. Suppose he chooses to face the danger of assassination, as probably he will?"

"What then? You will not find him unprepared nor me either."

"It is not with me that you will have to deal next time, but with one whose purpose is unbiased by friendship."

"Friendship!" I said through my clenched teeth, feeling that I should strike the man for the blasphemous use of a word so sacred to my heart. "How dare you speak of friendship? Do you think I am an idiot to be fooled by a lie? What proof of friendship have you given—you, who have done your utmost to injure the man who trusted you?"

"Not my utmost. Another pinch of powder in his glass, and Taras would never have awoke again."

Growing More Liberal

That's what the human race is doing—particularly the American part of it.

There are a few left who are satisfied with ancient history. But most people are ready to apply modern progress and common-sense to the treatment of the human stomach—an organ that demands its rights whether or no; that resents the insults of worn-out methods. All this is to emphasize the facts about

Cottolene

There was once a prejudice against Cottonseed oil. But people who are alive, who investigate, who have no bigotry in their composition, have found that pure, refined cottonseed oil combined with selected beef suet is a better article in every conceivable way than hog's lard. And so they wisely use it for cooking—and are correspondingly healthy and happy. The sales of COTTOLENE are enormous and constantly increasing; a proof that it is appreciated by appreciative persons. Ask your grocer for it.

It has been said that our heaviest crops always follow a winter wherein the deepest snows prevail. If this be true there should be an immense wheat crop next year as at this rate the winter '93-4 will see the heaviest fall of snow in many years.

In the Marin suit for damage brought against the Northern Pacific railroad company the jury found for plaintiff in one-half the amount claimed. This is the second suit of the kind and there are, we are told several others pending. The company has already been mulcted in an amount more than sufficient to have remedied the evil in several cases at least—and the cause still remains.

The out-look for the coming year is not one of unmixed evil if all signs do not utterly fail as there are many indications of a more prosperous year than for several years in the Valley. The probability is strong that throughout the spring wheat-raising countries there there will not be near as large an area sowed to wheat as usual and the winter wheat acreage is reported to be at least 50 per cent short.

Dr. E. W. Fish gave a political talk to the farmers in the school room in McKinnon's block on Saturday afternoon. The weather was quite inclement and but very few farmers braved it to hear the doctor's remarks.

Al Kaiser was sued by one Olson, of Fosston for talking sassy to Olson, who alleged that his feelings had been lacerated thereby to such an extent that it would require fully 600 good simoleons to effect a permanent and adequate cure. Halvor Steenerson handled the case for Kaiser and managed to convince the jury of Olson's error and a verdict was rendered for defendant.

Mrs. Mary Himmelsbach, widow of B. Himmelsbach, died at the residence of her son Wm. Himmelsbach, in Fairfax, on Friday last at 9 o'clock p. m. She had been an invalid for several years, but the immediate cause of death is said to have been la grippe. She was about 63 years old and leaves several children to mourn the loss of a good mother. The body was interred in Oakdale Cemetery on Tuesday.

If we may believe the papers, John McLean seems to be a very much prosecuted individual in these days. Last week the Grand Forks Plaindealer said "John McLean was arrested for lifting an overcoat and sentenced for thirty days," and later on the Pioneer Press says "John McLean and several other gamblers was run out of town by the chief of police." Meantime our John McLean smiles benignly and says while there seems to be a good many of him floating around he is not in it by a comfortable majority.

P. J. McGuire went up to the Black River country on Monday. To a JOURNAL reporter P. J. said: "I find the people up there all snugly ensconsed in winter quarters and a great many of them are pretty well fixed in this world's goods. They are mostly Swedes and Germans, a thrifty, careful people who do not run in debt very readily and now they are fully prepared to weather the financial storm that is sweeping over the country and will come out all right.

A private letter from one who was once a prominent democrat in New York is so full of pertinent suggestions to his democratic friends that the JOURNAL may be pardoned for making a few extracts. Speaking of prices of farm products he says:

"But for our beautiful democratic administration, with the prospects for a low tariff, potatoes and everything in grain except wheat would be bringing from 25 to 40 per cent more than they are at present. I like to see the republicans who voted for Cleveland last fall taking their medicine this fall. They make many wry faces and it is a bitter dose but they have to swallow it just the same. By the way, did our democratic brethren in Minnesota hear anything drop in New York on election day? With the prospect of free barley, free eggs, free dairy products of all kinds, free hay and a big reduction on tobacco and hops, our farmers here feel pretty blue. In this country (Onandaga,) they are fairly howling; a large portion of the county is devoted to tobacco and hops and should the Wilson bill pass, their business would be ruined. Under the McKinley bill they were doing pretty well—making some money but this bill will knock them out completely."

The winter term of the Crookston Normal School and Business College will begin January 2nd, 1894.

A. Kaiser of Fosston, who attended court last week, got laid up for a few days with a light fever, but started for home Tuesday remarking that the pure fresh air around Fosston would soon brace him up. Attorney Averill left for home Saturday, also slightly under the weather.

Peter Moe, as postmaster has given such universal satisfaction that the patrons of the office drew up a petition to the powers that be to have Peter continued and signatures were obtained to the petition, a string a mile long or so, in fact I believe almost every patron of the office signed it. But the wishes of the people don't seem to count with a democratic administration.

I heard the other day that Frank Gravel had been fishing in republican waters using Angleman-worm for bait. He dropped in his hook and the first fish to bite was a great long post-office sucker too heavy for Frank to handle so he had to go to St. Paul for help. Assistance was procured, a sudden jerk on the pole threw the bait off the hook, which struck Joseph Tagley in the mouth and caused him to swear that he would forever after swim in the democratic cess-pool. The above is hear-say and is not vouched for by, OLD SHINGLE.

Christmas Day.

Though Christmas day is now regarded as a festival peculiar to the Christian religion, as distinguished from all other forms of belief, its claim to be so regarded is quite doubtful. As the month of December in Judea is one of rain and storms, the nativity could hardly have been on the 25th of that month, as shepards and their flocks would not have been out on the plains of Bethlehem in such weather. A fairly good case has been made out for October, and it is certain that until the fifth century, the date was later than the 25th of December. Possibly the festival may have been placed at the date it now is by the early Christians in their desire to displace the Roman "Saturnalia," a heathen orgie. Among our Anglo-Saxon ancestors such a mid-winter festival seems to have been known long before the priests of the new religion had made their way from Rome into the forests of Germany. However disputes as to date or gifts and good will, and the Burlington wishes a merry day to all its friends in the northwest, merely suggesting that if you are intending to travel during the holidays, your ticket should read via the Burlington Route. Brayton Ives on Henry Villard.

In connection with the appointment of receivers for the Northern Pacific railroad, Mr. Brayton Ives addresses a letter to the directors of that road, saying of Mr. Villard: "His career has been unique. With no ostensible or visible occupation during the past five years other than that of president or chairman of three great companies, he leaves them impoverished, but he has acquired a fortune, if his friends' statements can be trusted, at the rate of $1,000,000 a year." In conclusion Mr. Ives characterizes Villard as "the shrewdest, wiliest, least scrupulous and most successful financial adventurer that has ever come to this country."

Coming as this does from one of Mr. Ives' social and business position, it must be interesting reading to those who receive their ultimate convictions of morals as well as politics from a newspaper which Villard bought and for some time openly edited and managed through Carl Schurz and the present editors. It is only fair to say that, though our president, when lately elected, was willing to be an honored guest at Villard's "$40 a plate" dinner at Sherry's, The Evening Post of New York has been forced by the pressure of public opinion to deny that Villard any longer controlled its pages. This denial, however, carries no more weight than any other assertion of that paper.

The Mail and Express calls attention to this characteristic connection of unscrupulousness in finance with hypocrisy in morals and politics, and, after quoting from the letter of Mr. Ives, "He goes abroad with full pockets, but leaves behind empty treasuries." that paper says: "And yet to think that the canting and self righteous Mugwump organ, from which the pharisees and the angels derive their political tenets and their moral inspiration, is controlled by this self same adventurer!"

These same "pharisees and angels" stood with the anarchists and rum hole keepers in the last presidential contest, and all in New York but about 400 voted for Tammany Hall candidates.

Competition Among Farmers.

The cost of farm labor in Great Britain, estimated by the statistician of the agricultural department, is $150 per annum; in France, $125; in Holland and Austria, $100; in Germany, $90; in Russia, $60; in Italy, $50, and in India, $30, while the same labor costs in this country $220. The farmers of the United States have heretofore come to appreciate that with the wonderful wheat development in India and Russia, with the vast sums of money which have been expended for irrigation and in railroads for transporting this wheat, taken in connection with their cheap labor, the time is already here when the American farmer must sell his product in the markets of the world in competition with the wheat produced by the lowest priced labor of other countries, and that his care and concern must, in the future, be to preserve his home market, for he must of necessity be driven from the foreign one, unless by diminishing the cost of his production he can successfully compete with the unequal conditions I have described.

Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicineand the next day was able to come to Des Moines. DISTRICT COURT

After a Fair and Impartial Trial, Policeman Tweten is Acquitted.

Full Report of the Trial—Court Adjourns to Monday, January 15th

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, 20TH.

The attention of the court was occupied by the case of Walter A. Wood's Harvester Co., vs Andrew Ramberg and Martus Markuson. The case was given to the jury late in the afternoon with instructions to bring in a sealed verdict on Thursday morning.

THURSDAY.

A verdict was handed in in the W. A. Wood's Harvester Co., vs Andrew Ramberg and Markus Markuson, in favor of the defendants.

Attention then turned to the trial of the State of Minnesota vs Halvor M. Tweeten, a special venire of 50 men had been ordered by the court from which to select a jury. They all appeared, and one was excused on account of sickness at home. The defendant appeared in court with his counsel, Halvor Steenerson, who for the past two or three days had been diligently searching for the facts in the case. The defendant's face gave evidence of sad and serious meditation during the past days that had intervened between the shooting.

The counsel scored the first point in the battle now about to begin by claiming that under the description of the crime given in the indictment the defense should be allowed twenty challenges in selecting the jury, and the state seven, instead of seven and three. This the court granted and the task of selecting a jury began. Following is a list of the jurors: Robert Coulter, Mallory; Noe Brosseau, Gentilly; Wm. Carlton, Angus; Bruce A. Griggs, East Grand Forks; Nels Lofthus, Fosston; Thos Scott, Fosston; Thos. Johnson, Crookston; James Cummings, Mallory; Godfrey Adolphs, S. Kennson, Thief River Falls; James Sullivan, East Grand Forks; C. J. Knox, Thief River Falls.

County Attorney Holston, on behalf of the state, opened the case to the jury. He reminded them of the important and solemn duty they were called upon to perform. He did not want the case to be decided on sympathy but upon cold facts, yet he succeeded in drawing two very pathetic pictures; one of lonely mother sitting in her little cottage; the wind sighing sad requiems through the trees, and she singing "where is my wandering boy to-night," the other carried the listeners to the potter's field where the deceased lies buried among God's poor etc., etc.

FRIDAY MORNING, DEC. 22ND.

The first thing to cause a wrangle was the request of the defense to have all eye witnesses of the shooting except the one testifying, excluded from the court room until called to testify.

The Assistant States Attorney, Mr. Edgerton, desired that all witness be excluded until called to testify. This was finally agreed to and the work began.

The first witness called on the part of the state, was Louis Anderson. He told the story about as follows: That he was in Crookston the night the shooting took place; was in the room where Andrew Thompson and several others were when Officer Tweten entered; went there about eleven o'clock; Thompson came about a half hour later; they were sitting and lying on benches around stove to get warm; Tweten came up in about an hour later; Tweten walked up the platform, and came back to the window; raised the window, lighted a match, looked in, came through the window, lighted another match walked over to the electric light near the ticket window and turned on the electric light then walked around and looked over them; came to Andrew Thompson; he lifted Thompson's hat and looked at him and says "you better come with me;" deceased did not say anything and Tweten told him again, that he broke jail and for him to go with him; Thompson raised up, grabbed the officer by the coat collar just in front near the throat and pushed him back towards a seat up against the seat and the seat tumbled over and had about fallen and Tweten pulled his gun and shot; Thompson dropped over the seat about two and one-half feet from the end and Tweten stumbled back over the end of the seat losing his cap. Tweten raised up and, walked back and forth a couple of times and says "that what you boys get by fooling with me," and backed to the window and out through it. The distance he pushed the officer was about nine feet. He thought they were in a falling position when the shot was fired. He illustrated it by placing the county attorney in the position over the bench there in the court room. The bench over which the deceased fell and lay when shot. He claimed that Tweten kept his right hand kind of behind him like it was in the hip pocket or his right under coat pocket. That he held the revolver in his hand when he retreated out through the window.

Under the rigid cross-examination through which he was put, he stuck to his story pretty well. He said that Tweten called on Thompson three times to get up and come with him, and then he tapped him on the shoulder; and also the distance he pushed the officer was about six feet. The witness seemed cool and could not be rattled.

Dr. M. Watts was the next witness called. He testified as to the kind of wound it was and where it was located. He stated that the deceased lived about five minutes after he arrived on the scene.

Ole Lund was called next. His testimony was a corroboration of Anderson, that Thompson grabbed the officer by the shoulders, he pushed him five or six feet before he struck the bench. His story was almost the same as the other witness. This and the first witness both claimed that Thompson did not fall on Tweten when they fell.

Thom Thompson's story was on the same key as that of Anderson and Lund. He claims that he spoke to the defendant when he came in the room. That Tweten had his hand in his pocket. That the shot was fired when they were about half way to the floor; Thompson dropped on the bench and Tweten fell over the end. And "when I came to," he further states, that "the best he could remember Tweten was standing up." The question was asked him what he meant by "coming to." He said, I got kind of excited when the shot was fired. I jumped. On cross-xamination he seemed to "I don't remember" a good many things when close pressed.

John Brown testified substantially to the same thing as did Andrew Lund and Thom Thompson. He was sitting on the opposite side of the stove and did not see quite all of the fracus. After the shot he looked around the stove and saw Tweten with his revolver in his hand and he backed toward the window and out, and said "that is what you fellows get for monkeying with me."

W. G. Johnson was the next witness sworn by the state. He answered that he was a painter and paper hanger by trade, but he worked at railroading some. He was on his way to Barnesville and stopped off the regular southbound train to wait for the freight. He told his story in corroboration of the others. His testimony reported before the coroner's inquest was to the effect that he stated that the deceased grabbed Tweten by the throat. When confronted with that statement in his testimony he declared point blank that he never said any such thing; that it was by the lapels of the coat that Thompson caught Tweten. He was asleep at the time the officer entered and was awakened by the scuffling.

SATURDAY MORNING.

The cross-examination of Johnson was continued.

The state rested. The defendant demanded that the state put on the stand two other witnesses it had examined before the grand jury, and who were eye witnesses of the shooting. The court would not compel the state to produce any more witnesses. The defense moved a dismissal of the action on the ground that the indictment failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and it appearing from the evidence that the defendant was in imminent danger, and the shooting was justifiable. The motion was overruled.

E. M. Stanton, associate counsel for the defendant, then addressed the jury, stating his side of the case and the facts as they had gleaned them.

Carl Nicholson was first sworn. He was one of the state's witnesses that the state refused to put on the stand. He told his story substantially as the other witnesses, except that all-important part relative to where Thompson grabbed Tweten when aroused from his sleep. He illustrated it very dramatically on Mr. Steenerton, when asked so to do, by putting one foot a little back and rushing quickly for counsel, grabbing him by the throat with his left hand. He described and pointed out very minutely on the diagram of the waiting room where each was sitting, and where the fatal shot was fired. He stopped three or four feet from Thompson, looked at him and he says, the first time, "you come with me." He did not answer the first time. The policeman said the second time "you are the fellow that broke out of jail, you come with me." Thompson raised up from the bench like that (to a sitting position) and I saw that he put one foot behind a little, and he jumped up fast and he took Tweten by the throat and pushed him back to that bench. Tweten struck the bench on the corner and he fell over and Thompson he fell over. The bench tipped and came down and he fell. Thompson fell like this (here witness lies across the overturned bench in the manner deceased did before shot and says) Thompson had his hand on Tweten's throat. (He also showed the position Tweten was in by lying flat on his back.) I saw Tweten take his gun from his blue coat on the right side and shoot. (Then he showed position of his arm. Thompson caught his left hand on his throat. Q. State whether or not Thompson was lying over Tweten at that time? A. Not quite; he was lying across the bench. Q. What happened when the shot was fired? A. All I could see was that Thompson got up from the floor. He further testified that Tweten backed toward the window with his revolver in his hand and backed out. He also stated that this man Johnson was asleep and did not wake up until after the shot was fired. (It will be remembered that Johnson was on the bench that tipped over.) He went on and testified that Thom Thompson was crazy after it happened and was asking everybody how it was; and that Louis Anderson was asleep when the shot was fired and afterward asked the little fellow (Martin Olson) how it was. Olson then told L. Anderson that Tweten was down on the floor when he shot. Anderson says to him, "never mind, we'll all tell he was on his feet when he shot."

On the cross examination from Mr. Edgerton, Nicholson got rattled a little and for fear of becoming tangled an interpreter had to be called to his assistance. When asked why he did not tell the county attorney he saw the occurence in the way above described, he replied that he was not asked. When cross questioned about the interview of Mr. Holston with all the boys at the depot relative to how it happened, in reply to the question. Did anybody tell Mr. Holston at that time or any other time that Andrew Thompson had Tweeten by the throat? A. No sir; nobody said that. Q. Is it not a fact that all of them said there in your presence that Tweten was not down on his back and that Andrew Thompson never had him by the throat? A. No nobody said so down there. Q. Where did they say Tweten was when the shot was fired? A. They all said he was down on the corner of the bench. Q. Nobody disputed it? A. No sir.

On re-direct examination he explained that the reason he did not talk was he thought he would wait to come in court and be sworn and then tell the truth. And he further explained that after the shooting and some people in there asked Johnson how it happened and Johnson said he was asleep and woke up when the shot was fired.

Martin Olson testified that Tweten told Thompson three times to go with him, the third time he jumped up and grabbed Tweten by the coat and pushed him back, they struck the bench and Tweten was on his back on the floor and then he shot. On cross examination it was brought out that after the occurrence this witness was taken into a private interview with the saloon keeper, Martin Halla, and after the interview was over was treated to a "punch."

The defendant was then called, sworn and related his story, which is as briefly and substantially as follows: I am 31 years of age; have been on the police force since April 1882. I first saw the deceased on the evening of December 8th, in Martin Halla's saloon. I was called there a short time after that to arrest a big man who made some disturbance. I could not find him. I walked out and around in the back alley, that was about half past ten o'clock. Halla and I went down to the train that soon came in I had a letter to mail. Martin pointed the man out and I took him to the station. After going out a couple times I came back between 12 and 12:20 and found him gone; after looking for him some time I went to Great Northern depot; tried the door; thought it was locked; raised a window on the west side, lit a match and looked in; saw several men in there; climbed in and turned on the electric light; had my police club in my overcoat pocket on the right side, and my revolver in the right side pocket of my police coat; walked over to the man and looking under the man's hat, saw he was the man I was after, and I said: "You come with me;" he did not say a word; I said again: "You are the man that broke jail to-night, I want you;" he rose and sat up; I looked in his facesaying: "Come with me;" just as I said that he jumped at me and grabbed me by the throat with his left hand and his right hand back of my neck, and bore me right backward; I raised my right hand out of my overcoat pocket and held on to him in order to hold myself up but it did not help and I had to go down; he was up against my left side so close I could not use my left hand; down we went to the floor; my head was shoved back I felt something strike my head; I don't know what it was; I was choking up and could not see; knew I could not use the club; put my hand in my right police coat pocket and pulled out my gun; I raised up my hand; could not see how far and pulled the trigger; his grip let go; I raised my head and saw his hand kind of raised up towards his head; I put my hand on the floor with my gun in my right hand and shoved myself up just as quick as I possibly could; he did not fall much on me. I know I pulled my left knee from under one of his legs; was afraid the crowd would jump on me too; got on my feet and backed to the window as fast as I could; backed on the bench and went through the window. I think I heard somebody say something about a serious case. I looked back and saw the man lying like on his hands and knees. I ran as soon as I got on the platform; went and told Chief of Police Gonyea; got a cap from the chief; did not know how bad the man was wounded at that time; at the chief's house it was 15 minutes after one o'clock by my time. It was a little fast. We went back to the depot; did not go in; I then went after the doctor; did not want to remain around there; I asked the chief and he told me to go; I went and told my wife and then went and stayed all night with Ole Hagen; the mayor, A. D. Stephens, and the chief, Mr. Gonyea, came over between two and three o'clock to see me.

On cross-examination he was confronted with his testimony given before the coroner's inquest to the effect that the man was right on top of him when he shot and that he rolled him off. He denied having said that, but averred having said that Thompson was on top of him a little to the left side and that he dragged himself out from under him.

Dr. C. E. Dampier was next called to give expert testimony as to how soon a man may be killed by choking. He also gave the jury the technical name for such killing; calling it "garroting."

Ole Hagen testified to the mark on the back of Tweten's neck the time Tweten was at his house. Cross-examination brought from him that the mark is about the same now as then.

F. L. Durand testified to what Thompson said before the coroner's jury as to the way Thompson seized Tweten. He testified that Thompson said that Thompson caught Tweten by the throat.

A. D. Stephens testified to being called out of bed on the night of the shooting and of seeing Tweten and examing the marks on his neck; and also the general character of the defendant and his efficiency as a police officer; that Johnson told him that the shot awakened him; that the revolver must have been a small one for the report was not loud.

Louis Gonyea testified to being called on the night of the shooting; of seeing the bruised marks on Tweten's neck; of Tweten's efficiency as a police officer and his good character.

J. E. Morrisey testified as to defendant's good character. W. F. Markman testified to what Johnson said before the coroner's inquest. His memory wassomewhat defective as to how many witnesses were sworn there. D. W. Hughes, James Montague and Dept. Sheriff Losey, were called to discredit G, W. Thompson's testimony. John Bergquist and Al. Roberts were called to discredit Thom Thomson's testimony. They testified that Thompson made the statement in their presence that he could testify either way if there was $200 in it.

Sheriff Grundysen and Wm. Anglim testified to defendant's good character. Evidence all in at six o'clock and court adjourned until 7 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

Assistant State's Attorney George B. Edgerton addressed the jury on behalf of the state. Mr. Edgerton made a concise and logical argument of the case, consuming one hour and twenty-five minutes time.

H. Steenerson occupied two hours in his address to the jury. The way he handled the evidence showed that he had the matter well in hand and that he was confident of a verdict that would make one more home happy at the coming Christmas tide.

The court then instructed the jury at some length, expounding to them the law applicable to the case before them. The case was then given to the jury and they retired to deliberate.

The jury agreed Sunday morning about 5:30 on a verdict of acquittal.

The sad news reached the court before adjourning that one of the members of the Polk county bar, W. H. Averill of Fosston, had died that morning. The court appointed H. Steenerson, A. R. Holston and R. J. Montague a committee to draw up resolutions, take proper steps to show the appreciation of the court and bar for the deceased and regret at his demise. Court then adjourned until Tuesday morning.

TUESDAY MORNING.

Court convened at 9 o'clock and Sheriff Grundysen soon appeared to answer the charges brought against him by the county commissioners regarding the disobeying of the rules regulating the jail, by the jailor. His explanation not being satisfactory, the court ordered the discharge of the present jailor, Halvor Grundeson, and the appointment of another jailor. The matter was then referred to the State Board of Corrections.

Court then adjourned until Monday, January 15th, at 10 o'clock.

A WITNESS SLANDERED.

The next suit will be Martin Halla vs. Geo. B. Edgerton, for slander. In his address to the jury Mr. Edgerton called Mr. Halla the "High Potentate," who could order the arrest of a man by simply pointing him out to one of Chief Gonyea's policemen.

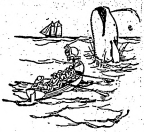
WHALES IN PLENTY.

THE TAKE OF THE FLEET THIS YEAR HAS BROKEN THE RECORD.

Captain John Smith Fished For the Monsters Off the Maine Coast—Old Time Prosperity of Whaling Men—Thrilling Encounters—Danger Saving Inventions.

All whaling records have been broken by the hunters of the big sea beasts who have been stationed in the Arctic ocean for the past few months, and the dealers say the great catch will result in such low prices for whalebone as to knock the profit off the business for some time to come.

The season's catch numbered 853 whales, of which four steamers took 217. One steamer alone took 64, another 62 and another 24 in 20 days. Sailing vessels were not lucky, several of them failing to take any game at all.



"MAKING A BREACH."

No one tried to save any oil, bone only being wanted. It is the decline in the demand for whale oil that has caused the gradual repopulation of the sea with oil producing cetaceans, several of which have during the summer just passed approached so near points on the Atlantic coast as to be the object of shore fishermen's efforts.

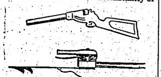
When the gray haired men and women who read this newspaper were boys and girls, whaling was one of the most important of human industries. It was still an occupation of profit for many thousands when the civil war broke out, although its decline set in as soon as the discovery and refining of Pennsylvania's petroleum began to bear the oil market. Today there is not one whaling ship afloat where there were twenty 40 years ago; but, as the opening paragraph of this article shows, the industry is not dead by any means. For whalebone no substitute has been found, and accordingly right whales and bowheads—the two species producing bone in large quantities—are still eagerly sought. Captain John Smith was probably the first white whale fisher in American waters, for it is recorded that in 1614 he pursued a school of whales off the coast of Maine.

In the palmiest days of whaling the New England fleet numbered over 670 sail. Then the sperm whale of tropical waters was esteemed the most valuable prize. New Bedford was the chief, and Salem, Provincetown, Nantucket and others were famous whaling ports. The ships that sailed from their wharves floated on the waves of every sea, the oil which was tried from their captures illuminated the drawing rooms of every clime, and the whalebone they procured was the stay of women in all land where the fair sex followed fashion's decrees.

The men who went down into the sea in ships after whales were a hardy lot. None were shipped who did not seem to be possessed of unlimited nerve and power of endurance, for these qualities were pretty certain to be required before the close of a voyage. Every bright, enterprising youngster who shipped hoped with some show of success that in time he might be a whaling captain. But even if promotion did not follow rapidly the incentive to hard work and daring were greater to seamen on whale ships than on merchant vessels, for besides his wages every man received a share of the profits, and even the humblest knew that he would have quite a sum of money to his credit at the close of a lucky cruise.

At the end of every season the newspapers of those days would bristle with brief paragraphs telling of conflicts between men and whales, of shattered boats, of drowned harpooners and seamen. The books wherein marvelous tales of whaling life were told in delightfully plain narrative form, illustrated by queer, crude wood cuts, were eagerly read in every part of the country.

The truth of the occasional tales of ships being sunk by whales has often been called in question, but it seems likely from the mass of evidence that some of them have the substantiality of fact. One of the best authenticated stories of this kind is recorded concerning the vicious old monster known for years as Wicked Bill. When and by whom this whale was first attacked no one knows, but several harpoons were left in him, and he was identified, when seen afterward, by his scars. During six or seven years he was unsuccessfully tackled several times, in every instance smashing one or more boats, and sometimes killing from one to a half dozen seamen. His reputation got so bad that whalers who recognized him by his scars would not trouble him. This respect for his prowess began just after a story was told of his sinking a Russian merchantman.



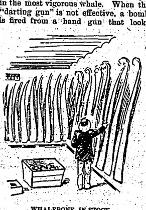
DARTING GUN AND BOMB GUN.

Later in his career, one day in the fifties, he "made a breach" suddenly among the boats of the Salem whaler Mary Crosby, that had surrounded a whale killed half an hour before. Wicked Bill shot out of the brine more than half his length and fell over across the dead whale, carrying the carcass down with him. Neither dead nor live whale was seen again that day, and the seamen were perfectly willing to lose the whale they had killed if by that means they were assured of immunity from Wicked Bill's fury. Some days afterward, however, the vicious old fellow was found to be following the ship. It was impossible to shake him off, and after about a week of apprehension on the part of the officers and crew he made a bold dash at the vessel, striking her amidships. The shock is described as terrific. It crushed in the solid oaken shell of the ship's hull, and the men had to take to the boats. They were afterward picked up.

Whether such stories as this one are true or not, the power of a large whale is enormous. Sir William Turner, professor of anatomy in the University of Edinburgh, examined a whale 80 feet long, weighing 74 tons, whose tail measured 18 feet from fluke to fluke, and it was the professor's opinion, concurred in by an eminent marine engineer, that when this great creature moved through the water at a rate of 12 miles an hour he exerted a force equal to 145 horse power as computed for steam engines.

Encounters with fierce whales were the chief dangers feared by those whalers who sailed tropical waters only in search of oil producing prey, but the whalers of the north, who followed the right whale, yielding bone, oil and ivory, to its fastnesses in the Arctic had both whales and ice to fear. The latter was much the greater danger, and thanks to the introduction of improved methods in whaling as well as every other business, the terrors of neither are so great as formerly. The addition of steam to sails as a propulsive power renders the whaleman of today largely independent of winds and currents, although the ice pack still has its dangers, and it is but a few years ago that a fleet of 30 vessels was abandoned to be crushed by the floes. In 1888 13 vessels with 500 whaling men were frozen in for some months.

The substitution of the darting gun and bomb for the hand lance and harpoon was a distinct step in advance. The darting gun is a queer looking contrivance mounted on a wooden shaft from 8 to 10 feet long and resembling a fork with three tines of different size and shape. One of the prongs is the gun proper, and the whole apparatus is thrown by hand. The long tine serves to hold fast in the whale's flesh, the shorter slender tine acts as trigger, and the explosion of the charge of "tonite" in the gun—the third tine—is usually sufficient to discourage the life principle in the most vigorous whale. When the "darting gun" is not effective, a bomb is fired from a hand gun that looks much like the blunderbuss of other days, the breech of which is furnished with a heavy rubber cushion to prevent too great a recoil.



WHALEBONE IN STOCK.

San Francisco and New Bedford are now the chief ports, and there is a permanent station at Point Barrow. Fifty-six varieties of whales frequent American waters. Eighteen species only have been closely studied. The teeth of bowhead and right whales furnish the substance known as whalebone. These whales subsist on small fish and other sea organisms, which they procure by filling the mouth with water, closing the jaws and forcing the water out. The food is entangled in the curious fringe on the teeth's outer edges. Every bowhead yields 478 teeth, and as good whalebone has often been worth from $5 to $6 a pound, every tooth is valuable. Last winter a whaling company of San Francisco had $1,000,000 worth of whalebone on storage in a small building where it was guarded as carefully as if it were gold and precious stones. Of course there was no fear that any of it would be stolen—the weight and size of the pieces preclude that—but it is a favorite food of rats, and besides is very inflammable. The utmost precautions, therefore, were taken to keep off rodents and fire.

Paris, Bremen, London and New York are the chief markets for whalebone, in the order mentioned. Whale oil is still secured sometimes, although its price is now down to 16 and 20 cents a gallon. Time was when it would bring $2 and $3. The most profitable voyage ever made by a whaler before the season of 1892-3 was that of the steamer Mary G. Hume, which returned to San Francisco in October, 1892, after an absence of two years, during which time 27 whales were taken. The net profits were $500,000, bone only being brought to port, owing to the low price of oil.

A most valued prize of the whale fisherman is ambergris, a secretion found in the stomachs of morbid whales. This substance when of a high quality is worth rather more than its weight in gold, and one of the most disappointed men the sun has ever shone upon was a whaling captain, who last year let a remarkable piece of ambergris weighing 80 pounds slip into the sea. Some ivory is also obtained by whale fishers.

A "BLUFF" THAT WORKED.

How a Little Man Avoided a Fight With a Blustering Big One.

The big man was just drunk enough to be spoiling for a fight. That was apparent to every one in the cafe. He hadn't been there 10 minutes before he picked a quarrel with a man three sizes smaller, who had been quietly minding his own business in a corner of the room.

"Sir, you've insulted me!" exclaimed the big man.

"You are mistaken," quietly responded the other.

"You're a liar!" thundered the big man, "and if you know what that means you'll fight."

"Certainly," was the rejoinder, without a tremor of perturbation, "but it must be after I've finished eating. I never allow trifles to interfere with my dinner. Waiter, hurry up that porterhouse steak! Never mind if it is a bit rare."

The big man, nonplussed for the time being by such a display of coolness, sat down at a table near by and glared at his prospective victim. We all felt sorry for him, but the big man looked dangerous, even if he was "three sheets in the wind," and we decided not to interfere.

When the little man's steak came in, he said something to the waiter. Two minutes later the waiter said something to the big man. It was noticed that he didn't look quite so fierce after that, and soon afterward, remarking with assumed carelessness that he would be back in a minute, he left the room.

Then some of us ventured to suggest to the little man that it was a good opportunity for him to "skip," which, considering the discrepancy in size between him and the man who had forced a quarrel upon him, would involve no disgrace.

"Much obliged for your good advice," said he as coolly as ever, "but there is no necessity for that. The other fellow has run away already."

When 15 minutes had slipped by and "the other fellow" hadn't shown up, we concluded that the little fellow was right and wanted to know, of course, what had caused the stampede.

"Oh, just a little bluff," he replied. "I wasn't any more anxious to fight with that brute than the rest of you were, though. I knew he was a coward, or he wouldn't have picked out a man so much smaller than himself to fasten a quarrel on. I just told the waiter that it would be worth a dollar to let him know that I was Tim McCool, alias the 'Kilkenny Cat,' lightweight champion of Ireland, just landed and anxious to get on a match with somebody. I knew that would work. I never get into a scrape when I can bluff my way out of it, and as I keep a cool head on my shoulders I generally succeed.

"Thanks, but if you'll excuse me I'll content myself with a cigar."—New York Herald.

Kissing.

In the old time men and women who were mere acquaintances exchanged kisses in public, and with a certain amount of ceremony, and a visitor to whom it was desired to show special civility was always received with a kiss.

The mode of salutation has changed greatly with the times. Haste and high pressure have contributed to render the form of greeting as brief as possible. Not only have we given up the quaint, familiar ways of our ancestors, but we have also parted with much of that elaborate etiquette which in the last century played so large a part in social life.

The changed habits of society, the greater mingling of its various grades, have brought a simplicity into the form of intercourse which strikes oddly upon the senses of people accustomed to old fashioned ceremony. "I always kiss the lady's hand when I take my leave of the hostess after a party," said a German lady, a descendant of one of the oldest families in what used to be called Prussia. She was commenting rather severely on the habits and customs of her adopted country.

The offhand manners of girls toward their mothers and of all young people generally toward all older people drew forth her reprobation. Kissing is now confined to state ceremonies and to a few old world lovers and gallants who have retained the ways of their great-grandfathers.—Notes and Queries.

Fog Signaling.

A method of fog signaling has been introduced on several branches of the North London system of the Great Northern railway of England which obviates much of the unreliability and complexity of the systems hitherto used. A wire is laid in a pipe from the signal box to the various signals, at which brushes of copper project some four or five inches above the side of the rail nearest the signal. A similar brush, which connects with an indicator and bell on the engine, is fixed to the engine foot plate. When the signal points to danger, the two brushes come in contact, and the ringing of the bell and the warning of the driver by a miniature signal on the engine that the line is not clear are the result. The arrangement can be readily switched off in fine weather so as to become inoperative. This electric device seems to be the most simple, as well as the most efficient means yet resorted to for fog signaling, and the Great Northern railway intends to adopt it over the whole of its lines.—Chicago Record.

The Largest Snake In the World.

Naturalists say that the largest serpent of which accurate measurements have been taken in modern times was an anaconda which Dr. Gardner found dead and suspended in the forks of a tree in Mexico. It was dragged out into open ground by two horses, and a careful measurement with a tapeline proved that it was 87 feet in length.—St. Louis Republic.

OUT OF THE JAWS OF DEATH

BY FRANK BARRETT.

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY CASSELL & CO.
AND PUBLISHED BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

A nameless girl waif on the London wharves overhears a plot between Putty, the landlord of Mariner's Joy, a confederate named Drigo and a stranger known as Taras to help some deserters to escape from a ship. Chapter II—The deserters arrive, a scuffle ensues in the barroom of the Joy, and Taras disappears. III and IV—After a vain hunt for Taras the waif is led by a strange sound to a cellar beneath the bar. Following the clue, she finds Taras imprisoned and releases him through means of an old robber tunnel from the cellar to the wharf. V—Putty and Drigo discover the escape and cut off the waif in the tunnel, but she takes terrible revenge on them and is befriended by Taras. VI, VII and VIII—The waif runs away and attempts suicide. Taras finds her in a police cell and takes her to his own home under the care of Mere Lucas, his housekeeper. There she begins a new life as Aura. IX, X and XI—Aura is dressed for her new station in Taras' household and makes the acquaintance of Major Kavanagh, a bosom friend of Taras, who is a Russian nihilist.

"If you did not kill him," I said, detecting, as I thought, an expression of cowardice in those soft eyes, "it was because you dared not."

His silence confirmed my suspicion, and I continued hotly:

"One thing is certain—you dare not try to do it now."

"No," he replied quietly, "I dare not even try to save him again, I fear."

Then he rose and walked across the room, seeing the hopelessness of persuading me and the increasing hostility his words provoked.

"What shall you do when Taras wakes?" he asked as he turned and came back toward me.

"Tell him everything—all that has happened, all you have said."

He nodded, as if this were no more than he expected, and took another turn across the room in silent meditation. As he seated himself again in front of me he said:

"We should be friends, having one object in common. The hope that animates us both is only to be realized by joining forces and acting in concert. You doubt my integrity—truth—sincerity. I will try to prove it by a confession which places me at your mercy. I put my life in your hands. At a word you can destroy me as surely as the czar can destroy Taras. A stronger proof of sincerity no man could give, and all I ask in return is that you will hear me patiently and judge me without prejudice."

"I'll hear what you have to say at any rate," said I.

He stepped to the door noiselessly, looked out into the passage, and coming back seated himself still nearer to me, that he might drop his voice to a tone which could not be heard outside.

"I am a nihilist," he began, "a member of the same secret body to which Taras belongs. In the service of this society I obtained a post in the ministerial bureau at St. Petersburg, where every movement of the secret police came under my observation. By these means I was enabled to warn my society of any action about to be taken against suspected members. You understand me?"

"Yes; you were a kind of spy on the police."

"I was a spy, and I risked my life in this service. At any moment I might have been discovered and hanged for my zeal. While I was in this office the order came from the czar to silence Taras. Taras was then, as he is now, my dearest friend, and you can imagine my horror when I heard that this order was to be executed without delay. Happily the minister found it difficult to lay his hand on a man for his purpose. It was a very delicate business. As Taras was in London it was necessary that the agent should speak English, not only for the practical working out of the design, but to avoid political complications. It would never do for the Russian government to be discovered in this plot to violate the freedom of a man so well known and much honored as Taras. There was one man in the service of the police who eagerly desired to have the job, and that was Rudersdorf, an avowed enemy of Taras. The chief objection to employing him was that he did not understand a word of English.

"One morning the minister, after explaining this difficulty and the objection to Rudersdorf, asked me bluntly if I would undertake to silence Taras. 'I don't ask you to kill him,' he said, seeing some sign of repugnance in my face probably. 'One reason for not employing Rudersdorf is that he certainly would do so. I simply want you to bring Taras back to Russia. That will please the czar far more than the death of a man for whom he still entertains a strong feeling of admiration. I can give you but 24 hours to consider the proposal, but if you will not do this business Rudersdorf must.' And now," said Kavanagh pointedly, "what answer would you have given in my place?"

"I would have accepted," said I without hesitation.

"I am sure you would. But it was not an undertaking to accept lightly, for you must see as clearly as I that I was bound to fulfill my promise."

"No, I don't see that. If you could deceive the minister one way, you could another. You must have told lies from the very first, and one more couldn't make any great difference to you."

"Lying in this case would have been worse than useless. The lie would be found out as soon as it was seen that I made no effort to silence Taras. Jealousy would prompt Rudersdorf to watch me, and he would be the first to denounce me to the ministry. The result is certain. Rudersdorf would have been charged with the mission he coveted. The lie would only have delayed the execution of the sentence, and scarcely so long as I delayed it by those acts which I have already confessed to. Do you follow me?"

"Yes."

"You see that if I had refused the offer I should certainly have consented to the murder of Taras by his enemy, Rudersdorf?"

"Yes."

"And you see that for the same reason I am compelled now to keep the promise I made."

Logical as the proposition was, I could not agree to it.

"As the only means of saving this friend from assassination by Rudersdorf," he insisted, laying his hand lightly upon Taras.

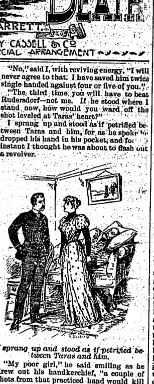
"I understand what you mean," said I in a reluctant tone.

"Then you must agree with me upon the course to be taken."

"No," said I, with reviving energy, "I will never agree to that. I have saved him twice single handed against four or five of you."

"The third time you will have to beat Rudersdorf—not me. If he stood where I stand now, how would you ward off the shot leveled at Taras' heart?"

I sprang up and stood as if petrified between Taras and him, for as he spoke he dropped his hand in his pocket, and for an instant I thought he was about to flash out a revolver.



I sprang up and stood as if petrified between Taras and him.

"My poor girl," he said smiling as he drew out his handkerchief, "a couple of shots from that practiced hand would kill you both."

"It may be so," I faltered as I sank into a chair overcome with a sense of my helplessness. "But he shall kill me first, please God."

He knitted his brows and turned away, wiping his hands with the handkerchief as if they were wet. When he turned again, there was perspiration on his brow.

"You talk of death," he said, "as if there was no chance of escape, no hope of happiness in all the years before you."

"There is no chance of escape if what you say is true; no hope of happiness if Taras is taken from me. It's useless to go on talking. Do you think I'd give in at the first sight of danger? Not I. I've got to think how I'm to face this other man now."

"Some way of getting out of the difficulty," he repeated in a slow, reflective tone, and then he added eagerly, "Who knows but that your woman wit might find an outlet where my senses are at fault? Why should not we—you and I—try to devise some scheme by which we may outwit the police, Rudersdorf, the whole lot?"

I regarded him with mistrust, his eagerness, some crafty expression in his half closed eyes, quickening my suspicions, though these signs were not inconsistent with an ardent wish to save Taras by deceiving his enemies.

"We will see what Taras says."

"Great heaven!" he exclaimed, with extreme agitation. "Taras must never hear a word of what has happened tonight. If you will not promise me that upon your oath, I—I"——

A look of dismay—a quick outward movement with his trembling hands, as if he were abandoning everything—closed the sentence which his lips seemed powerless to finish.

"If I am to believe you," I said after a minute's reflection, "Taras will believe you, and if what you have told me is not a lie he will forgive you."

"I do not doubt that. His faith is greater than yours. But it is his duty to report this to the society, and because it is a duty he will do it, despite the mercy in his heart. The society will judge me by the letter of the law, and my sentence will be death. This is what I exposed myself to by the attempt to save Taras from the hand of Rudersdorf. This is the fate to which you condemn me the moment you betray the secret I have given you. You are bound to respect that."

"A secret! I have promised nothing. I did not ask you to confess, and nothing binds me to conceal your explanation."

"You forced me to explain—to confess everything—to rely upon your feeling for Taras, if not on your mercy, for a man whose judgment has been betrayed by an excess of affection—the moment you stopped me, and there was question of your charging me with an indictable offense. The merest rumor would suffice to draw down the vengeance of the society upon me. You must promise to keep my secret."

"If I cannot promise"——

"Then I must leave the country before you can betray me. My life will not be safe here for another day. You force me to abandon Taras, and you take upon yourself all responsibility for what befalls him after. This is what will follow. When the police at St. Petersburg discover what has happened—and the telegraph will take the news within a few hours of my flight—Rudersdorf will be dispatched to fill my place, and all the precautions you may take will fail to ward off the blow which his relentless hand will surely strike. Within a week—aye, less than that—Taras will be a dead man, and you will have to answer to God for his death."

It was I now who trembled.

Seeing the deep impression he had made, Kavanagh proceeded quickly:

"I ask you for nothing that you cannot safely give. I throw aside the hope of inducing you to help me in getting Taras away from London. I merely ask you to be silent for awhile—to hold my secret until I have devised some new plan for defeating Rudersdorf and the police. What else can you desire? If human ingenuity, sharpened by the fear of death, can discover means of saving Taras, he shall be saved. Wanton wickedness or madness can alone lead you to refuse such an offer. You hold a guarantee of good faith on my part, for if you have reason to believe that I am playing falsely, you can at once make this charge against me and bring two witnesses to support it, punishing my infidelity with death. I will not even ask you to be silent for an indefinite time. Give me but a week—a few days—to think out a scheme, and in return I swear to deliver this friend from the hands of Rudersdorf."

I would not consent at once even to this plausible proposal, but in the end, feeling and reason inclining me in the same way, I said:

"I'll say nothing for a week anyhow."

"Keep that promise, and I will fulfill mine," said he, springing to his feet, with a conviction in his face which seemed to indicate that some scheme for deceiving the police had already flashed upon his imagination.

CHAPTER XXII.

A NEW DEVELOPMENT.

He shut the street door softly when he went out, and I fell into a reverie, sitting on the stool by the side of Taras. Unconsciously my eyes closed, and sleep overcame me. When Mere Lucas' step on the stairs woke me, I found my face resting against the pillow on which Taras lay, and my brow was moist and warm with his breath. I had but just time to collect my dazed senses, to start to my feet and whip off my crushed hat and ulster as the old woman entered.

"How!" she exclaimed softly, stopping in amazement. "Is monsieur ill?"

"He came home very late," I faltered in explanation, having failed to prepare myself for the occasion, "and Mr. Kavanagh thought it better that he should lie here until—until he wakes."

"Dear me, that's very strange," she murmured, approaching the couch in anxiety. Then, after regarding him for a moment in silence, her stout sides began to shake, and she added in a tone of cheerful satisfaction: "Thank heaven it's no worse than that! One has to see such a thing with one's own eyes to believe it, for I never saw him like this before; but it's odd all the same," and again she chuckled until, catching sight of my scared and anxious face, her merriment was suddenly changed to earnest solicitude.

"Why, my poor ma'mselle, it is you who are ill, not the master, and I was stupid enough not to see it at the first glance. You have been sitting up all night and tormenting yourself about nothing. For, look you, there is really nothing the matter with monsieur. He sleeps like a child, and see, his skin is as fresh and pink as a young girl's, and when he wakes up he won't even have a headache. Go. He has drunk half a bottle too much, that is all, but that is not terrible, and if the wine was good it is quite excusable. It's a good sign when a man enjoys life and the good things in this world and forgets himself now and then in moderation, for it's a proof that he's healthy and happy. It's early enough to be saints when we can no longer be merry, look you. Come, each one her turn. You go now to your bed and leave the master to me. He shall lie there till he wakes, and do you sleep till I call you."

I slept all the morning. Mere Lucas was laughing heartily as I went down stairs, but Taras was vexed with himself I saw when we met, and looked only at the serious side of the affair.

"I cannot excuse myself," he said. "I can only feel very sorry for the alarm and anxiety I have given you."

"That is passed; I have slept it all away," I said as cheerfully as I could, "and if you are quite well now there is nothing to feel sorry about."

"I am ashamed to say I never felt better in my life. Mere Lucas tells me that Kavanagh brought me home."

"Yes."

"I have not the slightest recollection of anything from the time I rose to come home and found that I could not walk steadily till the moment I woke on the couch there with Mere Lucas laughing over me as if it were the pleasantest thing in the world to see a man level himself with the beasts—or a little lower. I suppose I shall learn more when Kavanagh comes."

Kavanagh came while we were still at lunch. The first glance shot at Taras and me assured him that I had not broken my promise of secrecy, and the tone of relief in which he congratulated Taras on looking so well was not altogether due to that fact.

"The most unaccountable thing I ever knew," he said. "You seemed to me to be drinking even less than you usually drink."

"Thanks," said Taras, with a laugh. "I was ashamed to offer that excuse myself. I never yet knew an inebriated man who could not trace his misfortune to having drunk rather less than usual."

Kavanagh laughed with him.

"One thing, though," he protested, "the whisky at that place is infamously bad."

"It seemed to me to have a remarkably queer taste," Taras acquiesced, "but that again, I believe, is the habitual experience of the fallen. I hope I did not make myself particularly obnoxious."

"Not a bit. You were simply incapable. By the way, this must have fallen from your pocket." He laid Taras' latchkey on the table. "My man found it in the brougham. If I had thought to look for it there, I might have saved mademoiselle a great deal of alarm. It's not a pleasant thing to be rung up at 2 o'clock in the morning," he added, turning to me. "You feel none the worse for it today I hope."

Thinking of Taras I assured him that I felt very well indeed.

"One object in dropping in," he said, "was to know if you would like to see the chrysanthemums at the temple. There is an exhibition for the press this afternoon, which I have to notice for a daily paper. To judge flowers is really a lady's function, and to say nothing of the pleasure you give me it will materially add to the value of my article if I have your opinions on the subject."

His back was toward Taras, and a compression of his brows indicated clearly that he had another and more important reason for wishing me to accept the invitation.

I turned to Taras.

"Oh, go, by all means," said he warmly.

CHAPTER XXIII.

A SUGGESTION.

Kavanagh's brougham was waiting at the door, but the man on the box was not the driver whom I had seen there the night before.

"I have bad news," said Kavanagh as we passed Lambeth palace. "Read that," he added, putting a letter in my hand which he had taken carefully from a leather case.

I opened the folded sheet of thin, blue lined paper.

There was a black split eagle in the left hand corner, and on the right of it a printed address in Russian characters. I glanced down the paper and could make nothing of it, for it was written in the Russian characters, but turning the leaf I found several names in the ordinary Italian hand, and among them was one which struck the note of alarm—Rudersdorf—occurred several times in the same page.

"What does it say?" I asked. "I can't make it out."

"I thought you understood Russian."

"A few words, but I can't read Russian writing."

He took the letter from my hand and ran through it in somber silence, then raising his eyes and fixing them reflectively on the distance he said:

"It's from the minister of police at St. Petersburg. Luck runs in streaks, and ill luck too. He writes in the most friendly and courteous spirit, but virtually he offers me my demission—tells me that I have failed to do the work I undertook and intimates that he shall have to employ some one else. Who this is you can guess."

"Rudersdorf," I said.

He nodded and turning again to the letter continued:

"Here are his reasons: 'We have certain information that Borgensky'—Taras, you know—'has made arrangements for exhibiting at an early date in Paris and London casts of a statue in terra cotta, modeled in Lambeth, which must give extreme displeasure to the czar. His anger will fall upon me, and the production of this statue must involve my downfall. The order given me, now nearly 12 months ago, was to silence Borgensky, and he must be silenced at any cost, even though the cost be Borgensky's life and the loss of your services. With much reluctance—as you, I feel sure, will understand—I have this day instructed Rudersdorf to start for London."

He paused, and I held my breath, too terrified to speak.

"'If anything can be done to save the life of Borgensky, I know you will do it, and should you succeed you may depend on a substantial recognition of your services. With this view I have given Rudersdorf imperative and stringent instructions to consult you before taking any action whatever. He will call upon you as soon as he reaches London and carry out implicitly any directions you may give for conveying Borgensky safely on board the Volga. In the event, however, of your having no directions to give him'—that means if I can find no means of getting Taras on board the steamer that is waiting for him—'then Rudersdorf will have the sole management of the affair—to silence Borgensky as may seem best to him—and you will be freed from all further responsibility in the matter.'"

He sighed, and without other comment gloomily replaced the letter in his case.

"When will Rudersdorf be here?" I asked after an interval of dreadful silence.

"If he left on the same day that this letter was posted, he may be here now."

"Now!" I gasped.

"He may be waiting for me at my chambers this moment."

The throbbing of my heart seemed to check the words as they rose.

"What—what shall you do?" I faltered.

"Keep out of his way as long as I dare."

"You will go away from London?"

He shook his head.

"Unfortunately there is danger even in delay. Tomorrow or the next day he will telegraph to the minister for instructions. He will discover that I left my chambers after the time when I should have received the letter advising me of his coming."

"And then?"

"Then probably the minister will allow a few days' grace, after which he will wire the fatal instructions that Rudersdorf is craving for—the order to act as may seem best to him."

"You must see him—put him off on some pretense."

"Yes, that will do for a time, until the minister loses patience, and all the while we are whetting the appetite of that bloodhound Rudersdorf. Yes, that's what he is—a bloodhound, neither more nor less, ready to run down any unhappy wretch whose scent is given him. Fancy, he has never seen Taras; Taras has never injured him, and yet from the day Taras first came under the notice of the police this man has vowed to destroy him."

"What for?"

"Simply to gratify his lust for blood, the cultivated instinct of the bloodhound. He wears a locket on his chain; he opened it to show me one day. It contains two wisps of hair—one a woman's—taken from the heads of victims, well known nihilists, whom he hunted down and killed. They are arranged symmetrically, with a space left between them. In that vacant space he has written the name of Taras."

The brougham stopped; he opened the door and stepped out, but I was too horrified by what I had heard to move.

"What's the good of going in there?" I asked fiercely when he held forth his hand. "What are flowers to me now?"

"Better come," he said in a low tone, approaching closer. "We have to avoid suspicion. Every man I have employed is a spy." And holding out his hand again he added, pointedly, "We are watched when we least suspect it."

We passed through the house in which the chrysanthemums were exhibited, but I saw no beauty in them—nothing but patches of red here and there in varying shades—the color of blood in all.

We went out into the garden. It was the last day in October. The clouds that had overspread the sky for some days had broken that morning, and it seemed as if summer had returned. The sun was sinking in glory behind the deep red mist, but that hateful color was reflected in the ripples of the river—blood everywhere. I could see but that.

"We can talk safely here," said Kavanagh, stopping before a vacant seat—"if there is anything to say," he added despondently.

"Can we do nothing?" I asked in desperation.

He hesitated as if he were weighing alternatives.

"The simplest thing perhaps is to warn him of his danger. It may not save his life for a single hour longer. It is scarcely probable that it will enable him to ward off the blow, but if we can do nothing else"——

"I thought you had some idea when you went away."

"Oh, a hundred schemes have run through my mind since then—all mad, impossible or impracticable."

"Can't you tell me what they are?" I asked quickly, eager to grasp at the merest shadow of a straw floating on the overwhelming waters.

He shrugged his shoulders.

"One must seem more hopeful than the rest," I urged.

"That's true, but— Well, to confess the truth, I am ashamed to tell you of the only idea which seems to have any possibility of a practicable outcome. You can imagine how repulsive it is to my feelings by the fact that the risk of death seems preferable now to realizing my idea."

"I can't understand you. Tell me more plainly what you mean."

"I mean this," he answered firmly. "I see no acceptable option but to release you from your promise of secrecy and bolt for my life."

"What good is that?" I exclaimed impatiently. "What does it matter what you do if it cannot save Taras?"

"Warned of his danger, he might escape."

"Never! Taras fly from danger! You don't know Taras."

Even in that time of dread my bosom was stirred with pride in my hero's strength.

"I thought perhaps, knowing how great his affection and consideration are for you, that your influence"——

"I would not say a word nor let him see a tear that might influence him against his principles. It would be useless if I did."

"Then what is to be done?"

"That's what we must find out. What is that other scheme?"

"I don't care to tell it."

"And yet you would risk your life and all that! That's nonsense. You seem to be thinking more of yourself than of Taras. Why should you be ashamed of anything that might save him? I should be proud of it. Go on."

"It is true. I am thinking more of my own feelings than of his welfare."

He was silent for a minute. Then after glancing to the right and left to see that we were alone he continued in a tentative tone:

"You have noticed the curious resemblance that exists between Taras and—and Gordon?"

Taras was such a god to me, so far above all other men, that this intimation took me by surprise.

"I mean in physical appearance," he pursued. "Gordon would answer in almost every particular to a written description of Taras—tall, robust, deep chested, blue eyes, fair complexion, light hair, about 30, careless in dress"——

"But their features are not alike in form or expression."

"Pardon me, there is an expression of amiability common to both. For the rest, then, no merely verbal description could depict one man's face so exactly as to defy error."

"I dare say you are right. Never mind that. Go on."

"As I told you, Rudersdorf has never seen Taras. He has only the written description issued by the police to lead him. Besides that, he will be guided by me."

"What then?"

"Supposing I should misguide him?"

"Misguide him! How could you do that?"

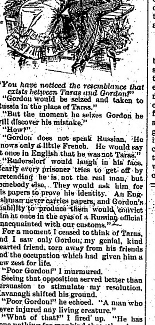
"Nothing easier. I have simply to point out Gordon and say, 'That is Taras.' He would believe it without question."

My courage and resolution quailed before the possibilities this hint revealed.

"Then he would kill poor Gordon," I faltered.

"God forbid! Even to save Taras I would not be instrumental to the death of Gordon. Both are my friends. No. The letter I read to you shows that while Rudersdorf is under my direction he will be held responsible for the life of his prisoner. He values his own interest too keenly to disregard the order of his chief."

"What would happen then?"



"You have noticed the resemblance that exists between Taras and Gordon?"

"Gordon would be seized and taken to Russia in the place of Taras."

"But the moment he seizes Gordon he will discover his mistake."

"How?"

"Gordon does not speak Russian. He knows only a little French. He would say at once in English that he was not Taras."

"Rudersdorf would laugh in his face. Nearly every prisoner tries to get off by pretending he is not the real man, but somebody else. They would ask him for his papers to prove his identity. An Englishman never carries papers, and Gordon's inability to produce them would convict him at once in the eyes of a Russian official unacquainted with our customs."

For a moment I ceased to think of Taras, and I saw only Gordon, my genial, kind hearted friend, torn away from his friends and the occupation which had given him a new zest for life.

"Poor Gordon!" I murmured.

Seeing that opposition served better than persuasion to stimulate my resolution, Kavanagh shifted his ground.

"Poor Gordon!" he echoed. "A man who never injured any living creature."

"What of that?" I fired up. "He has done nothing for mankind that others have not done. There are thousands of men as good as he. There is not another in the world like Taras."

"That is true. But it seems a cruel, an awful shame to make him suffer for no fault of his. It's a villainous thing to do. No, hang it! I can't bring myself to play this treacherous part. I must think of it. I"——

"But you are certain that his life will not be taken."

"As certain as I am that the sun will rise tomorrow. But to him freedom"——

"They will not keep him prisoner forever," I interrupted again.

"No," he said, with a smile. "But," he added gravely, "he may be kept prisoner for months."

"Months!" I exclaimed, astonished by the lightness of the penalty.

"Possibly." He seemed to misinterpret my surprise. "On the other hand, he may be set at liberty in a few weeks. It all depends upon the length of time he has to wait for official examination. The minister of police of course knows Taras, and the moment he sees Gordon the mistake will be discovered."

"A few weeks—a few months—that is nothing!"

"To you."

"Or to him. A man with half his kindness would undergo that cheerfully to save his friend. Gordon will agree to it himself, I know."

"I believe he would if we could make him a party to the scheme. Unfortunately we cannot. He is the worst actor in the world. The slightest evidence of complicity on his part would arouse Rudersdorf's suspicions, and the thing would fall through."

I nodded assent to this, knowing how awkward poor Gordon was. But Kavanagh's hesitation to act still mystified me.

"A short period of captivity seems to you a trifle in comparison with the life of a friend," he observed.

"Yes, it is, and I cannot understand why you hold back."

"There are a good many things that women do not understand, and honor between friends is one of them, I fear. And it is not only this breach of honor which I have to consider," he added in a less resentful tone, seeing that my perplexity had not been removed. "You have lost sight of the fact that this affair dooms me to perpetual exile, if not to death."

"Yes, I forgot that. I understand now. But surely the society will forgive you everything for having saved Taras."

He shook his head mournfully.

"The society is governed by hard and fast rules and permits no member to do harm for the sake of the good it may produce. Besides," he added quickly to avoid criticism of this very antinihilistic principle, "they will certainly regard this as an expedient to escape the penalty of previous acts. It is useless to cheat myself with false hopes. If we carry out this scheme, I must prepare to fly the country the day that Gordon returns."

We both sat silent for a little time, I feeling that the sacrifice could only be made by free will.

"One thing," said Kavanagh at length in a lighter tone—"one thing that pleases me in this idea is that it would completely crush the enemy. When Gordon came back and made his experiences public, there would be such a blaze up in the papers that the Russian government would not dare to make any further attempt to kidnap Taras; Rudersdorf, for permitting himself to be cheated, would probably be awarded a lifelong post at Archangel as a reward for his services, and Taras would be suffered to live in peace."

"That is worth a great sacrifice," I said.

"Yes, I will think of it. Come, it is time to return."

On our way back he said:

"I am glad I have talked it out with you. One sees things so much more clearly by the light another mind throws on them."

And as the brougham stopped before the door he said:

"I shall have made up my mind by tomorrow, and you shall know the result."

Fervently I prayed that he might decide to carry out his design, and this probably was the wish he had taken so much pains to inspire.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

His First Experience.

John Smith was a clerk who had to work the telephone which had been newly fitted at his office. He will never forget his first experience with the instrument. On hearing the clatter of the bell he took down the receiver and heard his employer's voice asking for information concerning business. John was under the impression that as his employer was two miles away he ought to put his hand to his mouth like an ancient mariner on the stage, who is paid sixpence a night to do "Ship, ahoy!" business. He accordingly thundered his answer into the transmitter. The answer came, "I don't understand you at all."

Smith essayed again and again, but with no better result. A happy thought struck him when he had recovered his wind after the tenth blast, and he softly whispered to himself, "I wonder if the old idiot is deaf." His hair rose slowly on end as he heard the sound of his governor's voice coming softly from the receiver, "No, John, the old idiot is not deaf, and you can take a fortnight's notice." John now declares that telephones are frauds.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Kier Hardie.

Kier Hardie, the labor unionist member of parliament, is no fool despite his sartorial eccentricities and his diatribes against constituted society. His enemies tried to deposit him in a cavity not long ago by procuring a firm of clothiers to offer him a suit of clothes free, calculating to expose the transaction to Mr. Hardie's confusion. That gentleman, however, knew his men, and in reply expressed his willingness to accept the clothes if the firm would agree to pay its employees the union rate of wages in the future. That closed the incident.—London Letter.

THE Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad has passed into the hands of a receiver. This road and its branches embraces under one management 9,345 miles, which is one of the longest in the world. The road had been trying to float $10,000,000 of bonds, but failed to accomplish its purpose.

THE verdict of acquittal in the Tweten case meets the approval of the majority of our citizens. The case was fairly tried and thoroughly prosecuted by the state, and the jury was above the average in intelligence. The pleas made by Mr. Steenerson for the defense and Mr. Edgerton for the state, were both able and eloquent. The former talked for two hours and a quarter, and the latter for one hour and a half.

IT is not often that the JOURNAL sees a chance to endorse anything seen in a democratic paper but, we are not hide-bound and when we see such a suggestion as that made last week by the Wabasha Herald when that paper mentions the name of Senator Burkhardt for state treasurer we are prepared to jump at it too quick. Senator Burkhardt is a resident of a democratic county, but has always carried it whenever he was in the field for sheriff, or senator, or anything else and he would carry it again if he should be a candidate for state treasurer. Not only that but he is also strong in other counties down that way and would run like a race-horse in the northern counties. We hold up both hands.

Senator Henry Burkhardt, of Reads Landing, is prominently mentioned as a candidate for state treasurer on the republican ticket. In casting around for a candidate, our friends, the enemy, might go a great ways further and do much worse than to nominate the Senator. If he succeeds in getting more votes than his democratic opponent he would handle the state's money carefully and well and fill the treasurer's office to perfection.

Thus saith the Wabasha County Herald, a democratic sheet by the way. We can add that the woods are full of hustlers up this way who, without regard to race, color, party or previous condition of servitude would take off their coat and work like tigers for his election should Senator Burkhardt be nominated on the state ticket.

Speaking of profits in pork raising the Record, Becker county, says: "A prominent farmer of this county who called at our office this week summed up the result of his wheat farming as follow: In the fall of '92 he harvested 825 bushels of wheat, which at only 60 cents per bushel was worth $495. Last fall, from the same acreage, the ground having been similarly worked and the grain receiving the same care, he secured 225 bushels which sold at 45 cents per bushel brought him $100.25. This may be put down as a fair sample of the results of wheat farming the past two years, there has been a great deal of talk of an advance in the price to a figure that would make wheat growing profitable, but the continued low price reminds one of the old saying "all signs fail in dry weather"—and they seem also to fail in these times of general business stagnation. There appears to be but one course open to the farmer who would save his farm and home from the sheriff's hammer, and that is to abandon wheat raising for the present, at least the raising of wheat for market. If it is a fact that $1.46 per bushel can be realized when converted into pork, as related by a farmer in Stockman, the way to prosperity appears to be clear enough. If the above figure, or even one-half of it, can be realized from wheat fed pork, we are unable to understand why one bushel of wheat should be placed on the market in this county. At P. O. Stephens' market in Detroit may be seen to-day four very fine dressed hogs which were raised and fattened on wheat. One weighs 450, another 475 pounds. They were raised near Pelican Rapids, and if the men who raised them are prepared to give facts and figures relating thereto for the enlightenment of their fellow farmers of this section produce pork of this class in sufficient quantity to create a market, they would find buyers as ready to pay cash therefor as they have been in the past found buyers ready to pay cash for their wheat."

Hicks' Predictions.

The great weather prophet Irl W. Hicks, predicts January weather as follows: "At the opening of the new year a reactionary storm wave will have just expended itself in western regions, and a cold wave with rising barometer will be pressing eastward. By about the 3rd the colder weather with clearer conditions will have reached the regions of the Atlantic. At the same time the temperature will begin to rise and the barometer will be falling in the west. The 4th is the center of a regular storm period with the new moon on the 6th calling for the crisis of the period about the 5th, 6th and 7th. A partial relaxation from cold will center on the 10th and 11th and reactionary squalls of rain and snow will appear at many points along the progressive line of change from west to east. Renewed cold will follow promptly and severely, filling the time with wintry weather up to the advent of the next storm period. The 16th is the central day of the period, with the moons first quarter on the evening of the 14th. It will turn warmer in westerly regions by the 14th and during the 15th to 18th the warm wave will grow in extent and degree causing storms of rain and snow in its regular advance eastward. Reactionary changes 21st and 22nd, the crisis of the disturbance being reached about the time of the full moon on the 21st. Look out for a cold wave to bring up the rear promptly and severly. It will be frosty and cold, generally for several days after the last named reactionary storm. The last storm period of the month begins about the 26th and ends the 30th. January is apt to end fair and frosty.

Acreage Reduced.

The Minneapolis Evening Journal:—

TOLEDO, O., Dec. 23.—During the past four days C. A. King & Co. have received replies from 3,384 grain men and millers in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Kansas and Missouri, which raise two-thirds the entire winter wheat crop. Each state reports a smaller acreage than last year. Michigan has nearly one-fourth less, Missouri one-fifth, these showing the greatest decrease. The crop goes into winter in good condition. Six hundred and thirty-five report the prospect excellent; 1,239 good; 1,014 fair; 383 poor, and only 75 say it has a very poor start. The reports show that about three-eighths of the 1893 wheat crop, which was a short one, remains in farmers, dealers and interior millers' hands in the six states. Half of the reports say the reserves are about the same as a year ago. Ohio has a trifle more, Indiana and Michigan fully as much, Illinois a trifle less, while Kansas and Missouri have somewhat less. Kansas and Missouri have only enough to supply the local mills until next harvest. Michigan and Illinois will grind most of their surplus, but Ohio and Indiana have a fair surplus for shipment. Less than a quarter of the clover seed crop remains unmarketed. Most of the sections which reports fair stock say it will be needed at home. The reports say the crop has turned out a trifle better than was expected, especially in Ohio, which had the largest crop.

THE cavillers, if there are any in the Tweten case can not say that the case was not as fairly treated as any ever tried in the county and the outcome should satisfy even the most captious. The coroner's jury was composed wholly of Crookston business men but of the trial jury only one Crookston man appeared and he cannot really be called a Crookston man as he has been here but a short time and while he may a permanent fixture he may not. The jury, composed of men from all over the county, consisted of as sound, level-headed business men, mostly farmers, as could be had and the prosecution was aided by the assistant attorney-general leaving nothing that could conduce to a fair and square trial to be desired. We can see no reason for any dissatisfaction with the finding of the trial jury which concurred with that of the coroner's jury in every particular.

Christian Endeavor Notes.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Presbyterian church of Bellefonte, Pa., is supporting a missionary in Laos, Dr. Peebles, at $800 a year. The money is raised in shares of 5 cents a week, some members taking more than one share.

There are 5,000 members of the Christian Endeavor in Washington, representing 100 societies, and they constitute an efficient organization for doing good.

Floating Endeavorers on the United States steamship Albatross in Alaskan waters distributed tracts to the whaling fleet and held prayer meetings on board, attended by sailors of all the vessels in port.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

Tuesday, Dec. 19.

Aside from several set speeches ther was very little done in the senate.

The house had another lively debate on the president's Hawaiian message.

The majority report of the ways and means committee on the Wilson tariff bill was presented to the house.

The house adopts a measure forbidding the suspension of pensions until the pensioner has had a month's notice and a chance to defend himself.

Amendments to the urgent deficiency bill were adopted by the house, appropriating large sums for additional mileage for members and pay of employes.

Wednesday, Dec. 20.

The senate passed the urgent deficiency bill.

The nomination of Wayne McVeagh as ambassador to Italy has been confirmed.

An agreement was reached by the committees of both houses for adjournment Friday until Jan. 3.

A resolution was adopted by the senate instructing the committee on foreign relations to ascertain whether any irregularities have occurred in the diplomatic or other relations with Hawaii.

The house spent the day in the consideration of the two pending conference reports, those on the urgent deficiency bill of the last session and for the New York and New Jersey bridge bill, preparatory to the adjournment for the holiday recess. Both reports were agreed to after some very lively speeches.

Thursday, Dec. 21.

Both houses adjourned till Jan. 3.

In the senate a bill was introduced to annex Utah Territory to the State of Nevada.

Before adjournment Mr. Wilson gave notice that the debate on the Wilson bill would begin the day of the reconvening of congress, and Mr. McCreary also informed the house that within 10 days after meeting two days would be given for consideration of the Hawaiian resolutions reported by the foreign affairs committee.

TO OUST VOORHEES.

A Movement For That Purpose On Foot in Indiana.

LA PORTE, Ind., Dec. 23.—Strong efforts are being made, it is said, to oust Senator Voorhees and make ex-Governor Gray his successor. The anti-Voorhees movement contemplates the capture of the state committee by the Gray faction, and the election as chairman of an enthusiastic supporter of the ex-governor. It is understood that the silver question will cut quite a figure in the campaign, and an effort will be made to array the friends of free coinage against Voorhees on account of his course in the senate.

Club Officials Confident.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Dec. 26.—In view of the letter from H. W. Long, Governor Mitchell's private secretary, to J. H. Tysen of this city emphatically stating that the governor would use all means in his power to prevent the Corbett-Mitchell contest, the Associated Press correspondent interviewed J. F. T. Bowden, general manager of the Duval Athletic club, regarding the governor's position and the prospect for the contest. Mr. Bowden is absolutely confident of the ability of the club to bring the contest to a successful issue.

Restore Old Wages.

DETROIT, Dec. 26.—The Detroit, Lansing and Northern and Chicago and West Michigan railroad system made a general reduction in wages last August and now have announced that they will resume the old scale Jan. 1. Business does not warrant it, the general manager says, but roads are going to try it any way, in the hope that an increase of business and added zeal of employes may help them to make it permanent.

Waite Issues a Call.

DENVER, Dec. 26.—Governor Waite has issued the long talked call for a special session of the legislature to meet Wednesday, Jan. 10, 1894. The call consists of about 5,000 words and mentions over 30 subjects on which legislative action should be taken, in the governor's opinion.

Saved by Jumping.

THE DALLES, Or., Dec. 23.—Railroad men report the wreck of an extra freight train on the Union Pacific near Mozier, 15 miles west of this station. A train ran into a landslide, throwing the engine and car down a 50-foot embankment. All hands saved themselves by jumping.

Rockefeller Denies.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Mr. John D. Rockefeller denies the report that he has given another $1,000,000 to Chicago university. He says the rumor is untrue in every particular and that he had no idea of making any such gift.

Edison Company Cuts Prices.

CHICAGO, Dec. 25.—Injunctions failing to rid the Edison General Electric company of its numerous competitors in the electric lighting business, the big trust has determined to run them out of the field by cutting prices below all competitors. A sweeping reduction of 25 per cent on every grade of lamp in manufacture has been made.

Fall River Dividends.

FALL RIVER, Mass., Dec. 26.—The list of yearly dividends of the Fall River cotton manufacturers, just issued by G. M. Haffards & Co., stock brokers, shows the capital stock of 34 companies to be $20,378,000, and dividends averaging 7.96 per cent, and amounting to $1,622,340, have been paid during the year.

Not Officially Notified.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—Secretary Lamont stated that he had received no official information of the race war reported at Cerillos, N. M., and that no action was contemplated in regard to sending troops to quell the alleged disturbance.

English After Bullion.

DENVER, Dec. 26.—At the beginning of the new year the London dealers in bullion, especially silver, will establish agencies in this city, bringing them into closer relations with the producers.

NEWS IN MINNESOTA.

A farmers institute was held at Carver last week.

The postoffice at Merritt, St. Louis county, has been discontinued.

J. J. Meiggs, the second of the St. Paul bank robbers, was found guilty.

The Mason block and contents at Duluth was damaged $100,000 by fire last week.

Fire destroyed the New England House and a large store building adjoining at Red Lake Falls.

The earnings of the state grain inspection for November are $16,016.65, as reported by Inspector Claussen.

E. L. Sparly of Watson was found dead in his room, apparently from suffocation, caused by a lamp stove.

Legal action has been begun against the Twin City Railway company to compel it to vestibule its street cars.

Wolf & King of Duluth have secured a contract from the Empire Coal company to build a railroad 65 miles long in Kentucky.

Sergeant Gustafson of the Minneapolis police force, was stabbed by Walter Fewer, whom he was arresting, and was dangerously wounded.

A 3-year-old daughter of William Gagen of Caledonia fell into a kettle of boiling water, from the effects of which she died in a few hours.

Justice Buck of the supreme court decided in the coal combine case that members of the legislature are not exempt from service of summons.

David L. How, for 25 years past cashier of the First National bank of Shakopee, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head. Financial troubles the cause.

Public Examiner Kenyon has sent out a call for a statement of the condition of banks, Dec. 19, and the call to national banks for a similar statement is being made by the controller of the currency.

The president has signed the joint resolution for the protection of those parties who have heretofore been allowed to make entries for lands within the former Mille Lacs Indian reservation in Minnesota.

Pasqualo Ferraro, an Italian living on the upper flats near the Smith avenue bridge, St. Paul, was murdered shortly after midnight Wednesday by Gelsimino Magliono, another Italian. Magliono escaped but was captured later in the night.

Governor Nelson has sent instructions to the fish and game commission to keep very strict watch of people who are killing big game in violation of the law. The governor makes an exception of poor people who depend largely on fish for their winter subsistence. The especial complaint is against the killing of moose, which are growing very scarce.

Because of an error in the advance notice to stockholders the annual meeting of the Duluth and Winnipeg road, held here Dec. 15, at which a full board of directors was elected, has been declared illegal and void. A new call has been issued for a meeting Jan. 12, 1894. It is likely the same directors will be chosen as were selected at the recent meeting.

The 29th quarterly statement of the finances of the state correctional and charitable institutions was received from the printer by Mr. Hart. The table showing the pauper population of the state shows 5,444 for the present year, against 4,869 in 1892 and 5,439 in 1891. This statement, however, has practically no bearing on the financial stringency, as the figures were all taken in June, before the conditions had become general.

THE STATE'S WEALTH.

Value of Real and Personal Property in Minnesota.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 23.—The returns showing the real and personal property of the state for 1893 have been made by the assessors of the various counties of the state to State Auditor Biermann, and have been compiled in his office in the form of two tables. The abstract of that relating to personal property shows that 191,750 persons have been assessed in Minnesota, that is, exclusive of firms, and that the value of all personal property so assessed and equalized is $117,973,448. In 1891 it was $110,880,943, showing an increase in 1893 of $7,092,505.

The reports on the value of real estate show that there are in the state 30,064,271 acres of land, exclusive of town lots, valued at $237,084,696, an average value per acre of $7.88; also that the value of town and city lots, including the structures thereon, is $399,411,613, and taxable personal property valued at $96,043,649, making a total of $637,459,928. In 1891 it was $595,588,530, showing an increase in 1893 of $41,871,398. On this property a tax has been levied which averages 22.6 mills, making the total taxes levied $14,214,988.06. The items are as follows:

State taxes	[illegible]
School taxes	4,195,276.06
County taxes	2,229,414.76
City and town taxes	[illegible]

These items show an excess of $54,180.72 in actual taxes levied over the total estimated levy based on the average rate of 22.6 mills.

The personal property returns show among other items the following totals:

	Number.	Value.
Horses	[illegible]	8,351,569
Cattle	945,490	8,549,541
Sheep	[illegible]	[illegible]

GENESIS OF THE STEAMBOAT.

Ancient Craft That Foreshadowed the Modern Greyhounds of the Sea.

The first steamboat was built by Denis Papin, who navigated it safely down the Fulda as long ago as 1707. Unfortunately this pioneer craft was destroyed by jealous sailors, and even the very memory of it was lost for three-quarters of a century. In 1775 Perrier, another Frenchman, built an experimental steam vessel at Paris. Eight years later, in 1783, Jouffroy took up the idea that had been evolved by Papin and Perrier and built a steamer, which did good service for some time on the Saone.

The first American to attempt to apply steam to navigation was John Fitch, a Connecticut mechanic, who made his initial experiments in the year 1785. To what extent Fitch was indebted to the three illustrious French inventors named above we are not informed, but that his models were original there is not the least doubt. In the first he employed a large pipe kettle for generating the steam, the motive power being side paddles worked after the fashion of oars on a common rowboat. In the second Fitch craft the same mode of propulsion was adopted with the exception that the paddles were made to imitate a revolving wheel and were fixed to the stern—clearly foreshadowing the present stern-wheeler.

This last mentioned boat was the first American steam vessel that can be pronounced a success. It made its first trip to Burlington in July, 1788. But, after all, it was not until after the opening of the present century that steam navigation started into actual life. In 1807 Robert Fulton (who every school child knows was an American), in conjunction with one Robert R. Livingston, built the Clermont, and established a regular packet service between New York and Albany.

The success of this undertaking was so satisfactory that four new boats were built before the end of 1811, at least two of them being designed for service in other rivers.—St. Louis Republic.

The Man In the Iron Mask.

A letter to Louvois by Louis XIV, written in cipher, has been long in the archives of the ministry of war and has at length been deciphered. In it the king orders Louvois to arrest General de Burlonde for having raised the siege of Conti without permission, to send him to Pignerol and to conceal his features under a loup, or black velvet mask. The order was executed, and the presumption is therefore violent that the "Man In the Iron Mask"—it was a black velvet one with iron springs—was General de Burlonde. The story tallies with the known fact that the prisoner made repeated attempts to communicate his name to soldiers; that he was treated with respect by his military jailers, and that Louis XV. who knew the truth of the whole affair, declared it to be a matter of no importance. The difficulty is to discover the king's motive for such a precaution, but he may have feared discontent among his great officers or the soldiery. It must, however, be possible to discover from the lists in the war office whether General de Burlonde was recorded as "missing" or "dead" about the right time.—Saturday Review.

Tricks In All Trades.

The young doctor was sitting in his consultation room chatting with a friend when some one entered the outer office. He stepped out, and the friend heard him say:

"Pray take a seat. I'll be at liberty in a few minutes."

Then he came back into the consultation room and closed the door after him.

"I'll skip," said the friend.

"Not for the world. Sit down," said the doctor.

"But you have a patient waiting."

"Well, it's a woman. Let her wait about 15 minutes."

"You may lose her business."

"On the contrary, I'll get it regularly. I always make them wait."

"Why?"

"To give the impression of a rush of business. It is the only way to keep a woman. If she thought I wasn't rushed to death, she'd lose confidence in me and go somewhere else."—Chicago Record.

A Cabman's Revenge.

A good story is told of a stipendiary magistrate in a Yorkshire town, not given to err on the side of leniency, who heavily fined a cabman for fast driving. A few days after the magistrate, detained rather longer than usual in the court, was hurrying along to catch his train when, seeing an empty cab handy, he hailed the driver and directed him to proceed to the station, telling him that he was pressed for time. The driver, however, heedless of the hint, kept to a gentle trot. "I say, I say, my man," exclaimed the fare, with his head out of the window, "drive faster than this!" "It can't be done, sir," replied the driver. "Ye see, if we drives faster we're had up afore the 'beak,' and we gets fined, so we has to be careful." He did not alter his pace, and neither did the "beak" catch his train.—London Tit-Bits.

Women Usurers.

Women are, as we know, invading most trades and professions, but it is interesting, says the London Lady, and not a little startling to learn that they have even taken to the doubtful one of usury. "You would hardly credit," said a well known solicitor recently, "what a huge number of women money lenders there are about." Many of them have small private connections only, obliging feminine friends or acquaintances pressed for the amount of some dressmaker's or milliner's bill with temporary loans at interest. But there are others who go in for it extensively—advertise, and, in fact, make quite a handsome income out of it.

The Nurse's Business.

and now my hair is over a yard long and very full and heavy. I have recommended this preparation to others with like good effect."—Mrs. Sidney Carr, 1460 Regina st., Harrisburg, Pa.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for several years and always obtained satisfactory results. I know it is the best preparation for the hair that is made."—C. T. Arnett, Mammoth Spring, Ark.

THE CRONIN MURDER

JUDGE LONGENECKER TELLS ABOUT MARTIN BURKE'S CONFESSION.

He Thought He Had a Full Story of the Cronin Murder, but Burke Changed Front and Refused to Give Out the Story—The Cause of the Change Only Guessed At.

CHICAGO, Dec. 27.—According to a story in The Times, Martin Burke was at one time, after his extradition from Winnipeg, on the verge of making a complete confession of all the events connected with the murder of Dr. Cronin. Judge Longenecker, at that time prosecuting, now tells what a narrow escape he had from securing from Burke a confession which would have changed the whole complexion of the celebrated trial of the conspirators who hired the Carlson cottage for their awful butchery.

Judge Longenecker's Story.

"Burke reached Chicago in charge of Chief Hubbard, who had taken immediate supervision of his extradition, and had gone to Winnipeg to bring Burke home, had him carried at once to the Harrison street station. Here, I feel, I made my first mistake. Perhaps I ought to have had him taken to some other station. I went directly to the station, where Chief Hubbard and I held a long interview with the prisoner. I tried my best to get him to confess, and I am confident that I should have succeeded had nobody else seen him before my next visit.

"Burke," I said to him, "we have got evidence enough to hang you. There is not the slightest doubt of that. We know that you hired the Carlson cottage. We know that you bought the furniture which was put in it. We know that you fled to Canada as soon as the murder was discovered. We know all this and a good deal more, and we can prove all we know. Now we also know that you were not alone in the murder. There were others. Now, the people who are behind the murder don't care anything for you. It is the others whom they are going to try to get off. They will simply use you as a scapegoat, as a bridge to carry themselves and the rest over safely. Burke, you had better use the only chance you have to save your neck, and turn state's evidence. I talked a long while with him in this strain. Then I showed him a letter from his mother. It seemed to be the finishing stroke.

Thought He Would Confess.

"When I left him that afternoon, both Chief Hubbard and myself felt there was not the slightest doubt that he would confess all about it when I returned on the morrow. I left strict orders that nobody should be allowed to see Burke. But ex-Mayor Cregier and Stephen D. May, who was at that time city prosecutor, if I remember aright, procured admittance and had a talk with him. I don't want to be understood as impugning the motive of either ex-Mayor Cregier or Mr. May. I feel positive that the ex-mayor was heartily with us in our efforts to convict Burke. Mr. May also had a perfect right to see him in his capacity of city prosecutor. It is quite probable that they both wished to see Burke from mere curiosity. Mr. May had formerly been a partner of Lawyer Forrest, who was defending the other prisoners. Whether anybody else saw Burke or not that day I do not know. Still, there were plenty of police officials who had the right of entrance to the cells.

Burke's Demeanor Changed.

"But the fact remains that the next morning when Chief Hubbard and I visited Burke, fully expecting to hear his confession, the prisoner's whole demeanor had completely changed. Instead of looking like a man who seemed to have lost the last straw of hope and had determined to save himself by confession, Burke was defiant. He laughed at us, and told us that he guessed he wouldn't confess. As Burke was leaving the station I told him again that he was being used as a scapegoat. To prove it I said:

"'Just you tell your Wisconsin lawyer when you see him that you have made up your mind to confess everything and plead guilty. See how quickly he will try and persuade you not to do so.'

"I think that Burke may have done so, and that his lawyer from Wisconsin may have wavered a little. This may account for his being supplanted by Mr. Forrest almost immediately afterward. I have always believed that Burke intended to confess, but was braced up and prevented from telling anything by the same mysterious power which lent courage to O'Sullivan and the rest whenever they began to despair."

QUIET AND PEACEFUL.

No Change in the Situation at Honolulu.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 22.—The steamer Mariposa, which arrived during the morning, brought no special information from Honolulu. The steamer had but few passengers from Honolulu and none of them were identified with either political party there.

A few moments before the sailing of the Mariposa the Associated Press correspondent learned that the cipher dispatches received by Willis per the Corwin amounted to seven pages. They were translated by officers of the Philadelphia. One of the officers who made the translation said to a responsible citizen: "If I were a Royalist, knowing what I do, I would consider the game was up, as far as the ex-queen is concerned."

McClelland Gets Bail.

CENTRALIA, Ills., Dec. 23.—John A. McClelland has secured a release on a habeas corpus writ on $8,000 bonds. McClelland is charged with having been connected with the murder of his father and brother, Alex and Oscar McClelland, whose bones were found staked in a pond.

THE DEATH OF THE EARTH.

It Will Be Occasioned by the Gradual Extinction of the Sun.

M. Camille Flammarion says that in all probability, notwithstanding all the circumstances which threaten it, our planet will die, not of an accident, but of a natural death. That death will be the consequence of the extinction of the sun, in 20,000,000 years or more—perhaps 80,100,000—since its condensation in a relatively moderate rate will give it on one hand 17,000,000 years of existence, while, on the other hand, the inevitable fall of the meteors into the sun may double this number.

Even if you suppose the duration of the sun to be prolonged to 40,000,000 years, it is still incontestable that the radiation from the sun cools it, and that the temperature of all the bodies tends to any equilibrium. Then the earth and all the other planets of our system will cease to be the abode of life. They will be erased from the great book and will revolve, black cemeteries, around an extinguished sun.

Will these planets continue to exist even then? Yes, probably in the case of Jupiter, and perhaps Saturn? No, beyond a doubt, for the small bodies such as the earth, Venus, Mars, Mercury and the moon. Already the moon appears to have preceded us toward the final desert. Mars is much farther advanced than the earth to the same destiny. Venus, younger than us, will doubtless survive us. These little worlds lose their elements of vitality much faster than the sun loses its heat.

From century to century, from year to year, from day to day, from hour to hour, the surface of the earth is transformed. On the one hand the continents are crumbling away and becoming covered by the sea, which insensibly and by slow degrees tends to invade and submerge the entire globe. On the other hand, the amount of water on the globe is diminishing. A careful and reasonable calculation shows that by the action of erasure alone all the land on our planet will be covered by water in 10,000,000 years.

Bronze Powder Making.

Nearly a hundred establishments are engaged in the manufacture of bronze powder in and near the cities of Furth and Nuremberg, Germany. It is composed of copper, tin, zinc and antimony melted in proper proportions and cast first into rods of half an inch in diameter and about three feet long, these rods being rolled until about two inches wide and then cut into suitable lengths for handling. The pieces go to the hammers, where they are beaten into a very small fraction of their former thickness, and are then taken to a sulphuric acid bath, where each sheet is washed to remove all impurities, rust and dirt.

After being thoroughly dried the sheets are again hammered by steam hammers until no further reduction is possible, there being a limit to which machinery can be used. Up to this stage the treatment which the metal receives, whether intended for powder or metal leaf, is identical, but now the process changes. If designed for metal leaf, the further beating is done by hand, but if for bronze powder the sheets go to the shears, where they are cut up into small particles and become known as clippings. These are now ready for the stamp mills, which are run in batteries, enabling one man to run or attend 50 or more. When sufficiently pulverized, the powder is sifted in a special manner, the heavier and better qualities going to one receptacle and the inferior grades to another.—New York Sun.

British India.

Great Britain has been stretching her wings over India. In 1842 she laid claim to 626,000 squares miles of that country. She made additions to this every year except 1843, 1845 and 1852, down to 1856, when her possessions aggregated 856,000 square miles. Advances were made in 1866, 1882 and 1886, and now the area of India under British rule is 927,887 square miles. British India is larger than all that part of the United States lying east of the Mississippi river and its population five times as great as the present population of this whole country. Great Britain may not be able to acquire much more of India. Indeed there is likely to be difficulty in retaining what she has with native dissatisfaction and the watchfulness of her aggravating enemy on the north, who in the last 40 years has moved his boundaries over many degrees of latitude.—Texas Siftings.

Window Screens.

A transparency at a kitchen window attracted my notice the other day by its novelty. "I made it," said the owner, "because I could not get a transparency at the village store. I wanted one of those screens, you know, that permit you to see out, but do not let outsiders see in. I took an old frame for a wire screen, painted it to match the outside painting of the house and then tacked it to a piece of organdie, fitting it perfectly and stretching it very tight. From thin chintz I cut flowers and sprays, and arranging the design in my mind, proceeded to paste them on. After all were on I laid a piece of pasteboard behind and put on heavy weights until they were dry. I then gave the whole a coat of white varnish."

Reassured.

Angelina (anxiously)—Are you sure, dear, that you don't regret it, and that you don't sometimes miss your life as a bachelor?

FOUND ON THE TRAINS

A MAN WHO FOR FIFTEEN YEARS HAS BEEN PICKING UP THINGS.

A Few Items From the Notebook of Charlie—People Who Forget Portable Property—Umbrellas Head the List of Forgotten Belongings.

Whenever during the daytime a New York, New Haven and Hartford train rolls into the Grand Central depot a stoop shouldered, little man, with keen gray eyes and a beard that doesn't grow with sufficient luxuriance to require frequent trimming, strolls down to the end of the platform. When the train stops and while the most laggard of the passengers are still leisurely alighting, he hops nimbly on the rear platform of the last car and proceeds to literally "go through" the train. Sometimes a much excited passenger who has suddenly recollected that he has forgotten something rushes madly back into the train and discovers his portable property in the hands of the little man. Then, if he is of a suspicious disposition, he glares and scowls at the little man, and sometimes pounces upon him and indignantly demands to be told what he is doing with "that."

Then a tired look comes into the little man's face and he mildly explains that he is employed by the company to search incoming trains for articles left behind by passengers, which he conveys to the lost property room, where the owners can always get possession of them again by furnishing presumptive evidence that the things belong to them.

When Charlie—that is what the other employees about the depot call him, although he has another name which appears on the payrolls of the company—first began this work, his beard wasn't tinged with gray, and he wasn't a bit stoop shouldered. That was 15 years ago. All these years, from 6:30 in the morning until 6:30 at night each day, he has been picking up things that careless passengers have forgotten to take with them when they left the train.

It would make any man stoop shouldered to be continually looking for things that long. But his eyes are as keen as ever, and his honesty is still proof against all temptations. If that were not the case, he could have retired with a snug little capital. From the pocketbooks and purses and "wads" that he has found while pursuing his unique occupation he could have slipped enough into his own pocket to render him quite independent.

There are no blanks in his daily records. Never a day goes by that he doesn't find something that somebody has forgotten. He picks up fewer things on Sundays than on any other days, because on Sundays travel is comparatively light, and passengers are apt to be less preoccupied with business cares and therefore not so likely to forget things. On some days his list of articles found on the incoming trains is quite a formidable one.

This, for instance, is what he turned into the lost property room on Aug. 17: Thirteen umbrellas, two rings (one plain gold and one with diamonds), one overcoat, one package of legal papers, one satchel, one lady's jacket, one Derby hat, one valise, one cape, one cane, one package of underwear, one mackintosh and one pocketbook.

And this is what he found on Aug. 27: Seven umbrellas, one parasol, one shawl, one overcoat, one pair of shoes, one package containing a suit of clothes, one pair of spectacles, one purse, one flask of whisky and one smelling bottle.

When the articles are taken to the lost property room, they are labeled with the date on which they are found and the number of the train. Nearly all the articles that have any intrinsic value are redeemed. The rest are simply stored away for the gnawing tooth of time to prey upon.

Charlie is of the opinion, and surely he may be regarded as an expert on the subject, that everybody is liable to forget something at some time or other. Umbrellas are the articles that are most frequently left behind on the trains by travelers. The man who could devise an infallible system by which the owner of an umbrella would always be sure to remember it would reap a fortune. Charlie has tried his own wits at it, but was forced to give it up.

He has come to the conclusion that a state of ecstatic happiness, equally with one of intense preoccupation, is apt to produce forgetfulness of portable property. He has discovered that newly married brides and grooms are quite as apt to forget the little things they may be carrying with them as the man who has got so much business on his hands he can't think of anything else. The man who never travels without a flask of whisky seldom forgets it. Perhaps that is because the act of putting it into his pocket immediately after taking a nip has been so often repeated that it belongs to the category of unconscious cerebration.

It is not an infrequent thing for a man to leave a stovepipe hat on the rack and walk out of the car with a little skull cap on. But when he gets into the streets the small boys are sure to shout, "Shoot the hat!" or "Where did you get that hat?" Then he discovers the mistake that he has made, but the fact that he is never grateful to the small boys for reminding him of it and never rewards them must be regarded as evidence of that perversity inheritent in human nature which so often puzzles the philosopher.

Charlie is of the opinion that some people would forget their own mothers-in-law if they had half a chance. There is one man whose umbrella he has picked up in the train so often that he has lost track of the number of times. And yet that same man has told him frequently that he never leaves the house with his umbrella that his wife doesn't say to him, "Now, dear, be sure you don't forget your umbrella."

Women, so Charlie has found, are even more apt to leave things behind them in the cars than men.—New York Herald.

A SHORT TALK TO WORKINGMEN.

The Free Trade Features of the Mills Bill Discussed.

There is only one country in Europe in which the wages of labor are within a half of what they are in this country. That is Great Britain. Wages in Germany, France, Belgium and Switzerland are not one-third of what they are here. Those of Italy are not one-quarter. Last year cheap foreign labor was imported into the United States in the shape of manufactured goods to the value of $693,319,768. This was a great wrong to American labor. In the immense amount of imports permitted by our insufficient and defective tariff, the labor of women employed in the Manchester cotton mills, whose wages do not average $60 a year, came into competition with the higher priced labor of our southern and northern cotton spinners.

Munich is a gallery and center of art. German women, with as many as six children, saw wood in its streets for 15 cents a day. May a merciful God sink the United States 10,000 feet under the sea before this hideous spectacle shall become an incident of our civilization!

Nearly $700,000,000 worth of the starvation labor of Europe in the form of manufactured goods imported into this country last year! That which came from Belgium in bales and boxes represented the wages of 28 cents a day for women and 48 cents for men. And the highest priced labor in loose cargoes of Belgium steel and iron represented wages of less than 80 cents a day.

Italian labor in Italian merchandise was imported into this country last year, in competition with American labor, at prices that should fill sensitive souls with horror and alarm the thoughtful for the future of the human race. The pay in the cotton factories of Naples is 50 cents a day; of the Neapolitan marble and granite cutters, from 40 to 50 cents a day, according to skill; of coachmen, 80 cents; of women in lace factories, 10 cents, and girls, 7 cents; of soldiers in the army, $3 a month. Of all the workmen in the glass works of Italy, only the skilled blowers receive as high as $1 a day, and laborers on farms, hoeing or making hay, from 15 to 18 cents a day, working from sun to sun. God save America from such wages!—New York Sun.

The People Must Govern.

Probably the most serious menace to the future of this republic is the want of interest in elections by a large class of intelligent people of every community. How often one hears complaints regarding officeholders and politicians from persons who have not exercised their franchise. It is generally conceded that only in presidential elections is there a full expression of the voters of the country, and from year to year it seems as if the number of people who take no interest in politics, not even enough to cast their votes, is increasing. As a result of this many are elected to office who certainly could not represent the full vote of any community. Perhaps there is no question which has given statesmen and patriotic citizens more thought than "How can we secure a full and honest expression of the votes of the entire people?" Of course, any fair man will admit that there is a great amount of illiteracy in the United States. At the same time there is a greater amount of intelligence, and if the intelligence of the country will express itself fully there will be no doubt as to the future of the republic.

The question naturally arises "How can this be accomplished?" Living in a great city, if the snow falls heavily and a person neglects to clean his sidewalk, he is fined. Living in the country and neglecting the poll tax, a man is compelled to take his team and do a certain amount of work on the road for the benefit of the community.

Why should not a penalty be attached if a citizen fails to help govern this republic by his vote? In almost any state of the Union investigation will prove that a large portion of the intelligent voters fail to help in governing by not casting their ballot for one excuse and another—sometimes it is the fear of jury duty. Sometimes it is the lack of interest. Sometimes it is a disgust with a given party, and in this failure to exercise the right of franchise our intelligent people are endangering the future of the country.

From the east comes the suggestion, which looks very practical, that every citizen who fails to register and vote (unless disqualified) shall pay a fine of, say, $5, and the persons thus fined shall form a list from which juries shall be chosen before those who have exercised the duty of voting can be called upon.

What would be the effect of such a law? It is a well known fact that the full intelligent vote of the country is seldom, if ever, cast, and this is undoubtedly true in what are known as off years. This was well illustrated by the recent elections, when in great cities like Boston, Brooklyn, New York, Cincinnati, etc., from 5 to 10 per cent less votes were registered and cast than in the last presidential year. Very few realize how business men dread jury duty, and it is mainly from the dread of jury duty that a large portion have formed the unpatriotic habit of not voting. If by voting they could take their chances with all citizens in being called as jurors, an almost unanimous vote would be given at every election.

The plan then, to secure a vote from every qualified citizen, may be summarized as follows:

First—Every qualified voter who does not register (where required) and vote shall pay a fine of $5.

Second—The list of persons fined shall be used for jury duty before other citizens are called.

Third—The person furnishing the evidence of not registering and voting shall receive one-half the fine.

Fourth—A list of persons thus fined shall be printed in representative newspapers of the county at public expense.
—W. F. Wakeman.

ON SHORT ALLOWANCE.

How a Shrewd Sea Captain Made His Supply of Water Last.

"Water, water everywhere, nor any drop to drink." Few people beside sailors can appreciate the terrible import of these simple words. A correspondent writes that on a short whaling, or, as sailors say, "plum pudding voyage," which he once made in the brig Arnolda of Nantucket, Shubael Higgins, master, they ran short of water, and at last the captain decided to put into Goree, on the west coast of Africa. As they neared the Cape de Verde islands, however, and got into what are known to sailors as the horse latitudes, the wind fell calm, and the vessel drifted idly on the water.

As day after day passed with no signs of wind, Captain Higgins became impatient. The surface of the ocean was as smooth as a mirror, and as the long, heavy swells came from the regions of the trade winds, the vessel rolled and tossed about like a cork upon the water.

We furled the square sails to prevent their being worn out in slamming against the mast. The staysails were all set and the sheets hauled taut, which eased her somewhat in her rolling.

By this time the water had run so short that the captain felt obliged to adopt some plan to avoid all unnecessary drinking.

Calling me to his side, he said, "Boy, bring me a new tin dipper from the slop chest."

I did so. Then the captain had all hands called aft.

"Men," he said, "I have always dreaded to put my crew on short allowance, but the time has come when something must be done to save what little water we have left."

With that he took a piece of spun yarn from his pocket, and tied it to the handle of the dipper. Then turning to me, he said, "Take this to the masthead and tie it there."

"Now," said he, addressing the men, "you can have all the water you want to drink, but you must first go to the top of the mast and get the dipper, and after drinking all you need you must carry the dipper back and tie it to the mast again. Under no conditions will one of you pass the dipper to another. Every man must get the dipper for himself. In case of sickness, I will send the boy aloft for the sick man. This rule will apply to all on board, myself included."

At first we regarded the matter as a joke, on the captain's part, but as the days wore on and each of us made his trip aloft after the dipper the novelty wore off. We soon found, however, that the captain's plan for saving water was a very effectual one. The ship's scuttle butt, which formerly we had been obliged to replenish from the casks every other day, would now run a week without refilling.

We were becalmed just 60 days. Then the trade wind set in, and we proceeded to Goree and refilled our casks. But the memory of the trips I made aloft after that dipper and the spirit in which Captain Higgins performed his part of the contract, left an impression on my mind which remains to this day.—Youth's Companion.

Time!

"What a curious wooden hammer, Miss Lilian!"

"Yes. It was presented to papa many years ago by a lodge of some kind that he was presiding over at the time. I suppose he used it when he wanted to open the lodge or call some brother to order."

"Speaking of lodges, Miss Lilian, what do you think of men who join them and neglect their—er—wives and all that sort of thing?"

"I think they are not doing their duty, Mr. Spoonamore."

"S-so do I! We agree exactly on that. A man who would abandon the society of his—his wife, you know, to go down town four or five times a week, and meet a lot of other men, and go through the mummery they call initiation, and smoke cigars, and have a good time—why, it isn't right, you know."

The young woman toyed with the little wooden hammer and said nothing.

"And that's why I feel bold to say, Miss Lilian, that I think you and I would—h'm—would never have any disagreements if—we should—because that's the way I feel about it, and—and I've never talked this way to you before, you know, for I wasn't exactly certain whether—and all that sort of thing. When two persons agree on things like this, it stands to reason that there might be other things they would also—and you haven't known me a great while perhaps, but I feel that you're the only woman in the world I want to marry"——

Here the hammer fell.—Chicago Tribune.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss.
In Probate Court, Special Term, November 27th, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Louis Huot, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Godus Huot, administrator, setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained, with the charges of administration; and the taxes, assessments and other charges which are an existing lien upon his estate, and the improvements which are necessary for the preservation of his real estate; and a description of the tracts of land of said deceased which it is proposed to mortgage; and praying that license be to him granted to mortgage the tracts of land so described.

And it appearing by said petition that the personal estate of said Louis Huot, deceased, is insufficient to pay his debts, with the charges of administration, and to pay any taxes, assessments or other charges which are an existing lien upon his estate, or to pay for any improvements which are necessary for the preservation of his real estate, or any part thereof.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before this court on Monday, the 8th day of January, A. D. 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in the city of Crookston in said county, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said Godus Huot, administrator, to mortgage the said real estate of said deceased for the purpose of obtaining funds for the payment of such debts, charges, taxes, assessments and liens, and for the making of such necessary improvements.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspapre printed at published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 27th day of November, A. D. 1893.

In Probate Court. General term December 4th, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of the estate of J. G. Moen deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Martin Benson administrator of said estate setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof; the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to him granted to sell all of the real estate of which said deceased died seized. And it appearing by said petition that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before this court on Tuesday, the 9th day of January, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate office in the City of Crookston in said County, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said Martin Benson administrator, aforesaid to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies or expenses.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper, printed and published at Crookston, Minn., in said County.

Dated at Crookston, the 4th day of December, A. D. 1893.

[84-90] By the Court, C. M. BENSON, Judge of Probate.

DETAILS OF THE EXPRESS ROBBERY IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The Men Who Perpetrated the Crime Were New at the Work, and Appeared Like Country Youths—Passengers Saved Large Sums by Hiding Purses Under Seats—Officials Think They Know the Men.

LITTLE ROCK, Dec. 26.—The first entirely accurate details of the Kansas and Arkansas Valley holdup at Seminole, I. T., Saturday evening, reached Little Rock at 2:30 p. m., when the robbed train arrived. Seminole, the scene of the robbery, is a flag station nine miles south of Coffeyville, Kan. There is no town there and nothing to mark the spot save a side track and a small platform. Train No. 232 reached Seminole Sunday night, shortly after dark. The switch had been turned, throwing the train on the siding. The switch is on a heavy up grade and the train immediately came to a standstill. When the train stopped two men mounted the engine and began by of his watch and $40 in cash. They then proceeded to the mail car and rifled the mail pouches. Mail Clerk H. V. Pinckney, who was in charge, was forced to deliver up the registered packages. After abstracting the cash the letters were handed back to the clerk. Pinckney was relieved of his watch and 85 cents in change, 25 cents of which was returned to him to buy a lunch. An entrance to the express car was gained without resistance on the part of the express messenger as there was nothing of great value on board. The robbers commanded Messenger Ford from which they took two small packages, value unknown, and $150 in money. Finishing their work in the express car, the robbers turned their attention to the coaches, but very little of value was obtained. The robbers appropriated all the overcoats and watches in the cars, but the sum total of the cash they secured will approximate less than $500. Several passengers saved large sums by hiding their purses under the car seats. Both of the men who went through the coaches were young men, neither being over 33 and had the appearance of unsophisticated country youths. The train was held one hour and 20 minutes. It is stated positively that the railroad officials here have the names of the four robbers and it is believed their capture is only a question of a few days.

SECURED OVER $5,000.

An Express Messenger Held Up at Marshall, Tex.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 26.—A very brief telegram from Marshall, Tex., to The Post-Dispatch says at 3 o'clock a. m. Pacific Express Messenger McCulloch was knocked down on the railroad station platform by a negro and robbed of a pouch which contained from $5,000 to $8,000. Alough the act was done while a crowd of people was on the platform the robber escaped, and there is no clue to his identity.

Sentenced an Express Robber.

WICHITA, Kan., Dec. 23.—Judge Reed overruled the motion for a new trial and sentenced John Kettrell, the colored man arrested in Kansas City for complicity in the robbery of $7,530 from a United States express wagon here, to 10 years in the penitentiary.

Race War in Florida.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Dec. 26.—A special to The Times-Union from Wildwood, Fla., says: A difficulty between a white man and a negro culminated in a riot in which two white men were shot by negroes, one being seriously and the other slightly wounded. The negroes congregated at some distance from town and the white men were shot from ambush.

On the Subject of Tramps.

TOPEKA, Kan., Dec. 23.—Governor Lewelling received a request from the North American Review asking him to write 3,500 word article on "Tramps," to appear with articles on the same subject by Governors Russell of Massachusetts, Waite of Colorado and Flower of New York. Governor Lewelling is out of the city but it is understood he will comply.

Stanton Exonerated.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Secretary Herbert has given out his decision in the case of Commodore Stanton, detached from command of the South Atlantic squadron for saluting Mello in the harbor at Rio. The secretary restores Stanton to duty and assigns him to the command of the North Atlantic squadron. This is regarded as perhaps the choicest station to command among them all.

To Defeat the Wilson Bill.

NEW YORK, Dec. 26.—The Herald makes the following assertion: A large and growing fund to be used in the hope of defeating the Wilson tariff bill is being raised by manufacturers and others whose pecuniary interests are directly involved in tariff legislation.

Pension Arguments.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—Arguments in the application of Judge Long of Michigan for a mandamus to compel the commissioner of pensions to restore Judge Long to his former pension rating, have been concluded in the district supreme court.

All Craft Ordered South.

PERNAMBUCO, Dec. 23.—All craft have been ordered south. The Essex, which has arrived here, has been deserted by her crew.

Report Much Exaggerated.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 23.—The report of the Homestead disaster was exaggerated. Only one man was killed and four injured. The others escaped.

CARLISLE'S REPORT.

A Deficit of Over $28,000,000 at the Close of the Year.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—During the first five months of the present fiscal year, according to the report of Secretary Carlisle, the expenditures of the government have exceeded its receipts to the amount of $29,918,085.66. There has been not only a decrease, but also an increase of expenditures during this period as compared with the corresponding five months of the last fiscal year. The revenues from customs have fallen off $23,589,829.74; from internal taxes, $7,866,667.96, and from miscellaneous receipts, $324,152.39. The expenditures on account of the war department in the execution of contracts made during the last fiscal year have increased $6,162,182.42; on account of the navy department for the same reasons the increase was $1,912,289.31; on account of Indians, $635,978.55, and on account of interest, $69,450.25; but there have been reductions in some other branches of the public service to the amount of $6,352,206, as compared with the corresponding period last year.

The Result of These Changes is that on Dec. 1, 1893, the actual net balance in the treasury, after deducting the bank note 5 per cent redemption fund, outstanding drafts and checks, disbursing officers balances, agency accounts and the gold reserve, was only $11,048,448.25, and of the total amount held $12,347,517.80 was in subsidiary silver and minor coins. It may safely be assured that the worst effects of the recent financial disturbances, and consequent business depression have been realized, and that the condition will be much more favorable hereafter for the collection of an adequate revenue for the support of the government; but it can scarcely be expected that the receipts during the remainder of the fiscal year will exceed the expenditures for the same time to such an extent as to prevent a very considerable deficiency. I have therefore estimated a

Probable Deficiency of $28,000,000

at the close of the year, and if congress concurs in this view of the situation it will be incumbent upon it to make some provision for raising that amount as soon as practicable, by taxation or otherwise. On account of the difficulty of securing such a sum within the time it would be required by the imposition and collection of additional taxes, I recommend that the third section of the act to provide for the resumption of specie payments, approved Jan. 14, 1875, which confers authority upon the secretary of the treasury to issue and sell certain descriptions of United States bonds, be so amended as to authorize him to issue and sell, at not less than par in coin bonds to an a mount not exceeding $200,000,000,

Bearing a Lower Rate

of interest and having a shorter time to run than those now provided for, and that he be permitted to use, from time to time, such part of the proceeds as may be necessary to supply any deficiencies in the public revenue that may occur during the fiscal year 1894 and 1895. The secretary recommends that the bonds be issued in sums of $25 or multiples thereof, and that they bear 3 per cent. He believes they can in this manner all be disposed of at home.

The Minority Report.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The report of the minority members of the ways and means committee on the tariff bill has been submitted to the house. The first part of the report discussing the bill generally was prepared by ex-Speaker Reed. The other members of the minority, Messrs. Burrows, Payne, Dalzell, Hopkins and Gear, prepared the portion of the report dealing with special features.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Three Hundred Miners Entombed In a Burning Colliery In Illinois.

MINONK, Ills., Dec. 22.—At 5 p. m. a fire, which is still burning, in the mine operated by the Chicago and Minonk Coal Mining company, held 300 miners in deadly peril of their lives. All of them made their escape and but few were injured. The man most seriously hurt is George Erbland, who caused the disaster. He is desperately burned and his chance of recovery is very slight.

Republicans Make No Protest.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—County Judge Frank Scales, as ex-officio chairman of the board of election commissioners, has declared John P. Hopkins elected mayor of Chicago. This was done after the official count had been made and Hopkin's plurality found to be 1,290. The Republicans, who have been claiming the election of Swift, because of alleged Democratic irregularities, were given opportunity to present charges but they filed none.

Beer Awards.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—The committee of appeals to which the vexed question of the world's fair beer awards was referred has decided that the first premium should go to the Pabst Brewing company of Milwaukee. It places the Anheuser-Busch company of St. Louis second by one point.

Chicago Election.

CHICAGO, Dec. 20.—The police, or unofficial returns, give Hopkins a plurality of 1,141. The Republicans are looking into a number of charges of fraud, but no decisive steps toward a contest have been taken.

Stevens Makes Reply.

AUGUSTA, Me., Dec. 21.—Ex-Minister to Hawaii Stevens has written a long reply to President Cleveland's message and his criticisms of Stevens' official conduct. The article contains nothing new.

McLean's Christmas Gifts.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 21.—In addition to the donations which it has been the custom of Mr. John R. McLean, proprietor of The Enquirer, to distribute at Christmas, he will this year give $5,000 to the worthy poor of Cincinnati.

GRAND ISLAND, NEB., April 8th, 1892.
Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I had been troubled with HEART DISEASE FOR THE LAST 30 YEARS, and although I was treated by able physicians and tried many remedies, I grew steadily worse until I WAS COMPLETELY PROSTRATED AND CONFINED TO MY BED WITHOUT ANY HOPE OF RECOVERY. I would have very bad sinking spells, when my pulse would stop beating altogether, and it was with the greatest difficulty that my circulation could be started, which would bring me back to consciousness again. While in this condition I tried your NEW HEART CURE, and began to improve from the first, and now I am able to do a good day's work for a man 68 years of age. I give DR. MILES' NEW HEART CURE all the credit for my recovery. It is over six months since I have taken any, although I keep a bottle in the house in case I should need it. I have also used your NERVE AND LIVER PILLS, and think a great deal of them. Z. AVERY.

FOR WOMEN AND HOME.

This well known journal, a union of four leading women's papers, has won its fame because it deals with what really interests the women of America. Fashions from the standpoint of good taste and economy. Fiction of a pure and helpful kind. Music and Art suitable for non-professional tastes. Household hints written by practical women. Suggestions and aids for self-supporting women. It is a paper for women, by women, and its writers are among the most noted authors. Every line is original, every engraving a gem.

It is a paper of to-day without espousing the great questions of religion, politics and temperance, it gives all the news regarding them. It is universally quoted by the press because its views and articles are bright and unique. Send to Springfield, Ohio, for a sample copy. Formerly $1.00, it is now but 50 cents a year. The Crookston Normal School & Business College closed the fall term last Friday. The principal, Mr. Titus gave a short address to the students which was very much appreciated. The work the past term was satisfactory to both students and teachers. The winter term will begin Tuesday January 2, 1894. Don't fail to look into the merits of this school before going elsewhere.

Mr. Sawyer and Mr. Teal sent some teams to the woods on Thursday to work in Bagley's camps.

J. S. Pinney, was up from St. Paul last week interviewing the newspaper boys.

I. I. Hillestad was in from Fosston last week, called on the Tweten jury list but did not get in among the elect.

Chas. Robbecke, mine host of hotel Ogahmah, Thief River Falls, was in the city last week.

Chas. Rapp, a prominent merchant of St. Hilaire was called in on the Tweten jury list but did not get on to the job.

Happy New Year!

That is the wish of the Burlington Route for the many thousand Northwestern people who have traveled over its lines during 1893, and the and the many more thousands who will do so during 1894. Now a word about the development of the Burlington system. In 1880, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Company, the parent Burlington road, operated only 1,760 miles. In that year it acquired 836 miles of the Burlington & Missouri River in Nebraska. Branch lines were at once built to almost all the important towns in Nebraska, and in May, 1892, the road was completed to Denver, Colorado. In 1887, the line was opened to Cheyenne, Wyoming, the center of a large cattle trade. To supply coal for the operation of the western lines, a narrow guage road from Denver to Lyons was purchased, and in 1889 a line was pushed to New Castle, Wyoming, to take advantage of large coal fields there. In 1886, the Chicago, Burlington & Northern was completed, giving a connection with St. Paul and Minneapolis. In 1891, the road reached Deadwood, giving the access to the rich mining regions of the Black Hills and the healing Hot Springs of Dakota. By control of several Missouri railroads the Burlington added St. Louis, Kansas City and St. Joseph as terminal points, and is now engaged in building a bridge across the Mississippi above St. Louis, an another across the Missouri near that city, besides purchasing large terminal grounds. Three gateways are open for traffic from the East—Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis—and from them diverge lines passing through ten different states; Illinois, Wisconsin Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and South Dakota, and reaching every important trade center—St. Paul and Minneapolis on the Northwest. Kansas City and St. Joseph on the Southwest, and Omaha, Deadwood, Cheyenne and Denver on the West. With now 7,000 miles of road in the best possible condition, the Burlington system challenges competition, and assures the public of the same excellent service as in the past. For any information as to tickets, routes and rates, write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Low Rates to the Coast.

The Northern Pacific railroad has just put into effect a series of low round-trip rates to Pacific coast points. These California tickets are good until April 30th, 1894, and are good for stop over points under certain conditions.

These rates will enable those desiring so to do, to spend the winter in Southern California, or to visit the Mid-winter Fair to be held at San Francisco. This latter event will undoubtedly be second only to the World's Fair just closed, and will repay a visit, as it will exhibit the resources and capabilities of California.

St. Paul, Minneapolis & Duluth to Northern Pacific coast points and return $65.50; to San Francisco and return to Missouri river, $80.50 to Los Angeles and return to Missouri river $90.00.

Just received—a fine invoice of California wines for medical purposes at the California wine house. (5-tf)

The following resolution was then passed.

The city council of the City of Crookston doth hereby assess and levy upon and against the several lots and parcels of land below described the respective sum of money set against each lot or parcel. This assessment is to defray the compensation and damages awarded for the taking and injury to private property and costs of improvements on and about to several streets, lots and blocks, as shown by the plat and survey of the same now on file in the office of the city clerk of said city. This levy is not conformably to the report and assessment of commissioners duly appointed to make such assessments, and in proportion to the benefits accruing from such improvements to accrue to the parcels, and not exceeding the benefits to the parcels so assessed.

Done at the meeting of the city council this 23rd day of December, A. D. 1893.

JOHN CROMB,
President of the Council.
A. D. STEPHENS, Mayor.
Attest: E. C. CARRUTH, Clerk.

With many clergymen, public speakers, singers, and actors, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the favorite remedy for hoarseness and all affections of the vocal organs, throat and lungs. Its anodyne and expectorat effects are promptly realized.

Coughing leads to consumption Kemp's Balsam stops the cough at once.

Corduroy Portieres.

Corduroy promises to be a great favorite, both for hangings and for the coverings of divans and chairs. In some of its newest forms it is strikingly handsome, showing figures of a lighter tone upon a ground of the same color, and in even the familiar plain it is both good and desirable. For portieres it is especially to be commended, as it takes rich, deep folds and gives just that sense of warmth and freedom from draft that is to be desired.

Too Much of a Row.

Sir William Fraser tells a good story of Brigham Young and "The Lady of Lyons." Young took his wives to see a performance of Lytton's play at Salt Lake City. When the agony was piled up, he rose, and, followed by his spouses, left the theater, exclaiming, "I won't stand such an infernal row being made about one woman!"—Argonaut.
